IMPORTANT TESTIMONY
IN FAVOUR OF THE
SPECIAL DEVON TRICYCLE.

Seaton, September 27, 1882.

SIR,—Having had a good trial of the SPECIAL DEVON TRICYCLE, over very rough and very hilly roads, I must tell you that I am much pleased with it. It is an easy one to ride, and the swing frame is a wonderful assistance for hills. It is very strong and comfortable.—Yours faithfully,

A. H. TRAHERNE.

The Manager, Exeter B. and C. Co.

I may add that, being lame, I cannot get any exercise by walking; but the exercise I get on the machine has not only restored my health, but I am able to go out into the country when and where I like.—A. H. T.

THE ARMY and NAVY PENSIONERS' EMPLOYMENT SOCIETY supplies Men of good character as Clerks, Time or Gate Keepers, Messengers, Porters, Caretakers, and Domestic Servants.—Apply, personally or by letter, to Secretary, No. 44 Charing Cross. Branches in Manchester, Glasgow, and Dublin. No fees.

ALL BUT NEW OFFICERS' UNIFORMS, for the Army, Navy, Militia, and Yeomanry, may be obtained of LEWIS MOSES, 65 (late 464), New Oxford Street, W.C., at one-fourth their original cost; or on hire. Swords, cloaks, belts, sashes, saddles, &c. for nearly every regiment in her Majesty's Service. Uniforms and apparel purchased.

MILITARY EDUCATION, GERMANY.—Colonel BERDOE WILKINSON, late R.E., formerly in charge of the Ordnance Survey in Ireland, and Lieutenant-Colonel WILKINSON SHAW, M.A. (Staff College), late Garrison-Instructor at Aldershot, prepare Candidates for Sandhurst and Woolwich, and for Line Commissions through the Militia.

University Candidates for Sandhurst are received as non-resident pupils. In this competition two candidates (the only ones sent up) have passed into Sandhurst during the past year; Mr. W. A. Grant taking fourth place in July, and Mr. G. Barton-Smith second place in December.

In addition to the University candidate, two other pupils passed on the general list at the recent Sandhurst Examination,—Mr. C. D. Radcliffe (tenth place) and Mr. H. Marwood.

Mr. B. Smith, on this occasion, made the highest score in Mathematics, and Mr. Radcliffe highest marks in German, as well as second highest in Freehand Drawing, out of 440 candidates up for Examination.

MILITIA COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION.

The standard originally fixed for this Examination having been much raised in September, 1881, no results previously gained should be taken into account in considering the successes obtained by Militia pupils. Since the date named, there have been three competitions. At these trials Colonel WILKINSON and Lieutenant-Colonel SHAW have secured 24 COMMISSIONS for their pupils, although they have only prepared and sent up a very limited number for Examination. The names of all successful pupils have already been published.

Also, at the October Literary Examination, Lieut. C. J. Stanton took 4th place on the list.

The results obtained at other Examinations bring the general score up to FORTY-EIGHT SUCCESSES, achieved by pupils in the last 16 months; during that period the number of pupils on the strength of the establishment, resident and non-resident, has always been limited to 60.—Address, DARMSTADT, GERMANY.

MILITIA COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION ONLY.—A Few Candidates desiring special individual attention are Prepared by Major COWPER, assisted by an Officer of equal experience, who has taken high honours in Fortification, Surveying, &c. At the last Four Examinations (the average number sent up for each being between 3 and 4), Pupils passed at their first trial 1st, 10th, 21st, 30th, 33rd, 34th, and 37th on the List.—10 Clifton Villas, Maida Hill, London, W.

SANDHURST, WOOLWICH, C. S., MILITIA, &c.—The Rev. A. PRITCHARD, M.A. Oxon., assisted by his Brother, Professor PRITCHARD (late R.M. Academy, Woolwich), and a large Staff of resident Assistant-Tutors, PREPARES for any of the above.

The next Term will commence Jaunary 3, 1883.

MILITARY COMPETITIVE for MILITIA OFFICERS.—The Rev. A. PRITCHARD, who is assisted by a retired Field Officer of 8 years' experience as a Garrison Instructor, has, during the year 1882, gained five Commissions with the 14 Candidates who went up from him.

LIEUTENANTS of MILITIA desirous of competing for Line Commissions can be received by the Rev. WALTER BAKER, M.A., at Batcombe Rectory, Evercreech, Bath. They will be thoroughly prepared in all Military Subjects by Major Dickens (late 11th Foot), Staff-College Graduate, formerly Assistant Royal Engineer, S.E. District, and Colonel Palmer, late R.A., formerly Instructor at the R.M.A., Woolwich, and two of whose pupils obtained special mention from the Examiners at the last September Examination.

Great individual attention is given, as few pupils are taken, and each comes under actual vivâ voce instruction for 6½ hours a day. Since the introduction of the Military Competitive, out of Thirty-nine Lieutenants of Militia sent up, Twenty-four have been successful, several taking high places in the list. There are opportunities for healthy country amusements and games, a cricket and football ground, lawn-tennis courts (grass and asphalte), a private billiard-room, &c., and in all other respects a liberal and gentleman's establishment is kept.

A Large Staff of Experienced Tutors, all resident, assist in preparing for the Qualifying Examinations, and for the Sandhurst and Woolwich Competitions.

2/- TEA OF EXTRAORDINARY QUALITY,

As Supplied to Dukes, Earls, Barons, and the County Families of England.

THE unprecedented depression in the Tea Market now enables COOPER COOPER and CO. to offer such value in Tea as would, a few years ago, have been considered simply impossible, but is now a realised fact, for at

TWO SHILLINGS

A POUND,

COOPER COOPER and CO. are able to supply Tea of amazing strength and exquisite quality, while the choice kinds at Three Shillings a pound, which are coming to hand in lessening quantities year by year, COOPER COOPER and CO. have the greatest difficulty, after ransacking the markets of China and India, in procuring in sufficient quantities for their consumption. These choice and selected Teas COOPER COOPER and CO. have the honour to supply to many Foreign Princes, Potentates, Ambassadors, &c.

THE enormous success—without competitors and with no rivals—which has attended the sale of COOPER COOPER and CO.'s Teas is perhaps unparalleled in the annals of this or any other trade, and can only be accounted for by the way in which their business has been conducted, which has gained the patronage of all classes. COOPER COOPER and CO. number among their customers Princes, Dukes, Earls, Barons—in fact, a large per-centage of the entire Peerage—Church dignitaries of every grade, and ministers of all denominations, County Families from every county in Great Britain, and from all classes of the community. COOPER COOPER and CO. are also shipping their Teas every day to foreign parts. Paris would appear to draw its supplies from COOPER COOPER and CO.'s Stores, and in almost every large city, and especially in the seaport towns of Europe, Asia, Africa, and America—in fact, to the very ends of the earth—COOPER COOPER and CO.'s Teas and COOPER COOPER and CO.'s name are known.

COOPER COOPER and CO. have their own Agents in China and India, and are consequently able to sell their Tea at a price which is actually under that which wholesale merchants, brokers, &c., charge to ordinary dealers. They are enabled to do this as they have not the expense of travellers, and no bad debts to provide for, their terms being strictly for nett cash before delivery. They also save an immense amount by keeping no horses and vans—many houses having from 20 to 100 horses, vans, and two men to each, to deliver, sometimes, half-a-pound of tea miles and miles away, this overwhelming expense having all to come out of the quality of the Tea.

COOPER COOPER and CO. have, in fact, no expense but indispensable rent and labour, which in consequence of still-increasing business, amount only to a fraction on the price of the Tea they sell.

COOPER COOPER and CO. may mention that they include among the regular buyers of their Tea a great many London Tea Brokers, from the simple fact that it can be purchased cheaper and better from them than from the importers themselves.

COOPER COOPER and CO. sell their Teas for ready money only. They have thus no provision to make for bad or doubtful debts.

AND now a word about this year's crop. It is hardly satisfactory on the whole, but some of the choice crops secured by COOPER COOPER and CO. are simply delicious, COOPER COOPER and CO. are still enabled to sell the very best at Three Shillings a pound, and it is veritably a marvel of goodness—a "thing of beauty" and "a joy for ever." But the most astonishing thing of modern times is the Tea at Two Shillings a pound which COOPER COOPER and CO. are now selling. The rich and wealthy buy this Tea. Ladies drink it in their boudoirs and at their early drums, and, as one of our country patrons writes, "It is lovely."

COOPER COOPER and CO. may add that Indian Tea is becoming day by day a greater favourite among the best judges, and this year's crop has been prepared with greater care than ever. It is strong, pungent, with most agreeable flavour, and the better it is known, the more it will be liked. The Tea is 3s a lb., for the best.

COOPER COOPER and CO. charge threepence a package (of any size) for delivering their Teas at any of the Railway Stations in London, or any place within the limits of the London Parcels' Delivery Co., thus putting all on an equality; those who send for their tea, and those who require it sent.

COOPER COOPER and CO. do not pay railway carriage, but are willing to compound for the same on receiving the sum of 6d. in addition to the price of the Tea, to any Railway Station in England, on quantities of the value of £2 and upwards. Families residing in the country can thus, by clubbing together, have their Tea sent almost carriage free, as well as save about 9d a lb. in the cost.

EGYPTIAN NOTES.

(FROM AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Cairo, March 19, 1883.

	Total Force.	Sick List.	Proportion per cent.
Artillery, Cairo	671	40	5·9
Cavalry ,,	554	45	8·1
Engineers ,,	212	10	4·7
1st Brigade	2,311	153	6·6
2nd do.	2,885	196	6·8
Sundries	657	40	6·1
	7,290	484	6·6
Alexandria	1,768	114	6·5
Ismailia	105	10	9·5
	9,163	608	6·6
Officers	293	11	3·8
Men	8,870	597	6·8
	9,163	608	6·6
Horses	1,517	68	4·5
Mules	706	6	0·9
	2,223	74	3·3

Name and Regiment.	Illness.	Admitted.
Surg. Osburne, A.M.D.	Enteric Fever	Feb. 1 ,,
Capt. Mortimer, A.P.D.	Pleuro-Pneumonia	Feb. 5 ,,
Major Darley, S. Staffordshire	Dislocation	Feb. 16 ,,
Major Sinclair, S. Staffordshire	Ulcer	Mar. 5 ,,
Major Timbrell, A.P.D.	Bronchitis	Mar. 15 ,,
Rev. D. Horman, A.C.D.	(Illness not stated)	Mar. 17 ,,

Lieutenant A. Alison, Rifle Brigade, has arrived in Egypt, and is temporarily attached to the Staff of the Lieutenant-General Commanding as Acting Orderly Officer.

Passages to England are provided for the following:—Captain Allsopp, N-2, R.A., invalided; Captain Griffiths, A.P.D., invalided; Lieutenant Enthoven, C-3, R.A., invalided; Captain Kelly, Royal Sussex Regiment, in charge of invalids; Lieutenant Burton, R.E.; and Lieutenant Haynes, R.E. These officers will proceed per ss. Nepaul, which will take 123 invalided men, the 21st Company, Royal Engineers, consisting of five officers, 250 men, and five horses, and the South Staffordshire Regiment.

Lieutenant S. D. Cleeve, R.E., will not embark with the 21st Company, Royal Engineers, his services being required in Egypt.

The following ungallant but necessary paragraph appears in General Orders:—"To prevent misunderstanding, it must be distinctly understood that the wives and families of officers returning to England or proceeding elsewhere are not entitled to passages, and it is more than probable that there will not be spare accommodation for them on board transport ships. When ordered to embark, married officers must be prepared to make private arrangements for the embarkation of their wives by ordinary steamers."

The number of troops in Egypt at present exceeds 9,000 men, but in the course of a few weeks will be reduced to 6,500. That number will, perhaps, be more than sufficient for all that Egypt requires, and, as it is Egypt that has to pay the piper, it may be hoped that still further reductions are in contemplation. But, however that may be, it is clearly unnecessary, and therefore unjust, that she should be required to pay for the luxury of one General per thousand men. Your readers may possibly have heard of the untoward accident which happened in Washington shortly after the American Civil War, when a pistol accidentally discharged in the street wounded seventeen Generals of brigade and five Generals of division—"and," added the reporter, "it wasn't a good day for Generals either." Well, in Cairo we are fast approaching a similar state of things. In the Army of occupation alone we have, first, the General in command; we have General Dormer, as chief of the Staff; we have General Earle, in command of the 1st Brigade, which will shortly be reduced to one battalion, the Royal Sussex; we have General Graham, who, when the 75th have left, will have a brigade of three battalions, 42nd, 60th, and 79th; we have General Harman, with one battalion of Infantry, and General Arbuthnot, with one battalion of Cavalry. I leave out of count the Surgeon-General, with an army of doctors at the rate of one for every seven sick, as well as the Generals of the Church Militant. Let it be remembered that even civilly Egypt has always been over-Generalled. We have had Controllers-General, Directors-General, Inspectors-General, Accountants-General, and Consuls-General without number, until the title has become unpopular, and familiarity has bred contempt. It becomes a relief to meet a subaltern, while a full private is greeted with enthusiasm.

The Egyptian Army has had two field-days.

On Saturday the British officers were invited to dinner by Sir George Elliot. The proceedings were solely of a convivial nature, and the eloquent host was with difficulty restrained from proposing the Queen's health in a set speech, which, however, eventually found delivery, in reply to a toast in honour of himself.

On Monday, the Egyptian Artillery, under Colonel Duncan, was paraded before the Khedive and the Sirdaar Evelyn Wood, the former with a carelessness which his Highness's Chief of the Staff should have prevented, appearing in the eternal light overcoat, which has witnessed so many oaths of fidelity and rebellions. Appearances go for much in the East, and if his Highness the Commander-in-Chief cannot be induced to wear his uniform, he cannot expect to find it much respected by his men. The Artillery did their work admirably, dismounting their guns in 20 seconds,—a performance which, after one month's drill, reflects equal credit on the men and their English officers.

It is a little curious to hear the words of command given in Turkish,—a language not more foreign to the men than to the officers.

It was expected at Alexandria, when the mail left for England, that Brigadier-General Arbuthnot, now his brigade has gone, would be ordered to Alexandria to relieve Major-General Harman, who is proceeding home. There will still be a large Staff. Sir A. Alison was to have been moved to Ramleh from Cairo the day the mail left, for the benefit of the sea air. Major-General Dormer had returned from his trip up the Nile. Major-General Earle was still in the Palace at the Abbassiyeh. Sir G. Graham was looking after his diminished brigade at Cairo. These officers represent large Staffs and small charges. As for the Egyptian Army, one may say that Sir E. Wood has done marvels. The Gendarmerie and Police, under Baker Pasha, are fast assuming form and substance. When all these three arms are complete, the question for the Khedive will arise, "What will he do with them?" to be preceded by the more important one to which every one in Egypt looks with hope or fear, "When will the occupation be at an end?" i.e., "When will the troops go?"

THE BRIGHTON REVIEW AND SHAM FIGHT.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

At London Bridge Station on Monday morning, at 4 o'clock, a plain intimation of the coming Review was given by a bugler sounding a call so execrably that I thought nothing less than five years' penal servitude would be an adequate punishment for his atrocity. I would rather not know what regiment has the advantage of that bugler's services. After that bugle-call sleep was impossible, and the station was soon alive and stirring. Railway officials were at their posts, ready to answer any number of questions, and Staff officers were prepared to send off any number of corps or detachments. Contingents of various regiments, headed by silent bands, marched in, and were despatched at their appointed times, or even before them. Two new words have sprung into use in connection with these operations; I mean "entraining" and "detraining." They may be convenient, but they are inexcusable barbarisms, and I decline to use them. Besides the parties that marched in, several individuals walked in, generally wearing offensive overcoats, and some of them carrying jars or other unwarlike impedimenta. The trains ran down to Brighton without any delays, and rapidly deposited their chilled occupants, and then, like Oliver Twist, wanted more. The air was, to put it mildly, bracing, and the Volunteers were glad to get even the exercise of marching to the rendezvous of their respective Brigades. Then there was a pause, during which men piled arms and drank hot coffee, &c., and some snow fell. Soon after 8, bugles sounded, corps fell in, and, when the requisite preparations were made, the march to the Downs began. The Artillery arrived on the race-course and were formed up when the Infantry began to appear, about 10 a.m. Each battalion in succession, as it left the road and marched towards the course, formed companies to the front, closed to quarter-column on the march, and took up its assigned position in the mass of quarter-columns facing towards the Grand Stand. Even in these simple operations there were some points that seem to call for remarks. Nearly all the bands straggled, or rather tailed out, to an unconscionable length. One battalion, a composite one, was headed by three bands, that occupied more space than the battalion they preceded. As soon as one particular battalion began to close to quarter-column, the commander of the next ordered his battalion to double. The prolonged run that resulted was, of course, unnecessary, and must have been hard on men who had just completed the long and steep ascent from the town. But such strictures do not apply to all, for I observed that the Croydon Volunteers, now styled the 1st Volunteer Battalion of the Queen's Royal West Surrey Regiment, formed companies, closed, and marched on compactly, and with distances correctly kept. Other corps may have done as well, but I did not notice them. General satisfaction was felt when it was known that H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief would be present, and when he appeared, looking remarkably well and in good spirits, he was cordially cheered by the spectators. After a brief inspection of the Volunteers as they stood in massed columns, the Duke rode towards the flag-staff, opposite the Grand Stand, and took his position under the Royal Standard at 20 minutes to 12, when the march-past at once began. During the passing of the many batteries and battalions, though this occupied nearly an hour, his attention never flagged, nor did his interest abate. His observant and practised eyes closely scanned the passing lines, and evidently noticed the minutest details. While he frequently pointed out to the attendant General Officers the errors and irregularities he noticed in their respective divisions as they passed, he plainly expressed his approval, whenever any corps seemed to deserve it. He found fault with the saluting of many of the mounted officers, and not without cause, for some were almost grotesque in their stiffness, and a few even excruciating in their attitudes. He also noticed the irregular way in which many of the company officers carried their swords. In describing the march-past, I think it unnecessary to recapitulate the details, which have been fully given in the daily papers. It may suffice here to say that the various corps and their numbers, and the staff of divisions and brigades, were almost exactly those announced as about to take part in the day's work. But there were a few exceptions, which will be noticed incidentally. The band of the Hants Artillery led the way, followed by General Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and the Staff of the Southern District. Next came Major-General Smyth, R.A., and the other umpires; and then Major-General Higginson, commanding the attacking force, and his staff. The Light Cavalry Troop of the Honourable Artillery then passed, followed by the field battery of the same corps, the 3rd Kent, 1st Hants, 1st Sussex, 2nd Middlesex, and 3rd Middlesex. The first of these Artillery corps had nine-pounders, and the other five had heavy breech-loading guns, 40-pounders and 20-pounders, drawn by large cart-horses. All these corps looked and moved fairly, except the 3rd Middlesex, who are disfigured by wearing busbies of a dirty grey fur. The three Engineer corps—Middlesex, London, and Tower Hamlets—were of good stature and marched well. It is difficult, and perhaps impossible, without seeming partial or invidious, to particularise the Infantry corps, that, in my opinion, passed the ordeal most satisfactorily. Yet I cannot omit mentioning a few. A company of the Inns of Court Volunteers, forming, with the Civil Service, the 1st Battalion of the 1st Brigade 1st Division, were as remarkable for their tall, athletic figures, as for their bright, intelligent faces. The 22nd Middlesex marched past evenly and well, and were spoken of with marked approval by the Duke. This regiment, it is evident, is carefully commanded, and minor details receive due attention. Yet I do not see why they should be called "Rangers." It was scarcely possible for the London Scottish to march better, or to look better in so dull a uniform. They were in uniform, and this could not be strictly said of many other battalions, with whom diversity was the rule rather than the exception. As we may notice spots on the sun, I may mention two imperfections among the Scottish. A man in one of the rear companies, from the laudable determination not to stoop, was not satisfied with holding himself erect, for he bent his body backwards till he reminded me of the peculiar spinal curvature that is described as a symptom of poisoning by strychnine. The other sun-spot was a man that I saw without his water-bottle. The 3rd Hants (Portsmouth) Regiment were less distinguished by their scarlet uniform, with yellow facings (which they alone wore), than by their superior height and splendid physique. They looked, and marched, too, like an infantry regiment of the stamp that used to win our battles, whenever victory was possible, rather than like one of those immature "Line battalions" which have not been quite so successful in the field. I forgot to mention before that each brigade was preceded by its bands massed together, and playing very creditably, considering that they cannot have had any opportunity for previous practice. All these bands played in quicker time than that prescribed in the drill-book, namely, 116 paces to the minute, their rate being from 120 to 125 per minute. This acceleration suited the men, for the day was cold, and they were inclined to step fast and vigorously. When the bands were ordered not to play so fast, the only result was a dragging and uneven time, and a heavier gait, without any advantage in accuracy of movement or dressing. The quickest rate of marching that can be maintained without distress is the most suitable for war. If our Infantry generally were like the 3rd Hants or the London Scottish, the tendency to a further acceleration would be irresistible. I noticed in the course of the day some very well turned-out regiments. Foremost among these I may name the Artists. This battalion, though it did not acquit itself particularly well in the march-past, is composed of a well set-up and most soldierlike body of men, who evidently take a pride in maintaining the character of the regiment. The 23rd Middlesex, under Lieutenant-Colonel Routledge, seems to improve, as it certainly ought to do, seeing how thoroughly its popular Colonel throws himself into the work of command. When he took over charge of the London and Westminster, the regiment was in the worst possible condition, and by slow degrees it is becoming as soldierlike as it would be possible for a Volunteer battalion to be. The 4th Middlesex, though wearing a very ugly uniform, is evidently well in hand. This regiment possesses an exceptionally able and popular "Chief" in Lieutenant-Colonel Somers Lewis, an ex-Adjutant of Marines, who has done much to pull it together, and well deserves the support of his officers. The 10th Middlesex, under Colonel Blackburne Tew, have also improved greatly, and appear to have in the ranks a better class of men than formerly. There is decidedly also some improvement in the 2nd London. The 17th Middlesex, under Lieutenant-Colonel Brown, always turns out well, and they certainly looked particularly businesslike on Monday. One Surrey corps—the 8th, now the 4th Volunteer Battalion, Queen's Own Royal West Kent Regiment—(ye gods, what a mouthful!) deserves a special word of praise. I never saw it to such advantage as on Monday. There was one regiment which everybody missed,—I allude, of course, to the Bloomsbury Rifles. It is to be regretted that Colonel Smith Richards' battalion did not take part in the Review, for it always does well, and there is no corps in London which more richly deserves the high reputation it has earned for itself. The London Rifle Brigade, too, were conspicuous by their absence; but they were performing what was doubtless more useful work elsewhere, having been taken down by Lord Edward Pelham Clinton for four days' garrison duty at Portsmouth. The appearance of the Volunteers assembled on Monday showed an indisputable improvement, as compared with former similar occasions; yet much remains to be done. In several battalions great-coats were carried by some of the men only, and were not properly folded, but rather made into bundles fastened by straps, and placed at all heights on the wearer's backs. Great-coats should be carried by all the men in a battalion, or by none; and the folding and position should be strictly regulated. Many of the officers seem quite unconscious of the changes which, in the course of years, have taken place in their figures; and they complacently, if not comfortably, continue to wear tunics which have not grown with that growth which is evident to the eyes of others, and lower garments the excessive tightness of which is distressing and even alarming to behold. The efficiency of most of the infantry battalions was marred by the presence of men who were very short, very slight, very fat, or very old and stooping. These men can get through such a day's work as that of last Monday, but that they could stand the strain of even a week's campaign is highly improbable. The result of strictly adhering to a higher standard than that prescribed by the regulations is evident in the London Scottish, London Irish, and some other regiments. The various corps, after passing the saluting-point, marched on to the positions they were to occupy, before commencing the operations of mimic war. The signal-gun was fired about 3 p.m., and an Artillery fight at long ranges was kept up for about a quarter of an hour. The advance of the first and second divisions from Falmer, under General Higginson, and the supposed discomfiture of the defending force (third division), under General Newdigate, have been described with much minuteness and considerable variations in the daily papers, and few of your readers would care to have them repeated here. I shall, therefore, only make a few remarks on the movements which came under my own observation. As the first division moved across the valley between Falmer and Newmarket Hills, its formations were past comprehension. At one time, there were actually eleven consecutive lines of men in more or less extended order, and nearly all of them advancing. But they were by no means parallel, and kept on crossing and intersecting each other in succession. Entire companies were to be seen lying down, or worse, standing, a few yards before or behind some feature of the ground which would have afforded good cover from the fire of artillery and small arms, if the men had been taught to take advantage of it. The plain truth is that most Volunteer regiments know little or nothing about skirmishing. Company and battalion drill may be learned in barrack-squares or on drill grounds of small extent, and men are often taught to extend or close in such places in rather funereal style. But quick and useful skirmishing requires a large space on which it can be taught, and great variety of ground on which it can be practised. Hence it is that our Volunteers generally, having neither the requisite space to learn, nor the requisite varieties of ground to practise, are unable to acquire what I may call the spirit of skirmishing. Any one looking at these several lines of men advancing anyhow or halted, last Monday, might have seen how completely and uselessly they were exposed. When the battle was over, some Artillery and Infantry on the left of the attacking force seem to have been forgotten, for the guns continued to fire from Falmer when most of the force was formed up for its march back to Brighton. The ground was kept during the day by a detachment of that fine regiment, the 4th Dragoon Guards, who had as much tact and patience as if they belonged to the Metropolitan Police. These splendid troopers show no traces of their late war services, except the medals which most of them wear. A smart troop of the Middlesex Yeomanry Cavalry was present, and was useful in many ways; but, in consequence of some question about the relative rank of their regiment, these neatly-dressed Hussars did not march past. Soon after twelve, a large balloon, not fully inflated, was seen to rise very slowly from the Kemp Town gas-works. Attached to it, and reaching nearly round it, was a broad white band bearing in black letters the words "Illustrated London News." The balloon was held down by a strong rope, and was towed slowly in a northerly direction by a party of the Brighton Naval Volunteers. As the wind was adverse at first, this operation was tedious, but the vicinity of the mimic fight was reached in ample time. The car had only two occupants, one of whom was the experienced draughtsman, Mr. Simpson. After many alternate risings and fallings, and one alarming bump against the ground, the artist and his companion left the car, and the balloon was soon emptied. Perhaps Mr. Simpson got a much clearer conception of the movements from aloft than we on the ground could obtain; if not, his ascent was hardly worth the trouble. The balloon used was that in which Colonel Burnaby crossed the Channel, and which is now known as "The Colonel." Had it been placed at the disposal of General Newdigate, he would have been at once aware of all the dispositions of the attacking force. This might have given him such an advantage, that his defence must have been considered successful, and the action would have had a different result from what had been prearranged. The arrangements for the return journey were not nearly so satisfactory as those for taking the Volunteers to Brighton. Some of the trains took four hours in getting back to London Bridge.

(FROM AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Easter Monday was only partially observed as a holiday by the troops; in several regiments, spring drills, fatigues, and preliminary musketry training went on as usual. About 150 of the 11th Middlesex R.V. left on Monday evening for town, having to resume business the following morning. Those who remained went out with the 84th Regiment on Tuesday morning, for a field day, and returned by rail to London in the afternoon. Four officers and 40 non-commissioned officers and men of the 2nd Battalion 18th Royal Irish Regiment arrived from Shorncliffe on Thursday, and are quartered in the Centre Infantry Barracks, to await the arrival of the battalion from Malta. The annual musketry course of the 1st Battalion Grenadier Guards, now at Aldershot, is being carried out with all dispatch, to enable the battalion to speedily return to London. It was rumoured during the week that a regiment of infantry from the 1st Brigade would shortly proceed to London, there to be stationed. As yet, there has been no official intimation of such a move. A belief exists in the 87th that the regiment will leave Aldershot for another station early next month. This is problematical. A party of three officers, 60 non-commissioned officers and men, and 63 horses of the Commissariat and Transport Corps proceeded by march route to Woolwich on Monday, and returned yesterday (Friday), with 44 waggons from the Royal Arsenal. It is stated that four regiments of Irish Militia will train at the camp during the summer months, probably a larger number, as some 15 regiments are expected to be brought over for this purpose. On Saturday night last, a fire broke out in No. 3, Officers' hut, G Lines, South Camp, in the occupation of the 85th Shropshire Light Infantry. The hut, which contained much private property, was completely consumed, and two valuable dogs in the building at the time burned to death. Although the night was perfectly calm, for a wonder, it was only by great exertion that the adjoining buildings, including the Officers' Mess, were saved from destruction. No fault can be found with the Camp firemen, or the way in which they are handled by their new superintendent. They were on the spot with their engines without delay, and worked zealously; but to an impartial observer there seems to be something radically wrong, either with the fire-engines (more correctly, water-engines), or in the system of supplying water for fire-extinguishing purposes. If this be not remedied, a great disaster may occur here at any time, and more than dogs be roasted to death. The North and South Camps, built of wood, are admirably adapted for general conflagration, more especially since it has become the practice to crowd up around the quarters, particularly in the married cantonments, shanties, outhouses, and stockades and fencing of all kinds, making the Camp a huge collection of tinder-boxes, among which, once let a fire get headway, with a strong gale on, the fire brigade, with their obsolete appliances, would be utterly powerless, and the fire-screens as useful as if made of cardboard. On Thursday morning, at 11, the Division—4,000 officers and men, 900 horses, and 40 guns—paraded in review order on Central Plateau, Eelmoor Hill, facing east, to witness the presentation, by Sir Daniel Lysons, of medals for the Egyptian Campaign to upwards of 1,000 officers and men of the 84th and 87th Regiments, Depôt 19th Hussars, and Military Mounted Police Corps. The officers and men to receive the medals were formed in front of their respective corps, those of mounted corps dismounted. After being inspected, they filed past the General Commanding, from whom they received their medals. The medals were handed to Sir Daniel in the rotation in which the recipients approached. Each man, after receiving his medal, moved back to his place in the general line. Means were provided for attaching the medals to the tunics as the men returned to the ranks. This interesting ceremony having been concluded, Sir Daniel inspected the whole parade, after which the troops formed up and marched past, returning to their quarters about 1.30 p.m. Lieutenants Cullinan, Garraway, and Morris, 2nd Battalion 18th, have been ordered to Aldershot, and will be attached to a regiment in the 2nd Brigade until the arrival of the battalion. On July 11 last, Serjeant G. Shephard, R.H.A., was tried by general court-martial at Aldershot for having, during the previous month, while stationed at Canterbury, endeavoured to persuade men of his battery to mutiny, by advising them not to attend a foot parade ordered by his commanding officer. The court found the prisoner guilty, and he was sentenced to be reduced to the ranks, and imprisoned, with hard labour, for two years. Her gracious Majesty the Queen has been pleased to now remit the remainder of the sentence, because of the man's previous good character, the excellent service rendered at Kassassin by the division of the battery to which he belonged, and the strong recommendation of his late commanding officer. Gunner Shephard was released from the Aldershot Military Prison, and has rejoined his battery, at St. John's Wood. A Committee will shortly assemble to go into the whole question of Army transport, and report thereon. The members of this Committee have not yet been appointed. It is announced that the Officers' Divisional Dramatic Club, under the patronage of General Sir Daniel Lysons, K.C.B., will give two performances of the plays "Chiselling" and "Partners for Life," at the Officers' Club, on the 10th and 11th prox., during the steeple-chase week. The examination of the officers attending the Army Veterinary School will take place to-day (Saturday). Much indignation has been aroused at Aldershot amongst all ranks by the recent conduct of the Hants Constabulary, in handcuffing together a serjeant, a corporal, and a private of the 84th Regiment, and marching them through the public streets to the railway station, en route to Winchester, though a cab had been offered by the regimental authorities to convey them, which was refused by the civil police. The matter concerning which these three men find themselves so treated is a very trivial affair in itself, being simply a question of whether a certain soldier of the 84th was or was not in a public-house at a certain hour on a certain night. The rural police swear that he was; the serjeant (who was commander of the guard on the night in question) swears that he was not, and is supported by his men. The regimental authorities are naturally incensed that men should be thus degraded who are presumably innocent until they are found guilty; not to mention the most objectionable proceeding, to say the least of it, of handcuffing together, as if convicted felons, soldiers of different grades of rank.

Obituary.

Rear-Admiral William Horton, C.B., died at Livermore Park, Bury St. Edmund's, on the 22nd inst., aged 62 years. He served on board the Talbot at the bombardment of St. Jean d'Acre in Nov., 1840; and while lieut.-com. of the Ardent was promoted for his services in the Azoff expedition, in 1855; and was made a Knight of the Legion of Honour, and received the Order of the Medjidie of the 5th Class, the Crimean and Turkish medals, and Azoff clasp. He obtained his first commission as sub-lieut. in Dec., 1839; was promoted to lieut. in May, 1842; com. in Aug., 1855; capt., April, 1862; retired capt., April, 1870; and rear-admiral, Dec., 1877. He was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath in June, 1877.

LANCE RANK.

SIR,—I am glad to be able to supplement Mr. J. R. MacDonnell's very able and interesting letter in your last number by a quotation from a work much older than those he refers to. In "The Compleat Body of the Art Military," by Richard Elton, Lieutenant-Colonel, published in 1668, p. 178, is given the "Duty of a Lanspassadoe.—His duty is concerned, in the absence of his Corporal, to officiate in all things belonging unto his place, and is at all times to be an assistant unto him, for his ease and help-mate upon all occasions, for the better managing of his place; and many times they are Rounders and Sentinel Perdues in time of great necessity. The Duty of a Corporal.—The Corporals of a company are not tyed to a set number, but to be ordered according to the several strengths and divisions of the same, for each to take his charge and care of every Squadron thereof. And unto each of them there is a Lanspassadoe for an assistant; for their Rule of Dignity, I conceive, it makes not much more matter than to make them the right-hand File leader in every particular division." In the above extract, I have followed carefully the quaint spelling and diction of this curious work, a copy of which I am fortunate enough to possess. The "Lanspassadoe" is not alluded to in it in any other capacity than that of assistant to a corporal, from which it is evident that the rank of lance-serjeant is of much more recent date. This curious and obsolete term "Lanspassadoe" forms the connecting-link between the original Italian and the French corruption, both given by Mr. MacDonnell. I can see in the office no resemblance to the German "Gefreiter" or the modern "Freiwilliger."—I am, &c.,

Roken, Sunderland, March 28. ARTHUR ROBSON.

THE COLOUR OF ARMY UNIFORM.

The Report of the Colour Committee appointed by the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief to consider and report what colour suitable for military uniform is least conspicuous, has been published as a Parliamentary paper. The following is the Report of the Committee :—"On the termination of the experiments by the scientific members of the Committee, and on the rendering of their report, the Committee desire to lay before the Secretary of State the conclusion to which they have come, after careful consideration of that report. In accordance with the instructions of H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, at the first meeting of the Committee, Profs. Abel and Stokes were consulted on the best means of carrying out the scientific inquiry as to the comparative visibility of different colours suitable for military uniform in the field. A detailed account of these experiments will be found in their report, which is submitted herewith. It may be briefly stated that a series of experiments were carried out, under varying conditions of weather, atmosphere, surroundings, and background,—the object being to make them as exhaustive as possible. Various members of the Committee were present during these experiments, which were under the immediate superintendence of Professors Abel and Stokes. The result was to eliminate all the colours at present used in the dress of the Army, and the glaring conspicuousness of white and scarlet was at once evident. On the other hand, the neutral colours, more particularly the Indian 'khakees' and certain Volunteer greys, were indistinct even at short distances, and in comparison with the Army colours all but invisible at long ranges. The question was in the end narrowed down to a shade of gray, which, besides its character of invisibility, stands exposure to rain and sun without fading. The Committee recommend that this gray (now worn by the 3rd Devon Volunteers) should be adopted as the service dress of the Army. As it would, however, be unadvisable to break entirely with the traditions attached to the red uniform of the British Army, the Committee recommend that red or scarlet (and blue or green for corps wearing those colours) should be retained for full dress; but that on all other occasions the gray should take the place of the present undress. By this arrangement, the Committee think the advantages, as regards recruiting, to be gained from an attractive uniform will be retained, while at the same time men and officers will become familiar with a colour which, there can be no question, is the best for active service. The Committee consider that the great-coats and trousers should be of this gray colour, and that a gray helmet-cover should also be issued. Intimately connected with the question of the colour of the uniform is that of pipeclayed belts and white haversacks. White, under all but very exceptional circumstances, is the most conspicuous colour of all, and it would avail little to substitute gray for scarlet, if the white accoutrements are retained. By the use of an umber colouring (of a similar nature to pipeclay), the belts may be made nearly invisible at a distance, and its employment permits of their colour being changed at will. This colouring, as prepared by Professor Abel, has been practically tried, and found to answer remarkably well. The Committee, therefore, recommend its general adoption throughout the Army, the umber belts to be worn at all times on active service. The haversack, instead of being of a white material, should be of the same colour as the belts. No practical test was made as to the conspicuousness of the shining metal portions of the soldier's uniform and accoutrements, but it is evident that in the sunlight these would attract the eye, and so weaken the advantages gained by the use of the gray uniform and brown belts. The Committee, therefore, recommend that all ornaments, buttons, &c., of the gray uniform should be bronze, and not polished; and that on active service a brown lacquer should be applied to the bayonets, metal scabbards, and all other bright portions of the accoutrements.

The report of experiments by the scientific members of the Committee is added, and an appendix giving details of the experiments.

SPECTACLES v. BLINDNESS.—"Spectacles can only be perfectly adjusted by those having a thorough knowledge of the anatomy of the eye, combined with optical experience."—We have the highest medical authorities confirmed by daily experience, that imperfect glasses, together with the haphazard plan of selection generally employed by the mere vendor, is the cause of most cases of blindness and defective vision. Sir Julius Benedict writes:—"I have tried the principal opticians in London without success, but the spectacles you have adapted suit admirably. The clearness of your glasses as compared with others is really surprising." The Rev. Oscar J. Thorpe, M.A., of Christ's Church, Camberwell, writes:—"Mrs. Thorpe has been greatly benefited from the use of your spectacles. They cool and rest the eyes, and, in consequence, the brain, and thereby the tendency to severe headaches from which she has long suffered have been lessened." Dr. Bird, Chelmsford, writes:—"I could not have believed it possible that my sight could have been so much improved and relieved at my age (82). I can now read the smallest type, although suffering from cataract on the right eye." Testimonials from Earl and Countess Lindsay; F. D. Dixon Hartland, Esq., M.P.; the Venerable Archdeacon Palmer, Clifton; Rev. Mother Abbess, St. Mary's Abbey, Mill Hill, Hendon; C. J. Alford, Esq., Gas Light and Coke Company, Horseferry Road, Westminster, &c. Mr. HENRY LAURANCE, F.S.S., Oculist Optician, 39 OLD BOND STREET, W. (late 3 Endsleigh Gardens, Euston Square), personally adapts his Improved Spectacles daily (Saturdays excepted), from 10 to 5. Special arrangements are made for invalids and others unable to wait on Mr. Laurance. Pamphlet, "Spectacles: their Use and Abuse," post free. City Branch, 6 Poultry, Cheapside.

THROAT IRRITATION.—Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use Epps's Glycerine Jujubes. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the Glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing. Sold only in boxes, 7½d, tins, 1s 1½d, labelled "JAMES EPPS and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London." A letter received:—"Gentlemen,—It may, perhaps, interest you to know that, after an extended trial, I have found your Glycerine Jujubes of considerable benefit (with or without medical treatment) in almost all forms of throat disease. They soften and clear the voice.—Yours faithfully, GORDON HOLMES, M.D., Senior Physician to the Municipal Throat and Ear Infirmary."

Mr. Carl Rosa's Opera Company commenced on Monday last a short season of four weeks at DRURY LANE. Mr. Rosa has long since earned the support,—more than that, the gratitude,—of the British public, by his efforts to popularise in England the lyric drama. He alone of late years has dared persistently to cast off the old traditions of the operatic stage; and, in the interests of English musical taste and talent, to bring opera within the reach and comprehension of the people. His method has been to produce all his works in our mother-tongue, to look carefully into every detail of the performance, so as to ensure a tout ensemble as near perfection as possible, and to do this at prices less than half what opera-goers have been accustomed to pay to hear ill-supported "stars" on the "Italian" stage. Moreover, and for this perhaps, more than aught else, we owe him thanks, he has steadily encouraged English musical talent, and so laid the foundation of indigenous opera. Following out these plans, he produced, for the first time, on Monday, a new work, by Mr. Goring Thomas, "Esmeralda," the success of which more than justified the venture. The ever-fresh "Bohemian Girl" occupied Tuesday's programme; while on Thursday Beethoven's "Fidelio," with Madame Marie Roze as Leonora, drew a very large audience. To Madame Roze, Mr. Rosa will doubtless owe a considerable portion of the success which we feel sure he will command, since by her powerful assistance he is enabled to present to the public works beyond the capacity of most artistes. Such rôles as Aida, Leonora, Norma, Lucrezia Borgia, demand physical and vocal power such as are given to few, and no higher praise can be bestowed on this talented lady than to mention that she is almost re-creating parts that seemed for a time to have died with Tietjens, and, moreover, investing them with such force and grandeur by her histrionic ability as leave nothing for the most exacting critic to desire. "Esmeralda" will be performed on Monday and Wednesday next, the "Trovatore" on Tuesday; and on Thursday next, another new English work, "Colomba," by A. C. Mackenzie, will be submitted to the public for the first time.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE, reopened under the management of Mr. F. C. Leader, has a spectacular attraction in a revised version of Offenbach's opera-bouffe, "Le Voyage dans la Lune," transferred from the Parisian Gaiety to the Alhambra seven years since. Lavish expenditure has been bestowed on scenery and costumes, and the several ballets are of an unusually brilliant description, under the familiar control of M. Bertrand; while the experienced M. Jacobi takes his old position as the conductor of a highly-skilled and numerous orchestra. The fantastic story is vocally illustrated by Miss Annie Albu, Miss Marie Williams, Miss Annie Barnadelli, and Mr. E. Rosenthal; while the terpsichorean department is most adequately supported by Mdlle. Rossi, Mdlle. Sampietro, Miss Florence Powell, Mdlle. de la Brujere, that expressive pantomimic dancer, Mdlle. de Gillert, and the flying choregraphist, Mdlle. Ænea, who has never been seen before to so much advantage. On the first night, when the Prince of Wales was present, the performance was prolonged till past midnight; but the entertainment, closing with the charming Snow Ballet, now ends about 11.

"Cymbia, or the Magic Thimble," a new three-act comic opera, produced at the STRAND, is an undoubted success, much of which must be acknowledged due to the very tasteful accessories by which it has been so liberally adorned. A fanciful libretto is supplied by Mr. H. Paulton, dealing with an imaginary King Arthur, three wild Princesses, and a shepherdess, who having had a witch for a grandmother, is in possession of a silver thimble, enabling every wish of the owner to be granted. The music is by a young English composer who calls himself "Florian Pascal," and some of his drawing-room songs are likely to be popular. The heroine is prettily played by a young Belgian vocalist now named Mdlle. Camille D'Arville; Mr. Henry Walsham, as her lover, sings several melodious love-songs in his best style; and Mr. Harry Paulton, as an impecunious monarch without even a crown in his pocket, keeps the audience all through the performance in the merriest mood.

At the COURT THEATRE, Mr. Pinero's new comedy of "The Rector, a Story of Four Friends," rather irritated the audience on the first night, by showing them, in the last act, how cleverly they had been hoaxed by the author. The fault of construction is now remedied, and the spectators are placed in full possession of the secret from the first. The piece is admirably acted by Mr. John Clayton as the rector, Miss Marion Terry as his unjustly suspected wife, and by Mr. Arthur Cecil as an Irish major of doubtful antecedents. No less credit is due to Mr. Philip Day as the man-servant at the Rectory, Miss Kate Rorke as his sweetheart, and Mr. H. Kemble and Mr. Mackintosh as the village doctor and the grim postmaster.

The AVENUE THEATRE has produced an English adaptation of "La Belle Lurette," Offenbach's last opera, and with Miss Florence St. John as the heroine, Miss Lottie Venne as the mistress of the laundry, and M. Marius as the scheming valet, the principal characters are admirably sustained. The lively opera has been well placed on the stage by the new managers, Messrs. Hollingshead and Gunn, and its success seems likely to be enduring.

The FOLIES DRAMATIQUES, lately known as the Novelty Theatre, has this week entered on a new career, under the direction of Mr. Francis Fairlie. A farcical comedy, in two acts, called "Ascot," produced in the provinces three years ago, receives the aid of Miss Florence Marryat and Mr. Gilbert Farquhar, and a revised version of "Les Cloches de Corneville" brings into requisition a numerous company of vocalists.

The Easter novelties at the other theatres include a four-act drama at the SURREY, called, "A Miracle;" "The Slave of Ambition" at the STANDARD; a four-act drama, entitled, "Fathom's Deep," at SADLER'S WELLS; and Mr. James Willing's sensational drama, "The Ruling Passion," at ASTLEY'S, which has now passed under the management of Messrs. Holt and Wilmot. On all these productions a favourable verdict has been pronounced by the holiday audiences.

Egyptian Handbook. By the Rev. Anton Tien. (W. H. Allen and Co.)—The author of this volume, though he has fallen into the error common to compilers of such works, and has taken up some of his limited space with dialogues which never can be of the least service to a beginner, because the answers to questions would be unintelligible to him, has produced a handy little book, more likely to be serviceable in Syria than in Egypt. The mode Mr. Tien has adopted of spelling the Arabic words is suited to the pronunciation of the people of the Lebanon, rather than to that of the people of the Nile. The value of Arabic increases every day, and recent events in Egypt will make the knowledge of it more desirable and useful than ever.

The War in Egypt. By Richard Simkin. (George Routledge and Sons.)—Notwithstanding the large number of books, pamphlets, letters, &c., which have already been published on the recent campaign in Egypt, there is not one better calculated to afford pleasure and instruction to the reader than Mr. Simkin's pictorial sketch of that remarkable event. It is profusely illustrated by the author, while the text and valuable maps are made available by the special permission of the Times. The pictures in colour, which illustrate the most striking events of the war, number sixteen, while the sketches in black and white count forty, and the maps six. In the opening pages of the book, the reader's attention is drawn to the remarkable nature of the expedition—remarkable, inasmuch as it is the first instance in English military history where the means were exactly calculated for the end to be obtained, where the Government thoroughly supported the commander of its choice, and where the campaign was brought to a conclusion in the very manner and at the very time which had been calculated in London before a single soldier had been sent forth from this country. In his concluding observations, the author points to the proved necessity for a system of organised transport, so prepared that the animals provided for the campaign shall be landed at the same time as the men, as the most valuable lesson of the war. Mr. Simkin's sketch of the campaign in Egypt has so many points to recommend it, that it can scarcely fail to become a universal favourite.

Glossary of Navigation: a Vade-mecum for Practical Navigators of the Royal Navy, Mercantile Marine, and Yacht Squadrons. By the Rev. J. B. Harbord, M.A., R.N. (Portsmouth: Griffin and Co.)—This valuable vade-mecum contains explanations of the technical terms used in nautical geography, meteorology, and astronomy, as also most valuable hints to young officers for systematic study. Much of its information is not generally accessible when wanted, and it is published in so handy a form that no navigator should be without it.

A Sketch-Book of R. Caldecott's. (George Routledge and Sons.)—The artistic excellence which marks R. Caldecott's Sketch-Book is only to be equalled by the judgment exercised in the selection of the subject, which it illustrates. It is altogether a remarkably clever work, and entitles the reproducer of the sketches, Mr. Edmund Evans, to a good many words of praise.

The Coloured-Border Poets.—Under this quaint title, Messrs. George Routledge and Sons are issuing an entirely new series of the works of poets who have long since become established favourites with true lovers of literature. Each volume contains several woodcuts, and is rendered still more attractive by an original border, especially designed for it, and a novel binding representing groups of flowers with coloured edges. As first instalments of the works intended to be included in the series, we have received copies of the following:—Shakespeare, edited by Charles Knight, containing 832 pages, with 64 page plates by Sir John Gilbert, R.A., and a portrait. Wordsworth's Poems, edited by R. A. Willmott, 576 pages, entirely reset, with 110 illustrations designed by Sir John Gilbert, R.A., J. Wolfe, and Birket Foster, printed in blue, sepia, pink, black, and green tints. Home Affections Portrayed by the Poets, with 100 illustrations by Sir John Gilbert, Harrison Weir, and others. Sacred Poetry, with 79 illustrations by Holman Hunt, J. D. Watson, Sir John Gilbert, J. Wolfe, and others. Each of these volumes is brought out in a highly satisfactory manner, and may be regarded as forming the base of a series of publications which will, in the course of time, become developed into an instructive work of no little importance.

Messrs. Cassell and Co.'s publications for April deserve high commendation in every particular. It is only to be regretted that want of space renders it quite impossible for us to devote to these instructive publications the attention they so decidedly merit.

The Duke of Connaught, who appears in the Prussian Army List as "Major-General of the Third or Ziethen Hussars," on Wednesday inspected his Prussian regiment at Rathenoro, where they are quartered. The Duke held a review of the regiment in the early part of the day, and in the evening dined with the officers, with whom he is very popular.

We are advised that the sterling bonds and coupons of the Railroad Equipment Co., New York, maturing on the 1st prox., will be paid on and after April 2, on presentation at the Company's London Agency (Messrs. Russell and Co.), 5 and 7 Fenchurch Street, E.C.

"SAPO CARBONIS DETERGENS" is a physician's name for a remedy prescribed for the past quarter of a century for every variety of skin disease. The public have found that as a preventive of small-pox, scarlet fever, and measles, it is unequalled. See that the Latin name described above, and the words "WRIGHT, SOUTHWARK," are on each wrapper, and branded on each tablet, without which none is genuine.

THE remarks we have deemed it our duty to make in regard to the exclusion of the Naval element from the Admiralty, apply to Departments other than the Controller's. Until the advent of the economic scare of 1869-70, which was not the success its originator intended, the Victualling Department was presided over by a Paymaster; but the retention of an official purely Naval was opposed, as it is now, to the "spirit of the age." Had a civilian held the appointment, he would have been retained at the great reshuffling of the official pack by the Right Honourable Member who takes credit for the most judicious administration of Naval affairs; but because the Comptroller of Victualling was a Naval officer he was displaced to make room for his chief clerk, one better able to identify himself with political requirements, and more mobile to official autocracy. The late Earl of Lauderdale always condemned this change, and took advantage of every occasion, when Naval affairs were introduced in the Upper House, to denounce such an unnecessary alteration, asserting that officers who had to deal practically with stores at sea were the best men for regulating the Department charged with the supply of such articles. But the wisdom of the greatest statesman, who did not then "belong to the crew," would not have turned the tide of political intention. To "cut down" and "weed out" all officers, and "blend them in one harmonious whole," was the cry of the Ministerial gods; and they effected their purpose with a success which was crowned with "muddle," and remains to this day in testimony of the ability of our rulers to do the wrong thing. The Storekeeper-General's office was abolished, and a different one created, under the title of "Director of Stores," corresponding to that of "Director of Victualling," the duties being of an almost executive nature. The examination and audit of ships' accounts for Naval stores, provisions, and clothing, were transferred to the Accountant-General, all important questions relating thereto being referred by him to the Directors of either branch. If this reference is a necessity, it was absurd to remove the examination of the questions to another office. It would be more consistent if the audit of ships' Naval store accounts were entirely in the hands of Naval officers who have good practical experience in such matters, and let their examination be final, instead of allowing questions to be handed from one department to another, as they are at present, before a decision can be arrived at. The Directorship of Naval Stores is an important post, and, under the Controller of the Navy, should be filled by a competent Naval officer of standing in the service, assisted by one of each particular branch in whose charge the stores are placed on board ship. If the report is correct that the present Director of Stores is to assume that of he Victualling Department, in addition to his town, when the latter post is vacated, we assert that it is an unmistakeable error to resort to the "harmonious blending" principle, and an attempt to save a few hundreds of pounds, when it would be no gain to the efficiency of either department. We maintain that it is quite sufficient for one man to have to deal with one and a quarter million's worth of Naval stores, without saddling him with the responsibility of a corresponding amount for provisions and clothing. It would be impossible for him to divide his attention, and one branch must necessarily fall to the care of a senior clerk. If this alteration occurs, it will be due to the "cutting down" policy of the present Administration. This policy owes its existence to those few who have gained desirable appointments by treating others in a way they would not care to be treated themselves. The system which admits of individuals thus banding together to advance each other's interests, is open to grave objections. It is the outcome of our civilian government of a military force. The political wire-pullers of the day find in these men able assistants, for Ministerial purposes, in appeasing Parliamentary clamour, when troublesome questions are directed to financial explanations of the "robbing Peter to pay Paul" system, which exists in every vote of the Navy Estimates. They are deemed valuable public servants, and are greatly commended for abilities which are attributable to the Radical development of the present age. They can, at will, assist contractors to palm off worthless goods upon the Service, or they can make it impossible for an honest firm to become contractors to the Admiralty, or do business with the Government. And there is no doubt that they could explain how the money has been spent which was voted to build some 37,000 tons of ironclad shipping never constructed. In the Accountant-General's department, where the majority of the subjects dealt with belong to the service afloat, there is a large field for reform. We hear that both captains and paymasters complain of the unnecessary correspondence from that office, and evidently written by individuals not gifted in the art of polite correspondence. The various sections of this department, under which ships' accounts come, are each presided over by a chief clerk; under him a senior clerk, assisted by one or two juniors and several Lower-Division clerks, is detailed for the examination of each description of account rendered by the service afloat. The Lower-Division clerks examine and pass them on, with their remarks, to the junior of the Higher Division, who hands them, with his opinion, to the senior clerk, whose decision is final, unless the matter is of sufficient importance for reference to the Director of Victualling, the final arbiter; the result, in the form of a letter, is then placed before the chief clerk, who generally signs it unaware of its contents. These letters, not written in the most pleasant strain, mostly require a reply; and the Naval officer, even when he can clearly prove that the office people are wrong, rarely, if ever, obtains a reversal of the official dictum, and need not expect a moderate view to be taken of any errors. In the examination and audit of cash, victualling and clothing accounts, Naval savings banks, ships' ledgers, and allotments, claims for medals, pensions, and all matters pertaining to the Fleet, Paymasters should be solely employed; their knowledge of the peculiarities and customs of the Navy, and constant communication with the Executive, give them great advantages, and a much better acquaintance with the requirements of the service, than can be attained by a civilian. When it is remembered that Paymasters have mainly contributed to improvements in the system of Naval book-keeping, none but the most prejudiced will fail to see that these officers are the proper persons to be employed in this Department for the particular duties connected with their profession. Their practical knowledge would be of the utmost advantage, in suggesting alterations, and framing orders in connection with the section in which each officer was employed; and the inconvenience which occurs afloat from want of proper "printed forms," and clear instructions for rendering accounts, would be overcome. Financially, there would be much saved on the salary list of the Estimates, and eventually a large reduction in pensions for the Civil Service of the Admiralty. These are matters which we commend to the consideration of Honourable Members, especially those who complain so largely of the cost of the non-effective service of the Navy, and the small sum, in consequence, at present annually spent on the construction of ironclads.

WE have before us a pamphlet emanating from the Warrant Officers of the Navy, and setting forth the disadvantages under which they labour with a calmness and moderation which cannot fail to attract the attention and sympathy of the service. The first point to which the petitioners advert is the question of compassionate allowances to their orphans. They point out that, in this respect, they are worse off than their inferiors, the Petty Officers, whose children receive an allowance of 1s. 6d. a week each, so that the united pension of the wife and five children of a petty officer dying on service would be £35 2s. per annum, while that of a warrant officer's family would be only £30, the wife's allowance. In the case of a widower leaving orphans the case is much harder, for the children of the warrant officer are left destitute and unprovided for by the State. Hinging upon this question is that of widows' pensions. The Warrant Officers refer to the unfairness of an arrangement by which the widow of one of their number of 20 years' service is no better provided for than if her husband had died immediately on promotion, while the widows of officers of all other grades receive allowances proportionate to their husband's length of service. The scheme submitted in the pamphlet has the advantages of fairness and moderation, and provides for increments of five pounds for every five years' service after the first ten, the maximum pension for the widow of a warrant officer killed in action after 25 years' service in his rank being £55. It only stands to reason that the older the widow the less chance has she of providing for herself, while her claims upon the State are greater in proportion to her husband's seniority. The paragraph in the Queen's Regulations providing for the promotion of warrant officers to commissioned rank as the reward of gallantry and daring is next referred to. As, in spite of many acts of bravery on the part of warrant officers during the last 70 years, this regulation has remained a dead letter, while it has been quoted as a point in their favour when other recompense has been asked, its repeal and the substitution of some less visionary advantage is now suggested. Then follow most reasonable requests as to pay and store allowance. At present, the warrant officer's position is an anomaly, inasmuch as the longer he serves, the smaller proportionate increase of pay he gets. After five years, he has an advance of 1s. 6d. a day; after ten, another shilling, and as the reward of a third five years, only sixpence more. After attaining this maximum, he has nothing practically to look forward to, while other ranks have a triennial increase after the first five years, and after twenty, a yearly increment of 1s. per diem, till a certain maximum is reached. The present regulations as to store allowance are equally unfair, since, while the difference in the responsibility of the warrant officers of a small sloop, and men in the same position on board a line-of-battle ship, is immense, the allowance of 6d. a day is the same in each case. Common-sense strongly supports the proposition that the allowance should be in proportion to the responsibility, with a maximum of 2s. per diem. The questions of uniform and relative rank, next raised, show a worthy desire on the part of the Warrant Officers to improve their social and Naval position, and as the little extra lace which they ask for, and the relative rank which they aspire to, can be accorded without touching the nation's pocket, no doubt, on these points, they will be satisfied. In their final petition for increased retiring allowance, honorary rank, and Naval pensions, they are equally moderate, and suggest a pension of £6 per annum for each year of warrant rank, with a maximum of £150. In the case of Chief Gunners, Boatswains, and Carpenters, they ask for £7 a year, for each year served as officers, with a maximum of £200. As they point out, a man may under present regulations be invalided through disease contracted on an unhealthy station, after 10 or 12 years as a seaman and petty officer and nine years as a warrant officer—say, 21 years' service—to almost starve on £50 a year. Their scheme, therefore, based on seniority, needs no recommendation. We fear that ths suggestion to grant the honorary rank of lieutenant to chief gunners, boatswains, and carpenters on retirement is not likely to be acted upon, as it involves the question of a commission. At the same time, Chief Warrant Officers might well be granted a certain proportion of the higher rate of pensions, could regulations be made to admit of it. Considering the reality of the grievances brought forward by the Warrant Officers, and the simple and comparatively inexpensive remedies which are suggested in their appeal, we feel sure that the authorities will give their serious attention to the case of this deserving body of men, whose position, being the reward of long and meritorious service, should be made as free from discontent as possible, since it is the one goal which the best class of English seamen can aspire to.

THAT Lord Wolseley would recommend the re-organisation of the Commissariat and Transport Staff was to be expected, judging by the views expressed by him in the last edition of "The Soldier's Pocket-book." Assuming that the proposed reorganisation will lead to the separation of the Transport from the Commissariat, and the formation of a Transport Corps on the lines of the Military Train, the question arises, How is the new corps to be officered? Not, it is to be hoped, like the Military Train, by outcasts from the Line! To obtain good officers, the corps should be made popular; to be popular, it must be well paid and officered by gentlemen. The system by which the Commissariat and Transport Staff is now officered would, no doubt, answer well, provided sufficient care was taken in the selection of candidates,—to the exclusion of such men, for instance, as Lieutenant Jones, who is "awfully unpopular in his regiment," and who, on an order being promulgated permitting officers of certain service to volunteer for the new corps, attends orderly-room next morning, and asks Colonel A to recommend him. As soon as Jones has left the room, Colonel A says to his Adjutant, "This is a splendid chance of getting rid of Jones; I shall certainly recommend him." The Adjutant points out that only proficient and deserving officers are to be recommended, and that Jones is the dullest and most incompetent of subalterns. Colonel A, however, thinks more of the social side of the question, and so recommends and "gets rid of Jones," much to the satisfaction of both himself and his regiment. Such officers as Jones will be no credit to the Transport Corps, and it is to be hoped they will be rigorously excluded. Lord Wolseley says, "Transport, to be efficient, must have a perfect military organisation;" but he also adds, "Officers and men should remember that they are employed upon non-combatant duties." Now, it seems to us that a Transport Corps, to be really efficient, should not only possess a perfect organisation, but should be well armed, and the men so trained as to be able to use their arms with effect. The Commissariat and Transport Corps are armed at the present time with the Artillery carbine, a good weapon, no doubt, but unfortunately not one man in ten knows how to fire it, much less use it with effect. Were a man of the Commissariat and Transport Corps called upon to use his carbine in the field, the chances are, if he shot anybody, it would be his nearest comrade. Though the duties of the Transport are, as Lord Wolseley says, non-combatant, occasion may arise for the men to defend not only the stores in their charge, but their own lives too. It is as well, therefore, that they should be properly armed and properly trained. Lord Wolseley says, "Our present Transport companies are well organised." So they may be, but they are much too weak. If our Army is to have Transport at all, its Transport should be fit to take the field at a moment's notice. Now, it is a fact perhaps not generally known, that to raise the companies of the Commissariat and Transport Corps proceeding to Egypt to a war establishment, Infantry Army Reserve men, who knew absolutely nothing of horses, riding, or driving, were posted to them; while the additional horses supplied were raw remounts, entirely untrained. The untrained portion of the companies was the largest, and it was with such material that officers were expected to carry out Transport duties in a hostile country in presence of an enemy; and then, when failure came, people raised their heads in amazement. Now, it is evident that either some plan for completing the companies to war strength in an emergency, with trained drivers and trained animals, should be devised, or, failing this, a certain number of companies must be retained at a sufficient strength to take the field at any moment. Large sums are paid annually for transport by civil contract in our Dockyards and in the Royal Arsenal. Why should not this transport work, in peace-time, be performed by the Transport of the Army? The civil-contract system could be resorted to in war-time, and the trained Transport could proceed on active service. This would be one step towards the formation of an efficient Transport reserve, and would remove one serious difficulty. There are, of course, many other important questions involved, but these we must leave for future consideration, until we are in possession of further details as to the scope of the Committee's inquiry.

ATTENTION has been drawn by constant letters, appearing in the Indian newspapers, to the agitation now going on among the Subalterns of the Indian Staff Corps to obtain quicker promotion to the rank of Captain. It appears that officers joining the Indian Staff Corps have now to serve twelve years before being promoted to the rank of Captain. This is considered a hardship, taking into consideration the present rate of promotion in the British Army, which is about eight years, on an average. To try and ameliorate their condition in this respect, the Staff-Corps Subalterns are endeavouring, by subscriptions among themselves, to raise a fund to employ some competent lawyer in England to take up their case, and lay it before the Secretary of State for India. From a cursory examination of the case, it certainly appears to us that the term of twelve years—which, at the time that it was fixed, was a fair average—is now unreasonably long. On turning to the Army List, we find that the average service of the senior Subalterns of British regiments is about eight years, and that of the senior Subalterns of the Royal Artillery nine and a half years. Promotion in the Royal Engineers is at present very slow, owing to the peculiar position of that corps. But by a late Order, subalterns of Royal Engineers on attaining twelve years' service are promoted to Captain, whether they become supernumerary to the Establishment or not; and against this decision the Royal Engineer officers have recently appealed, pointing out that this order does not save them from constant supersession. It was stated that the last subalterns of the Royal Engineers who were promoted to Captain, after completing twelve years' service, had been superseded by 600 subalterns of the Line. It is not unnatural that discontent should prevail, under the circumstances. The Royal Engineer subalterns are, however, peculiarly situated, and especially so in India. There they are almost all borne on the strength of the Public Works Department, and hold lucrative appointments, being virtually more civilians than soldiers. The case is, therefore, widely different to that of the Staff-Corps Subalterns. In spite of the misnomer of Indian Staff Corps, these officers are really nothing more than regimental officers, receiving pay and doing duty as such. They come into daily contact with their brother-officers in British regiments, perform the same garrison duties, courts-martial, &c., and go through the same classes of signalling, musketry, and other instruction. Formerly, if a Staff-Corps subaltern had good interest in India, he could get into the political or civil departments, which were looked upon as the great prize of the service. Now, all this is changed; the military-civilian or political officer is being rapidly pushed aside by the more brilliant and perhaps better educated Civil-Service competition wallah, and the Staff-Corps subaltern has to make up his mind to serve with his native regiment, and live in the hope of obtaining an appointment on the "real Staff." He, therefore, looks around him, and seeing that his position is bad in every possible way, he commences to agitate, in a direction which, if successful, will secure him to some extent against supersession by his brother-officers in the British service, and at the same time give him better pay. We certainly think that this case deserves the attention of the Secretary of State for India. The Indian Staff Corps consists of a good and devoted body of officers, as the present state of the Indian Army shows. By a small concession to the claims of its junior officers, i.e., by reducing the term of service to the rank of Captain from twelve to ten years, renewed interest in work would be engendered, in place of the discontent, dissatisfaction, and we may almost say dismay, now prevailing.

We understand that H.R.H. the Duchess of Albany has consented to launch the new steel corvette Calypso at Chatham on June 7, and that their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh will also be present on the occasion.

During the trial of a new screw-propeller at Portsmouth on Thursday, the tubes of the boiler gave out, and the steam, rushing into the stokehold of No. 6 torpedo-boat, severely scalded two seamen. Moral,—never use old boats for experimental purposes.

Lord Henry Lennox has given notice in the House of Commons that on Tuesday, April 24, or if not on that day, then on going into Committee of Supply on the Navy Estimates, he will move for the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into the state of our ironclads, and into the present method of manning the Navy.

The Admiralty have awarded the good-service pension of £150 a year vacant by the promotion of Captain C. J. Jago to flag rank, to Captain Richard Carter.

Rear-Admiral Frederick A. Herbert was on Wednesday appointed Admiral Superintendent of Portsmouth Dockyard, in succession to the late Rear-Admiral J. D. McCrea. The vacancy thus created at the Admiralty has been filled by Captain Hopkins, who has been replaced at Sheerness by Captain Codrington. Captain John A. Fisher, C.B., was on Wednesday appointed to succeed to the command of the Excellent.

. It appears that the ironclad tonnage, "weight of hull," shown in the Navy Estimates to have been built since 1859 has been calculated upon a misleading principle, and that, taking only a few years, here and there, within the ironclad period, we find that even Mr. Hamilton, when in office, discovered that somewhere about 9,000 more tons of ironclads are taken credit for in the Estimates as having been built than has really been the case, and that the actual deficit of ironclad tonnage over that promised to be paid for, instead of amounting to 15,000 tons, as stated last week, actually exceeds 24,000 tons weight, or 37,000 tons' displacement, equivalent to no fewer than six ironclads of the Conqueror type. How has this money been spent, during a time when the price of material has been constantly falling, and yet leave nothing to show for it? Doubtless, Lord Henry Lennox will elicit some explanation on the subject.

The Parliamentary Secretary of the Admiralty will, we presume, inform the country at no very distant date that the discrepancy found to exist between the number of ironclads built and the number of tons of ironclads to be built, and for which money has been voted and spent, is due to large sums having been spent in repairing the hulls, engines, and boilers of ships afloat. Should such an explanation be forthcoming, we would advise Members of Parliament to narrowly scan the account rendered by the Admiralty of the cost of the repairs to each individual ship. It will then be found that, in most cases, more money has been spent in repairs than it would take to build a brand-new ship of the class repaired.

The incidental or indirect charges upon the shipbuilding votes have often occupied the attention of Parliament, but no subject is less understood outside Naval circles. The attacks made by Mr. Seely upon Dockyard extravagance are still fresh in the memory of Naval men, who will remember that one of Mr. Seely's most important charges related to the leakage which was thus allowed to go on in the money voted by Parliament for shipbuilding purposes. The result of the inquiry made into the subject by the Committee appointed in 1880 led to these charges being reduced from £273,177 to £177,554 in 1882-83, thus effecting a saving of nearly £100,000; and we have no doubt that inquiry into the shipbuilding accounts of the Navy would lead to discoveries necessitating reforms which would likewise produce vast savings to the Exchequer, while giving the taxpayers better value for their money. As matters now stand, the country has actually paid for six first-class ironclads which the Admiralty have failed to deliver, notwithstanding that this department has been paid in advance, and has spent the money. Hence, the Admiralty, in regard to the country, are in the same position as the private individual who has overdrawn his salary to pay his debts, and finds himself obliged to live on nothing for an indefinite period, or else adopt the alternative of throwing himself on the mercy of his employer, and stand the chance of being dismissed.

A careful consideration of the system, or want of system, governing the present Administration of the Navy, which renders possible such gross irregularities as we have disclosed, cannot fail to impress all right-minded men with the fact that the course adopted by Lord Henry Lennox in demanding the appointment of a Royal Commission, is the only one likely to rehabilitate the Admiralty in public opinion, and again set the Department on its legs with a fair start. As matters now stand, there is not the slightest chance of the Admiralty ever being able to cope successfully with the vast strides being made by France in her attempt to wrest from us that Naval supremacy we have so long held, and of which Englishmen are so justly proud.

The Russian fleet in the Black Sea, which at present possesses only the two ironclads, the Admiral Popoff and the Nowgorod, is to be strengthened by the addition of three powerful ironclads. The first of these, a turret-ship of the Peter-the-Great type, is to be laid down at once at the Nicolayew Government Dockyard, and will be of the following dimensions. Length between the perpendiculars, 320 ft.; length over all, 341 ft. 9 in.; breadth, extreme, 69 ft.; mean draught of water, 25 ft.; displacement, 9,990 tons; horse-power, indicated, 9,000. Unlike the Peter the Great, the new vessel will be provided with three barbette turrets, protected by 18 in. of compound armour, each mounting two long 12-in. breech-loading guns of Russian manufacture. In addition, seven 6-in. breech-loaders will be mounted in the casemates. The hull will be constructed of iron and steel.

The German aviso Blitz, a double-screw, steel-built despatch-vessel, of the Iris type, has lately made her trial trip in Kiel Bay. The results obtained were not considered satisfactory, as the power developed by the engines fell considerably short of that contracted for, and the speed of the vessel was, therefore, greatly below the estimate. It is, however, anticipated that the defects in the machinery can be remedied, and that on a future trial better results will be obtained. The Blitz was launched last year from the yard of the North-German Shipbuilding Company at Kiel. Her dimensions are as follows:—Length between the perpendiculars, 245 ft. 1 in.; extreme beam, 32 ft. 6 in.; depth in hold, 19 ft. 10 in.; draught, 13 ft. 6 in.; displacement, 1,382 tons; horse-power, 400 (2,700); estimated speed, 16 knots. Her armament consists of one $4\frac{3}{4}$ in. and four $3\frac{3}{8}$ in. Krupp guns, besides which she is provided with under-water torpedo-dischargive tubes. Rig, two poles; crew, 104 officers and men. The Pfeil, a sister-ship to the Blitz, is building at the Wilhelmshaven Imperial Dockyard.

Four French torpedo-vessels, of the Papin class, a new type, are at present building at Toulon and Rochefort. Those in course of construction at the former dockyard are the Papin and Inconstant, which are of the following dimensions:—Length between the perpendiculars, 223 ft. 1 in.; beam, 29 ft. 2 in.; depth in hold, 19 ft. 8 in.; displacement, 1,240 tons; indicated horse-power, 700 (?). They will be built of steel, and "protected," but to what extent is as yet unknown.

The Acheron, Cocyte, Phlégethon, and Styx, French ironclad gunboats of the first class, are all building at Cherbourg. The four second-class ironclad gunboats of the Grenade type are building at Lorient, Cherbourg, and Rochefort.

The Admiralty have decided that the half-yearly report of sailing and other qualities of her Majesty's ships and vessels (Form S., 200) is to be transmitted in future half-yearly during the first commission of a ship, yearly during the second commission, and not at all in any future commissions. It has also been decided that this return shall in future be excluded from the list of documents which have to be received at the Admiralty, before the commanding officer of a ship can be placed on half-pay.

According to a report just issued at St. Petersburg, the steel armour-plating of the new frigate cruiser Vladimir Monomarchus weighs nearly 400 tons, and cost the Government £33,210. It was supplied by a Sheffield firm. The steel used in the construction of the hull was obtained from Scotland. Altogether, by the supply of material for this vessel and the sister one, the Dimitri Donskoi, British trade benefited to the extent of nearly £200,000. The three ironclads now under course of construction in the Black Sea are to be built, as far possible, with Russian material. The order will, no doubt, be carried out as regards the steel for the hulls, but the armour-plating is almost sure in the end to be obtained from this country.

Experiments are being made at Portsmouth with Nordenfelt 1-inch machine-gun bullets, electro-coppered, instead of wrapped in a copper capsule, to take the grooves,—an invention which promises to greatly simplify the question of coating projectiles.

Sir William Armstrong and Mr. Hotchkiss have delivered their 6-pounder machine pinnace-gun or field-piece to the War Office, and the authorities are only waiting for Mr. Nordenfelt to complete his carriage and deliver his gun, to hand the competing machine field-pieces over to the Ordnance Committee, and direct the experiments to be commenced at Sheerness.

Lord Alcester is to be congratulated on having promoted his late flag-lieutenant over the heads of some five hundred deserving officers, who, no doubt, view with satisfaction and pleasure the advancement in life and in their profession of the jeunesse dorée who join the Navy, while the ungilded and uncared-for pass their life for the most part in the cold shade of unemployed half-pay.

Some interesting experiments with armour-plates have just been concluded at Copenhagen, the details of which we reserve for a future occasion. At Portsmouth, a compound plate, manufactured by Messrs. Sir John Brown and Co. for the Russian Government, was tested on board the Nettle, in the presence of Captain Codrington, and Captain Linden, the Russian Naval Attaché. The plate represented the belt protection of the Russian cruiser Dimitri Donskoi, and withstood the usual test in a highly satisfactory manner.

The Rev. J. B. Harbord, M.A., Chaplain of the Fleet, and late Inspector of Naval Schools, whose "Glossary of Navigation," issued through Messrs. Griffin and Co., we noticed last week, is indefatigable in his endeavours to benefit Naval officers. This is made apparent by a very simple sentence in the introduction of his brochure, in which he expresses the hope that his work may be regarded as a confidential and silent friend, able to remove the student's difficulties, without exposing his ignorance. Such a friend is really worth having.

The detachments which lately sailed in the Nepaul, hired troopship, were duly turned over to the Tamar at Gibraltar. So crowded was this latter vessel that large quantities of baggage was piled upon deck, and amidst other items of luggage were two entire carriages belonging to the Royal Scots. So much for orders and regulations about officers' baggage! When the Tamar embarked a regiment for Kingstown some years ago, the captain was good-natured enough to take on board a large quantity of baggage in excess of regulation. This baggage was piled on each side of the quarter-deck, and was a source of considerable inconvenience. A furious gale, at times almost amounting to a hurricane, overtook the ship in the Bay of Biscay, causing her to labour heavily, and the luggage was on the point of being thrown overboard when the wind moderated. On this occasion a heavy carriage, in a huge case, was perched upon the forecastle. The Admiralty should look to this, or some day a terrible catastrophe may occur. From present information received, it appears that the Tamar has a large quantity of powder, shot and shell, guns and torpedoes, on board.

The Admiralty have awarded to Commander John Ward (a.) the Naval pension of £50 a year rendered vacant by the death of Commander Charles E. Powys, on March 13.

A funeral service of peculiar interest was performed in the Crypt of St. Paul's Cathedral yesterday, when the remains of Professor Palmer, Captain Gill, R.E., and Lieutenant Charrington, R.N., who were murdered in Arabia during the campaign in Egypt, were interred near the tombs of Wellington and Nelson. At the appointed hour of noon the funeral procession entered the Chapel of the Crypt, where the relatives and friends of the deceased and representatives of the various professions had assembled, to the number of about 500. A single coffin of polished oak, with plain fittings, contained all that had been found of the three murdered friends, and it was appropriately covered by the flag of their country, in the service of which they lost their lives. The funeral service was read by the Dean of St. Paul's, and the lesson by Canon Liddon. The Royal Navy was represented by Lord Northbrook, Lord Alcester, Admiral Hoskins, Commander Kemble, &c. There was a large attendance of the Royal Engineers, including Major-General Sir Andrew Clarke, K.C.M.G., Colonels Sir John Stokes, K.C.B., and Warren; Lieutenant-Colonels Stuart, Malcolm, Sim, Durnford, Jones, Micklem; and Majors Melville, Salmond, Athorpe, Grover, and Harrison.

A correspondent with the Channel Squadron, writing from Madeira on March 27, says:—"The Squadron left Gibraltar early on Sunday morning, the 18th, and arrived here shortly after noon on the following Saturday. The passage was uneventful, but very unpleasant. A persistent head wind was encountered nearly the whole time, accompanied by almost constant rain. Square sail could only be set for a few hours, and fore and aft for little more, though every endeavour was made to use it as much as possible. A rather heavy westerly swell was experienced, which caused the long ships, especially the Northumberland and Agincourt, to roll heavily. Steam tactics, principally in groups, were performed on one or two of the more moderate days, and there was a certain amount of exercise at shifting spars, &c., sail drill being out of the question. Since our arrival, the weather has been fine, the quarterly spar torpedo exercise has been completed, and special leave has been given to each watch. Last night, a theatrical performance was given by the officers of the Northumberland. They played 'Box and Cox' and 'Dearest Mamma.' Both pieces were capitally rendered and much applauded. The usual excursion to the Grand Curral has been made by large parties, all the horses in the place having been pressed into the service. We leave early to-morrow for Port Praya, Cape de Verde Islands, and are timed to be eight days en route."

The Russian Government has appointed a special Commission to inquire into the condition of the Black Sea Steam Navigation Company, the State-aided concern on which it relies for transport in the Black Sea in time of war. Since its formation shortly after the Crimean War, the Company has received nearly £3,000,000 in subsidies, without, however, fulfilling the expectations of the Russian Government. During the war in 1877-78, it rendered very little service to Russia; and in spite of the strong criticism to which it has been since subjected, it has only increased its fleet by two or three steamers. The concession of the Company expires in 1887, and it is to report upon the desirability of renewing it that the present Commission has been appointed. The Government is far from being desirous of withdrawing the subsidy, but it is determined that the fleet of the Company shall be an efficient and reliable one. No doubt the members of the Commission and the Directors of the Company will be able to arrive at an understanding which will be beneficial to all concerned, —selon la coutume Russe.

The Admiralty have awarded to Captain Edward B. H. Franklin, R.N., the Naval pension of £80 a year, rendered vacant by the promotion of Captain Stapleton J. Greville, R.N., on March 20.

Cronstadt is in full activity again, preparing the Baltic Fleet for the opening of the navigation, which is expected to be later this year than usual, owing to the severity of the winter. Among the more important refitments, we may mention that the Peter the Great is having a new false-keel made to replace the one scraped away in passing down the Clyde last year; the clipper Kreutzer is having her zinc sheathing replaced by copper; and the General Admiral is being lightened—and weakened—by being deprived of a band of armour-plating. The latter is the vessel that proved to be 500 tons heavier than originally designed, and has all along sat too heavily in the water.

The new Flying Squadron is, we believe, to consist entirely of corvettes, most probably the Bacchante, Volage, Canada, and Rover, with possibly the Active and Carysfort.

The reticence of Mr. Childers in reference to questions put to him last week, relative to Inland Revenue Clerks getting Members of Parliament to air their grievances, reminds us of his action while at the Admiralty, when Circular Letter E, January 15, 1869, was issued, a paragraph in which ran as follows:—"The attempt on the part of any Naval officer or Civil Servant to approach them (the Admiralty) on these matters" (increase of salary) "through the private intercession of persons not officially connected with the applicant, is virtually imputing to this Board either that it is likely to turn a deaf ear to a reasonable application, unless supported by political influence, or that it may be induced to accede to an unreasonable application, if such influence be brought to bear upon it." It is a pity the right honourable gentleman did not carry his principle into practice in dealing with the senior grades of the Naval and the Higher Division of the Civil Services; but his bombastic effusion was only intended for those of the former branch who, unable to advocate their own cause, or without relatives to do it for them, are obliged to seek aid of members of the Legislature; and with the latter, the Civil Service, the unfortunate lower section, who are underpaid for doing the brunt of the work, would never obtain any improvement of their prospects excepting by the advocacy of generous-minded politicians. The Higher Division complains not, their interests being well cared for. The cry comes from the labourer, who is allowed bread, without the chance of getting butter to eat with it. In large mercantile firms, clerks are not split into two classes, each individual commences at the foot of the ladder, and rises by service and ability to better-paid posts; but in the Imperial service, there are two sections,—the Upper, a part of the political patronage, where younger sons enjoy comfortable remuneration for light duty; the Lower, an official necessity, where poor men are chained to an office desk, and drive the pen at a high rate of speed to compensate for the slackness of those placed over them. At the War Office, there are 196 Higher-Division clerks, who cost £87,579, averaging £446 each; and the expense of 176 Lower-Division clerks is £19,963, averaging £113! The 25 Higher-Division clerks at the Admiralty, Whitehall, absorb £15,806 of the Estimates, the average income of each being £632; while 23 Lower-Division clerks are maintained for £4,700, at an average at £200 each. Were officers employed in these two departments, in place of Higher-Division clerks, the money saved could be appropriated to improve the pay of the ill-paid juniors, who would receive better treatment, and find a more satisfactory administration of the official duties, and the balance would swell the sum spent on ironclad construction.

By the death of Retired Commander Robert A. Newman, on April 1, a Naval Pension of £50 per annum is placed at the disposal of the Admiralty.

The French are increasing their Naval force in Madagascar waters, which looks like a bombardment. We also perceive that the French Minister of Marine has ordered the formation of a squadron, which will be stationed on the north and west coasts of France. This squadron will be composed of the ironclads Bayard, Surveillante, Tempête, and the cruiser Château Renault, and will be under the command of a Rear-Admiral.

We hear that the Chinese Government have decided to create a permanent naval station in the Corea, with a view to arresting the extension of the Japanese Power in that direction. At the same time, the news reaches us that the Japanese Government has decided to largely increase the strength of its Naval and Military Forces, nearly doubling that of the Army. These signs of the times bode anything but a long spell of peace in the East.

We perceive that the nomination of General Lewal to the command of the 17th Army Corps in France has given great satisfaction, because that officer has written very ably upon military matters. Those gentlemen who are so strong on paper often make sad blunders in the field, as we have found, to our cost and humiliation; however, the French papers declare that General Lewal "knows how to put in practice, either during the autumn manœuvres or in presence of the enemy, those theories which he teaches in his writings, and those systems of operations which he explains in his lectures."

There has been a good deal of unpleasantness between the French War Minister, some of his colleagues, and that dashing cavalry officer, the Marquis de Galliffet. The Marquis is a thorough soldier, and devotes his whole existence to his profession. For some time past he has been regarded as the leading spirit in his branch of the service; he was desperately wounded in Mexico, he charged the Prussians with reckless gallantry at Sedan, but the Radicals remember nothing but the severity he exercised in dealing with the Communists who fell into his hands, and they are determined to lose him. Citizen Henri Rochefort is peculiarly bitter against his brother Marquis, who captured him as he was trying to escape from Paris. It had been settled by General Billot, and confirmed by General Thibaudin, that the Marquis de Galliffet should assume the command-in-chief of some extensive cavalry manœuvres on the eastern frontier; but this arrangement was suddenly cancelled, in consequence of General Thibaudin having allowed himself to be influenced by the Radicals, who are his chief supporters. Hence a row in the Cabinet, which disagreed with the War Minister in this matter. By the last account, a compromise has been effected, and each party claims to have gained his point.

THE CHANGE OF UNIFORM.

SIR,—Now that the authorities at the War Office have decided on a change of colour in the tunic of the British Army, it may be a pertinent question to ask—Are they also going to give the soldier a chance of wearing a more easy tunic as to cut, for no one can possibly walk on a moor, say, and do a day's heavy work, dressed in a tight-fitting tunic? To be sure, England is not all moor; but rough ground in war time would have to be traversed. Surely a man going for a day's deer-stalking or a long walk across country would not select the tunic as now worn? The cut of this is far too close-fitting; as radical a change is required here as in the "battle colour" or "service colour" of the troops. Greater freedom at the neck is required, and ample room for the play of the arm and chest. The present fashion falls little short of the ridiculous. The dress of the Papal Zouaves was not a bad one as worn in 1869 and 1870. It was loose and serviceable; grey, with red and silver facings. I wish also to attract the attention of the War-Office authorities to the fatal error of providing no shade for the temples; the modern "roofing" (with a spike inserted) of the British soldier allows of no shade to this vulnerable portion of the head. The troops of no age and in no land were ever so ill-provided as are our troops with head-gear at the present moment. I am not alluding to the hideous service-helmet dealt out to the Guards when going to Egypt, but the every-day black-felt "lightning-conductor."—I am, &c., ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL.

SIR,—In the proposed changes in the colour of Army uniform, it is intended to retain the scarlet tunic for full-dress only, and this, it is hoped, may still operate to induce men to enlist, for the sake of the uniform. It is, perhaps, worth while to remember that since a strong movement set in in favour of the adoption of scarlet uniform for Volunteers, the strength of that force has materially increased. Any one in a position to judge of the feeling of the Volunteer rank and file would bear me out in saying that were it proposed to alter the colour of the uniform of scarlet-clad battalions, such a change would be most unpopular, and would certainly check recruiting. What applies to Volunteers applies equally to Regular troops. It is, in many instances, the red coat which induces men to enlist, and were a dirt-coloured grey one substituted for it, I fear that the difficulty would be, not for the enemy to discern our soldiers in action, but for anybody to discern them at all.—I am, &c., A VOLUNTEER OFFICER.

The War Office has issued instructions for experiments to be made at the School of Military Engineering, Chatham, for the purpose of preparing an analysis of the various forms and component parts of all substances capable of being employed for explosive purposes.

Lieutenant Le Quesne, C Battery, 3rd Brigade, Royal Artillery, and Lieutenant Cuthbertson, Royal Highlanders, have been placed on the Sick List during the week.

It was intended to have a review of the Egyptian Army for the Khedive on St. Patrick's Day, but so many of the men had been recently vaccinated that Sir Evelyn Wood postponed it. Meantime, the progress made by the men is so rapid, that it will be difficult to maintain they are not as good as Egyptian troops can ever be in a few weeks more. The other day, Colonel Wodehouse had out his artillery, and they quite astonished some distinguished English visitors by the way in which the men went through their gun-drill, dismounting and mounting guns, &c., close to regulation time according to the English drill-book, though they have not been two months in the service. Baker Pasha's gendarmerie has also sprung into full life and vigour almost at once, and owing to the number of old soldiers and non-commissioned officers has attained to such a state of efficiency as to do all the garrison duty, and furnish the guard for Cairo ad interim. Their excellent health is in strange contrast to the condition of the British soldiers here. Out of 4,000 men, only 28 were on the sick-list, and crime is scarcely known; nor is there any appreciable number of desertions, which is the more remarkable, considering how the ranks are filled, and the facility for escaping into the country and of getting away among the Fellaheen.

On Thursday, Lord and Lady Wharncliffe, accompanied by Sir E. and Lady Wood, Baker Pasha, Colonel Mitchell (Natal), Brigadier-General and Mrs. Arbuthnot, Mr. W. H. Russell, Major S. Wortley, Captain and Mrs. Gough, proceeded to Ismailia, returning next morning by special train, which stopped at Mahsema, in order to enable the party to visit the interesting excavations of M. de Naville at Ramses, which have led to the identification of the ruins as the site of Pithom.

(FROM AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.)

On Saturday last, at a late hour, a Divisional After Order was issued, to the effect that the annual course of musketry for 1883-4 should commence throughout the Division forthwith, under the new system, in accordance with G.O. 51, specially issued on the 29th ult. As this General Order makes a pretty clean sweep of all previous musketry arrangements, and establishes quite a new order of things, it is not to be expected that the annual course can immediately begin. Musketry instruction, therefore (except in the 1st Battalion Grenadier Guards, who finish their course with field firing this week), is in abeyance until the new rules have been thoroughly studied, and various doubtful points cleared up. On Sunday last, Major-General H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, K.G., resumed command of the 3rd Brigade, which he temporarily relinquished in August last. Major-General Rowlands, V.C., C.B., who held the command during his absence, is struck off the strength of the Division. On the same date, Major-General Mark Walker, V.C., C.B., assumed command of the 1st Brigade, vice Major-General J. B. Spurgin, C.B., C.S.I. The 21st Company Royal Engineers arrived at Aldershot from Egypt on Saturday last. This company has been abroad for the past eleven years. The men appear to be seasoned veterans, and look nothing the worse for their recent experiences. A draft, consisting of Major Robertson, 107th Regiment, one serjeant, two corporals, 120 privates, of the 85th L.I., is held in readiness to proceed to Malta at an early date, to join the 53rd Light Infantry. The 85th is at present very weak, and has a company detached for duty at Portland. The present system of keeping up the strength of battalions abroad by periodically sweeping the home battalions of their best men is a ruinous one, and cannot much longer continue. When this draft leaves for Malta, the 85th will practically cease to be a regiment, and will be merely a cadre. Notwithstanding statements to the contrary in the Irish Press, it is known here that four regiments of Irish Militia will train at Aldershot during the months of June and July, viz., the Royal South Down, Kerry, Wexford, and Roscommon. In accordance with instructions received from the Horse Guards, a committee, under the presidency of Major-General Willis, C.B., has been ordered to assemble for the purpose of considering and revising the existing rules for the war game. The Aldershot Kriegs-spiel apparatus has now been lying unused at the clubhouse for some years. When first introduced here, ten years ago, a well-known Head-quarters Staff Officer was secretary, and much interest was taken in the weekly games. No difficulty was then found in getting officers to play or umpire. We are likely to see a revival of these interesting studies at the Camp at an early date. The course of instruction for the Officers' Class at the Army Veterinary School has been concluded, and the officers have rejoined their regiments. On Monday a Farriers' Class was formed, composed of 20 non-commissioned officers from various corps. The bronze star for Egypt has been received during the week for 400 men of the Royal Engineers, and those officers and non-commissioned officers of the Divisional Staff who served during the recent campaign. The general opinion seems to be that it is an exceedingly ugly decoration, and that the blue ribbon is too suggestive. It is certainly very weighty and very plain. The Committee on Equipment, Dress, &c., under the presidency of Colonel Harrison, C.B., C.M.G., has been sitting during the week at the Assistant-Quartermaster-General's Office, Head-quarters. The members of this Committee have plenty of work cut out for them, sufficient to occupy them for months, having to inquire into and report upon a great variety of matters. Certainly the year 1883 will be known in military annals as the "Committee year." Yet another one!—this time, to consider and report upon the necessity of a revision of the "Manual of Instruction in Army Signalling." Members:—Major Thrupp, D.A.Q.M.G. for Signalling; Major Hamilton, R.E.; Lieutenant Davidson, 2nd Battalion 60th Rifles. G.O. 50, "Military Training of Soldiers," specially issued on the 29th ult., is an excellent order, and if carried out in spirit, in conjunction with the new musketry system, cannot but tend to vastly improve the Army as a fighting machine. But will it be found practicable to carry out these orders in their integrity? The crying evil of all garrisons is the great number of useless and illegal (in a military sense) fatigues, "duties," &c., on which the time of young soldiers is worse than wasted. Although stringent rules are laid down here to regulate such matters, they are often evaded, and many men are constantly employed on anything but legitimate duties, these irregularities being winked at all round. Next week will be given up to amusement; theatricals at the Clubs, on Tuesday and Wednesday; Divisional steeplechases, on Thursday and Friday; concert by the Royal Engineers Band from Chatham, and race ball, on Friday night. Permission has been given to place a brass tablet in All Saints' Church, to the memory of those officers and men of the 94th Regiment who fell in South Africa in 1877-8-9. The 2nd Dragoon Guards (Queen's Bays), at Manchester, will shortly be ordered to Aldershot; L Battery, 2nd Brigade, and M Battery, 4th Brigade, Royal Artillery, are under orders for Ireland, and will probably leave during the ensuing week. C Battery, 3rd Brigade, Royal Artillery, at present in Egypt, but under orders for home, is expected to be stationed at Aldershot. Colonel Mussenden, Inspector of Auxiliary Cavalry, inspected and dismissed the class of Yeomanry Officers on the 27th ult. The new class of officers assembled on the 2nd. A sufficient number of officers of Infantry Auxiliary Forces not being forthcoming, there will be no class of instruction at the Infantry Auxiliary School this month.

RATE OF MARCHING AT THE BRIGHTON REVIEW.

SIR,—In the report of your special correspondent at the Brighton Review, the following sentence occurs:—"All these bands played in quicker time than that prescribed in the drill-book, namely, 116 paces to the minute, their rate being from 120 to 125 per minute." Your correspondent must be unaware that the rate of marching was increased from 116 to 120 paces per minute some time ago.—I am, &c., A VOLUNTEER.

Col. G. F. C. Bray, half-pay, late 96th Regt., who, after five years' service as Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General of the Southern District, concluded his period of appointment as Staff officer on Saturday last, was, on his return to his lodgings, Overton House, 46 Shaftesbury Road, Southsea, in the afternoon, seized with a paralytic stroke, which extended over the whole of his left side. From inquiry we are enabled to state that the condition of the patient was improving.

Major-Gen. the Duke of Connaught resumed command of the 3rd Infantry Brigade, and Major-Gen. Mark Walker succeeded to the 1st Brigade at Aldershot, from the 1st inst. inclusive.

Col. Lord Ralph Kerr, half-pay, late of the 10th Hussars, took over the duties of his appointment as Inspector of Yeomanry in the Northern District on Tuesday, vice Col. the Hon. C. W. Thesiger.

The Army.

1st Life Guards. The regiment moved on Wednesday from Hyde Park to Windsor.

2nd Life Guards. The congregation, brought together from all parts, that assembled on Sunday morning last at Holy Trinity Church, Windsor, on the occasion of the farewell service to the 2nd Life Guards, probably surpassed in genuine enthusiasm anything of the kind ever seen at this, or indeed at any other church. Within, a vast but singularly orderly multitude, sitting and standing, filled every corner; whilst without, a great surging crowd vainly endeavoured to get even to the doors. The sermon of the Rev. Arthur Robins, which was heart-to-heart preaching from the first word to the last, was received with an earnest and respectful interest that it is difficult to describe. A pin literally would have been heard to drop amongst the 2,000 or more packed within those walls. The band, under the direction of Mr. Winterbottom, was at its best, entering into the spirit of the whole thing con amore, and the music accordingly was very fine. Such services as these, if they did nothing else, would at any rate go to show the extent and the reality of the good-feeling that has now so long been established between the Rev. Arthur Robins and the Household Troops. Ten years ago, such a happy state of things between soldiers and their chaplain would have been thought almost incredible.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue). The regiment moved on Wednesday from Regents Park to Hyde Park.

5th Dragoon Guards. Lieut. and Adjt. Short is, it is reported, likely to be transferred to his old regiment, the Blues.

7th Dragoon Guards. The regiment, recently returned from Egypt, has been inspected at Shorncliffe, by Major-Gen. Newdigate, C.B., commanding the South-Eastern District. The troops were paraded in review order on the new drill-ground in the rear of the E lines. The General, in a short address, wished the Dragoons a hearty welcome home, after their arduous duties in the East. The men have not yet received their war medals, and it is stated that the Secretary of State for War will present them in person at an early date.

11th Hussars. A correspondent draws attention to the fact that this regiment, and not the 5th Dragoon Guards, ought to proceed this year to Ireland.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The 21st Compy., under command of Major Pusey, arrived at Aldershot on Saturday evening from Egypt.

In the House of Commons, on Wednesday, Mr. Greer asked the Secretary for War whether it was a fact that the approximate average service of the senior captains of the Cavalry and the Infantry was 16 years and six months, while that of the senior captains of the Royal Engineers was 20 years; whether it was a fact that the junior majors of the Royal Engineers who were commissioned in December, 1862, had already been superseded by a total number of 388 officers of the Cavalry and Infantry, and that of the officers who joined those branches during the five years subsequent to December, 1862, and who were still serving, no less than 46 per cent. had passed over the heads of the junior majors of the Royal Engineers; whether he would state in what manner the junior majors of the Royal Engineers (superseded as shown in the above figures) would be enabled to recover such supersession, considering that they were subject to the general rules for compulsory retirement; and whether he had yet come to any decision as to the advisability of accelerating the promotion in the junior ranks of the Royal Engineers, and, if so, whether he would communicate such decision. The Marquis of Hartington, in reply, said:—"At present, the average service of majors in the Line on reaching that rank is, no doubt, less than that of majors of the Royal Engineers, and, therefore, supersession of the latter has taken place. This is due to the fact that in 1881 the number of lieutenant-colonels and majors in the Line was doubled, so that officers half-way down the list of captains became majors. This quickened Line promotion at the moment, but it was a special act of reorganisation which is not likely to be repeated, and the very fact of the majors reaching that rank before the average age will tend to retard promotion later on. The five years' rule of retirement was only applied in the Royal Engineers in 1877, and lieutenant-colonels did not begin to retire under that rule till last October. Thus abnormal causes have accelerated promotion in the Line, while in the Royal Engineers the retirement of lieutenant-colonels has not yet had time to be appreciably felt in the lower ranks. On the other hand, the Royal Engineers have a far larger proportion of lieutenant-colonels than any other arm of the service, and the numbers have been so calculated as to reduce to a minimum the chance of any major qualified for promotion naving to retire. It is expected that the majors of Engineers now superseded will to a great extent recover their supersession in the next rank, and, as the ranks in all arms are now organised with a special view to promotion being, under normal circumstances, practically equal, I do not contemplate adopting any exceptional measures as regards the Royal Engineers, unless greater necessity should arise than now appears."

Scots Guards. A special parade of the 1st Batn. was held on Saturday morning at Windsor, for the purpose of distributing the Khedive's bronze medal to the troops who served in the Egyptian Campaign. The decorations were presented by Col. G. W. Knox, C.B.

3rd the Buffs (East Kent Regiment). The officers of the 2nd Batn. gave a ball last month at the City Hall, Hong Kong, when nearly 300 guests were present, including H.E. the Administrator and Mrs. Marsh, and Miss Thornton; their Excellencies Vice-Admiral Willes, C.B., Major-Gen. Sargent, C.B., and Admiral Meyer, the Admiral of the French Fleet on the China station. The ball was opened by the Administrator and Mrs. Hobson. The ball committee consisted of Major Halahan, Capt. Newnham-Davis, and Lieuts. Bunbury and Vyvyan, and the decoration committee was composed of Capt. Gelston, Lieuts. Knight, Chippindall, Vyvyan, and Somerset. Major Kerr, 1st Batn., has joined the depot at Canterbury for the usual period of two years.

20th Lancashire Fusiliers. A good "field" attended the weekly paper-chase on Saturday, and the running was well sustained. The course lay to the left of "Clunekeep," around by Loughmore Castle, and back home by Dovea. The Suir, which at Templemore, is a narrow, shallow stream, was crossed twice. Only a few made clear leaps, the others waded or came to grief in the jumping. Distance run, about ten miles; time, two hours.

49th Regiment. The Khedive recently applied to Sir E. Malet to enable him to testify the high sense he entertained of the gallantry displayed by Lieut. Burney in saving the life of a woman and child who were drowning in the Nile. The answer of Sir E. Malet was, of course, disappointing to his Highness, but it was inevitable; the rules of the service do not permit any British officer to accept a foreign decoration, except by the leave of the Queen. Perhaps the War Office will be pleased to take some notice of the fact?

ROYAL MARINES.

Lieut. C. Field, R.M.L I., has been ordered to embark in H.M.S. Pembroke, to relieve Lieut. A. E. Houghton, R.M.L.I., appointed adjutant at the Gosport Division, vice Adair, period of Staff service expired.

The following officers have been granted leave of absence as expressed against their names, viz.:—Capt. A. D. Corbet, R.M.L.I., six weeks, Lieuts. L. T. Pease, R.M.A., one month, F. G. Cotter, R.M.L.I., six weeks, G. Skipwith, R.M.L.I., six weeks, and C. V. F. Townshend, R.M.L.I., one month, on return from service at Port Said; Lieut. A. Orford, R.M.A., one month, as a special case; Capt. C. J. Cheetham, R.M.A., one month in extension, for benefit of health; Lieut. E. G. Wilkinson, R.M.L.I., two months, for benefit of health.

The detachment of Royal Marines serving until lately in Egypt was brought home in the Nepaul, and landed last Saturday at Portsmouth. Some 80 men of the detachment were left behind, having been distributed among the ships of the Mediterranean Fleet. Those on board consisted of Lieuts. Pease and Orford, Surg. Pearson, and 50 men of the Royal Marine Artillery; and Major Colwell, Capts. Gritton and Corbett, Lieuts. Skipworth, Cotter, Stamper, and Townshend, and 100 men belonging to the Royal Marine Light Infantry. The detachments attached to the local divisions were played to their several barracks at Eastney and Forton by the bands of the corps. The Chatham detachment was not expected so soon at its headquarters, and, consequently, no preparations had been made for its reception. The Marines garrisoning Port Said having thus been withdrawn, the corps is no longer represented in Egypt.

It is presumed that the under-mentioned officers, who were retired as captains of the Royal Marine Light Infantry, with the honorary rank of major, but who have now been gazetted to brevet majorities prior to the date of their respective retirements, in accordance with the Order in Council of March, 1883, viz., Brevet Majors N. W. I. H. Stephens, W. E. E. Morley, P. R. Champion, and O. R. W. Wood, will receive the honorary rank of lieut.-col.; and that honorary major and Pymr. E. M'Arthur, of the Royal Marine Artillery, who retired in February last, and who has been similarly antedated to honorary lieut.-col., will now be gazetted honorary col. In addition to the officers already gazetted, the following will benefit by the recent Order in Council, by receiving a brevet step of promotion during the current year, viz., Majors Suther, R.M.A.; Allnutt, Hore, Moody, Heriot, Kay, and Way, R.M.L.I., to brevet lieut.-cols.; and Capts. Poole, Clements, Ramsay, Gritton, Fagan, and Wright, R.M.L.I., to brevet majors.

The retirement of Major H. B. Isaacson, R.M.L.I., does not give a step of promotion, as that officer has for some time been seconded on the list of Majors, while holding a civil appointment.

A Quartermastership has become vacant at the Plymouth Division of Royal Marines, by the death of Qrmr. Giles Rendell, who only obtained his commission in December, 1881. Mr. Rendell died of bronchitis and congestion of the lungs on the night of Friday, March 30, and was buried with military honours in the cemetery attached to the Royal Naval Hospital at Stonehouse, on Monday last. The following appeared in the regimental orders at Plymouth:—"In referring to the melancholy death of the late Qrmr. Giles Rendell, the Commandant desires to express his high sense of the zeal and ability displayed by the deceased officer, and his personal regret at the loss, which he feels quite sure will be shared by all ranks at the Division." A notification has been issued calling for the names of candidates for the appointment.

The Admiralty have communicated to the various divisions of the Royal Marines a copy of a letter from Capt. H. Fairfax, C.B., A.D.C., R.N., of H.M.S. Monarch, drawing attention to the valuable and efficient service rendered by the battalion of Royal Marines that were stationed at Port Said. Their Lordships express their satisfaction at the receipt of this gratifying report of the services of the battalion, and have ordered it to be read at three successive parades.

59th East Lancashire Regiment. The following "Sayings and Doings" are taken from the 5 and 9, Lilywhite's Gazette:—"Lieut. Lake, who lately passed so well into the Staff College, is at present studying at that institution, and at the conclusion of his course of study will, without doubt, make the seventh officer in the East Lancashire Regt. in possession of a Staff-College certificate, six of them being in the 2nd Batn. 59th, viz., Major Griffiths, Major Gunter, Brevet Lieut.-Col. Sartorius, V.C., Major Elias, Major Tidy, Lieut. Lake, the 1st Batn. 30th claiming Major Goodwyn. On reference to some old Army Lists, we find that the facings of the 59th Regt. were purple until 1805, and in the Army List of 1813 the facings first appear as white. The authorities, it appears, do not intend filling up the companies vacant by the retirement of Capt. Hornby in the 1st Batn. and the seconding of Major Gunter, as these vacancies bring the East Lancashire Regt. down to their proper establishment of captains, viz., 10. This, however, will leave C Compy. 2nd Batn. and a company in the 1st Batn. permanently without a captain, until such time as vacancies shall be caused among the senior field officers of each battalion, there being a major in each battalion, who, having been promoted prior to July, 1881, do not command companies. The strength of the battalion on March 10 was as follows:—Officers, 25; warrant officers, 2; serjeants, 39; drummers, 16; rank and file, 259. The educational certificates in possession of non-commissioned officers and men are:—First-class, 9; second-class, 70; third-class, 61; fourth-class, 10; total, 240."

66th Berkshire Regiment. The Globe has the following:—"While all praise is due to the War Office for the quick despatch with which the Egyptian medal has been issued, there seems to be room for complaint in connection with the decoration of the troops who served in Afghanistan. Some regiments have got their medals, but a correspondent of a military contemporary affirms that the 2nd Batn. Berkshire—the 66th—are not among the recipients. This was the corps, it will be remembered, which suffered so terribly at Maiwand, through the egregious blundering of the General in command, and the devoted gallantry of the men on that occasion was the theme of universal praise. It is, therefore, something like a public scandal that the comparatively few who escaped from that fatal field with their lives have nothing to show for their bravery but a scrap of ribbon. During the two and a half years that have elapsed, many have died, and an even larger number have retired, leaving only 140 men in the regiment who are entitled to wear the Afghan medal."

98th North Staffordshire Regiment. "One Who Knows" writes:—"I think attention should be drawn to the following hard case in the 64th and 98th Regts. By Capt. Carey's death, the other day, a vacancy has been created, which, it is said, will be absorbed. Now, there has been no subaltern promoted for about eighteen months in either of these battalions, and it seems very hard on the senior subalterns that this vacancy should not be filled up, especially as the 98th have just gone up to Quetta over 950 strong, and with very few captains with them. It does seem as if a little exception to a hard-and-fast line might have been made with advantage, both to the public and the unfortunate senior subalterns, in this instance."

Commissariat and Transport Staff. A correspondent writes:—"Are the military authorities aware that an officer, who retired from the Army by the sale of his commission, has been for the past four years, and is still, doing the duty of principal Commissariat officer in the Island of Jersey, and drawing pay from Government, to the exclusion of other officers of the corps holding her Majesty's commission, and serving at a less rate of pay in more unpleasant stations? Surely this is an injustice that ought to be inquired into and remedied?"

Pay Department. A correspondent writes:—"What is the reason for the breakdown of the Army Pay Department? If the report is to be relied upon,—that no less than 45 vacancies exist, and that only seven probationers are forthcoming—there must be something radically wrong somewhere. The fact is, that there is more than one reason why combatant officers are chary of volunteering. When the new régime was first inaugurated, there were plenty of candidates for the appointment of Paymaster, as the authorities baited the hook with a very taking kind of fly; but when the victims of misplaced confidence found how artificial the lure really was, they said to other would-be aspirants, 'Don't rise to the bait, 'tis only tinsel after all.' The Paymasters of Brigade depôts are exceptionally heavily weighted, for the duties which were hitherto performed by staff officers of pensioners are falling upon them, and no extra remuneration for the increase of work has been given. Again, the system of continually moving paymasters from one regiment to another, and from a regiment to a depôt, or vice versâ, is a reason for the dearth of candidates. The writer was lately informed by an old and experienced staff paymaster that the authorities intended to continually move the younger paymasters about. The scurvy manner in which the Department has been treated in the matter of rewards for arduous duties during the last campaign, is quite enough to disgust hard-working and meritorious officers. There may be yet another reason for this dearth. The late Warrant governing the promotion of officers was not in existence when the new Pay Department was called into being, and many officers who despaired of ever attaining to field-rank were induced to join the non-combatant branch of the service. But now that every captain has a far better chance of becoming a mounted officer, they naturally prefer to cling to the old corps, in which they have the advantages of a good mess and genial comradeship. In conclusion, the following suggestion is offered for the consideration of Lord Hartington, viz., select from volunteers from the 'Reserve of Officers' a sufficient number to fill the existing vacancies in the Pay Department, and confer upon them an acting commission as paymaster; and as the Pay Department increases in number, the volunteers could retire to the 'Otia cum,' &c., of civil life."

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

A correspondent writes:—"I am extremely obliged by your advocating the just claims of the Militia with reference to honours and rewards. It has been for years the cry of our official Military reformers that the Militia was to be assimilated to the Line, and, in so far as additional work and responsibility are concerned, this has been largely done, and willingly and loyally accepted. But when it came, two years ago, to the distribution of honours and rewards, the Militia can hardly be said to have been assimilated to the Volunteers, as, out of upwards of thirty honours distributed among the Auxiliary Forces, but ten fell to the senior service. Yet surely there is some difference between the duties and responsibilities of the Militia and those of the junior branches of our Auxiliaries? The labours of an officer who has for the last quarter of a century attended the training of his regiment, often under canvas and in most inclement weather, are surely more severe; moreover, he is liable at any moment for embodied service for a period entirely unlimited, which extended in the Peninsular War to twenty years, and in the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny to from two to four years. Only last year upwards of thirty battalions had their training prolonged at a few days' notice from 27 to 55 days, and constituted at that time the only really available body of troops remaining under arms in the country. The Militia officer, moreover, is subject all the year round to the Articles of War, and cannot go abroad, even for a day, without a formal application for leave. It has always been an honourable characteristic of the Militia that they have been content to do any duty required of them, and often very much more than their duty, quietly and unostentatiously, and have avoided any undue agitation or advertisement of their claims, but it would be a mistake to attribute their silence to satisfaction with their treatment in this matter."

The Secretary for State of War has approved of the following regiments of Irish Militia on their assembling for training proceeding to Aldershot, to undergo the same, instead of remaining in Ireland during the period :—The 3rd Batn. Royal Irish Regt. (Wexford Militia), under the command of Lieut.-Col. P. C. Alcock, stationed at Wexford; the 5th Batn. Royal Irish Rifles (Royal South Down Militia), under Lieut.-Col. Commandant T. Waring, at Downpatrick; the 5th Batn. Connaught Rangers (Roscommon Militia), under Lieut.-Col. R. J. C. French, at Boyle; and the 4th Batn. Royal Munster Fusiliers (Kerry Militia), under Lieut.-Col. Commandant Lord Ventry, at Tralee. The regiments will be placed under canvas during their training.

The four regiments of Irish Militia ordered to train at Aldershot this year will arrive at the camp and be encamped and attached to brigades as follows :—5th Batn., Royal Irish Rifles, from June 4 to 30, Rushmoor, 1st Brig.; 4th Batn., Royal Munster Fusiliers, from June 18 to July 14, Rushmoor Hill, 2nd Brig.; 3rd Batn., Royal Irish Regt., from June 4 to 30, Church Plateau, 3rd Brig.; 5th Batn., Connaught Rangers, from July 2 to 28, Cove Hill, 3rd Brig.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

4TH BATTALION, QUEEN'S ROYAL WEST SURREY REGIMENT.—By an error in the press, this regiment (late 8th Surrey) was inadvertently designated the 4th Volunteer Battalion, Royal West Kent Regiment. The regiment, since the promotion of its present commanding officer, has made such great progress, and has increased so much in soldierly attribute, that we regret that any mistake should have arisen to rob Lieut.-Col. Ray of the credit which he so richly deserves.

The commanding officer of the 24th Middlesex R.V. (Post-Office Corps) is asking for men who have had experience in artillery and cavalry regiments, to act as drivers to the recently-acquired telegraph van. This completes the equipment of the Postal Telegraph Corps, which now numbers more than 150 men, so reliable and prompt information may now be expected, when the occasion arises, from future seats of war.

The Secretary of State for War has approved of a new Volunteer Cadet Corps being formed of the pupils of the Forest School at Walthamstow. This new corps will have an establishment of one company, and will be attached to the 1st Volunteer Batn. of the Essex Regt.

The Mayor of Brighton (Mr. Alderman Cox) has received a letter from Col. Sir Wm. Owen Lanyon, dated Portsmouth, March 28, in the following terms :—"My dear Mr. Mayor,—H.S.H. Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar has desired me to convey to you the expression of his cordial thanks, for the ready assistance and co-operation which you and the officers, and the corporation, accorded to him in the arrangements necessary for the review on Easter Monday. His Highness has already expressed to Mr. Terry, the superintendent of police, his thanks for the efficient arrangements he made for keeping clear the streets and ground where the march past took place. He regrets that he was unable personally to thank Mr. Tilloson, town clerk, and Mr. Lockwood, the borough surveyor, for the great help they rendered. His Highness would, therefore, be glad if you would kindly inform them how much he appreciates the same."

The following General Order was specially issued on Monday :—"His Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding in Chief has again much pleasure in conveying to his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and his Staff, his unqualified approbation of the manner in which the Volunteers acquitted themselves on the occasion of the Review on Easter Monday. His Royal Highness did not fail to notice the marked improvement exhibited by every arm of the service represented, and the greatest credit is due to the commanding officers' and their Staff, for the zeal and care which, combined with their professional ability, they must unquestionably have shown in bringing their several regiments and corps to such a high state of efficiency. The march from Three Bridges to Brighton was most satisfactorily carried out. The conduct of the troops was all that could be desired, and the manœuvres of the day, favoured by exceptionally fine weather, were a complete success. In concluding these remarks, his Royal Highness desires that General Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar will convey to all the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the Volunteer Force, his thanks for the patriotic spirit which induced them to assemble in such numbers on this occasion; and he trusts that the experience gained by these Reviews will serve as a stimulus to future displays, and maintain the force in its present high state of efficiency.—By command, WOLSELEY, A.G."

"To Capt. Reid, of Bucksford House, agent to the Godinton Estate, we," Kentish Express and Ashford News, "are indebted for a perusal of some interesting documents in connection with the enrolment of Volunteers in the parish of Great Chart, in 1803, to resist the threatened invasion of England by Napoleon Bonaparte, and from these we are enabled to recognise the patriotic ardour which inspired our villagers in the olden days. Volunteer corps were at that time raised throughout this county, as it was supposed that the landing of the French troops would be attempted on the Kentish shores. The parish of Great Chart was called upon to provide sixty men, and Capt. Toke, great-uncle of the present Major Toke, of Godinton Park, undertook the command of the detachment. His subalterns were two farmers, named Lieut. Jell and Ensign Bishop. In response to the call for recruits, all the able-bodied men in the village must have readily come to the front, as we find that 122 gave in their names, their ages ranging from 17 to 84. All classes joined—farmers, carpenters, blacksmiths, cordwainers, butchers, bricklayers, millers, keepers, labourers, apprentices, and servants, while husbands and fathers with large families were not deterred from donning the scarlet. Happily, circumstances never arose to require their services, but the alacrity with which they came forward sets an example which, it is to be hoped, would be eagerly followed by the present generation, if occasion required. The enrolment is within the memory of Daniel Norton, the oldest inhabitant of Great Chart, who was born in the year 1795."

SIR,—Your correspondent, "Twenty Years a Dragoon," proposes some alterations in your scheme for the reorganisation of Cavalry regiments, which he thinks will meet with approval. I fear he will be disappointed. I will take his suggestions seriatim. He first deprives all the regiments of Dragoon Guards of their title, and then coolly asserts they retain it! He flatters himself that "The Royal Scots Greys" (whom, by-the-by, he designates "The North British Dragoons") and the 4th Royal Irish Dragoon Guards will receive with acclamation his proposal to abolish their royal facings; while instead of uniting the two present Irish regiments, he adds an English regiment to each, thus unduly increasing the Irish establishment. A very cursory examination of these proposals—made, your correspondent avers, partly on the score of cheapness!—serves to show that no single regiment would benefit by them except the 1st Dragoons, which would be promoted from its proper position at the bottom of the list to the top. Can it be possible "Twenty Years a Dragoon" is interested in that regiment? With further reference to the scheme in your paper of March 15, the Court Journal says it is proposed to link the 3rd and 11th Hussars; and, no doubt, titles like "Prince Albert's Own," which have only a temporary interest, should be avoided. In this case, I presume, the 19th would revert to its old character as Lancers, and the 14th and 15th put together. The only objection to this is that the two regiments, "The King's Own Hussars" and "The King's Hussars," would be too similar in title. The latter might, therefore, be called "The Royal Hussars," a title to which the 15th, as the oldest Light Cavalry regiment in the service, is pre-eminently entitled.—I am, &c., A.

PURCHASE LIEUTENANTS.

SIR,—As a Purchase lieutenant, who paid over-regulation for his step, I have been much interested in the correspondence which has lately appeared in your columns on the subject, and I venture to intrude a few suggestive remarks, without, I hope, trespassing too far on your valuable space. Although the ex-Secretary of State for War is reported to have declared that the purchase rights of the Purchase Lieutenants had been fully met, he must have forgotten that the extra pension given to Purchase captains was given in consideration of the over-regulation money expended, and that the principles of equity are not dependent on proportion:—If it is equitable to give compensation for the loss of £800, the same principles are applicable to a loss of one-fifth of that amount. The amount individually may be but small, but multiplied by the number of losers will form a very pretty little sum for the benefit of a public exchequer, freed from the charge on account of the small amount of the claims, which it has allowed in more substantial cases, better able, perhaps, to urge their interests. With reference to the means lately referred to in your columns, which have been taken to bring this matter before the House of Commons, I hope to be permitted to remark that the seeming causes of failure to elicit responses to the circular were (1), the want of description of the gentleman who was good enough to start it; (2), the failure to show the exact steps that were going to be taken in consideration of the expenditure involved, and the subscription solicited; (3), the absence of any names on the circular of any sort of committee, or references to members of military clubs, who might, from a more extended acquaintance, draw the attention of a larger circle of fellow claimants for this equitable compensation. I do not make these remarks in any spirit of carping criticism, but only as an honest endeavour to help to put the matter upon a proper basis, should those, who were good enough to start the circular originally, be induced to resume operations.—I am, &c., W.

"Purchase" writes:—"The article in the Nineteenth Century, by General Sir Lintorn Simmons, G.C.B., must have completely upset all the theories and statements of the advocates of boy soldiers; and the reason of the desertion, as a rule, is that the men cannot endure the compulsory education, or rather the constant attendance at school, with the certainty of leaving a service at the end of a short period, with a total loss of the best period of their lives, to learn a trade or make a livelihood, with a prospect of no fixed stipend whatever. They have seen how on the abolition of Purchase their officers were dealt with—and the "magnificent gift," as the Times terms it, was turned into a confiscation of money actually paid by others—and they naturally are not only suspicious, but perfectly aware that any claims they may have will be put aside when their services are no longer required or the authorities see fit to dispense with them. Had the authorities paid the bonâ fide value of the commissions when Purchase was abolished, there would have been little difficulty in getting good men to enlist."

Major-Gen. H. G. Woods assumed command of the troops in the Belfast District on Sunday last, in succession to Major-Gen. Sayer, C.B., removed to Devonport.

One of the handiest horse equipments for colonial work we have seen has been designed by the Rev. W. Henry Cooper, F.R.G.S. (late King's Own Staffordshire Regt.), who has had long experience of travel in all our Australasian colonies, and is now about to proceed on a special tour for the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel to the North-Western Provinces of Canada as far as the Rocky Mountains. The entire kit has been on view at Messrs. Pratt, of Tavistock Street, and the patterns will be in the possession of the Auxiliary Forces' Uniform and Equipment Company.

The next examination of candidates for admission to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, will commence in London on Thursday, June 21 next, the medical examination taking place at the Academy on the previous day. The number of vacancies to be competed for will be 50. Applications cannot be received unless made in strict accordance with the regulations. The successful candidates will be required to join the Royal Military Academy about Sept. 24 next.

"Abolished" writes:—"Now that the Serjeant Instructors in Musketry have been abolished, and allowed to retain their rank and pay until provided for, may I be allowed to suggest that all those Instructors—and they are not a few—who have 18 years' service and over, be discharged to pension, receiving, of course, the amount they would be entitled to on completion of 21 years' service? This would provide for a good many of them, and save the Government a large round sum into the bargain, viz., difference between pay and pension for the three years. Supposing 50 were so discharged at 18 years' service, the gain would be £2,053 2s. 6d."

A collection of pictures of the late war in Egypt of exceptional interest will open very shortly at the Fine-Art Society, New Bond Street. Mr. de Neuville has arrived from Paris, with his picture of "The Charge of the Highland Brigade at Tel-el-Kebir." With this will be exhibited "The Charge of the Household Brigade at Kassassin," by Mr. Woodville; and two very talented pictures by Mr. Wyllie, of "The Bombardment of Alexandria." The private view of these pictures will take place on Saturday next, the 14th inst., and we are authorised to say that officers of both services will be admitted on that day, on presentation of their cards.

ROYAL CAMBRIDGE ASYLUM for SOLDIERS' WIDOWS, KINGSTON-ON-THAMES.
Supported by Voluntary Contributions.
LADY-PRESIDENT.
H.R.H. the DUCHESS of CAMBRIDGE.
PRESIDENT.
H.R.H. the DUKE of CAMBRIDGE, K.G.
CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE.
OFFICE—40 CHARING CROSS, S.W.

This Asylum was opened in February, 1854, to provide a home for the widows of non-commissioned officers and privates of the Army of not less than 50 years of age.

There are 65 widows in the Asylum.

Each widow has a furnished room, and receives seven shillings weekly, besides a monthly allowance of two shillings and sixpence for coals.

The House is capable of containing 70 widows, and the Committee appeal to the public for funds to enable them to admit the additional number, the present subscriptions being insufficient.

The funded income of the charity yields only £830, with an additional £50 from the Princess Mary's Fund for Nurses, to meet an estimated expenditure of £3,000 per annum.

An annual subscription of half-a-guinea, or a donation of five guineas, entitles to one vote at each election, with the right of nominating a candidate.

ON account of Orders recently issued regarding Mess Expenditure, Messrs. PELLATT and CO. (formerly APSLEY PELLATT and CO., of Holland Street, Blackfriars—the original firm—established in the year 1759, by the father of the late Apsley Pellatt, Esq., M.P.), Falcon Glass Works and China Manufacturers, Manufacturers, by special appointment, to H.M. the Queen and the Royal Family, &c., Contractors to H.M.'s Government, the Lords of the Admiralty, the Indian Stores, &c., have decided on supplying all Regiments with their Manufactures at their wholesale-trade Prices, which are very much below those usually paid by Officers' Messes. This Firm have made Mess Contracting the speciality of their business for upwards of 150 years, and have, at the present time, upwards of 140 Regiments on their books, including the most prominent of H.M.'s Service. For the past 18 months, Messrs. Pellatt and Co. have obtained the commands of every regiment giving their orders on arrival home from foreign service, without a single exception. On receipt of patterns from any Regiment, Messrs. Pellatt and Co. return estimates for the exact matching of goods. Several Regiments have taken this course of late, many being Native Indian Regiments, and the estimates returned have always shown such a great saving, as to secure the future commands and greatest satisfaction of the Mess.—All Communications and Patterns should be sent to the Offices and Show Rooms, addressed,

Army & Navy Gazette.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 7, 1883.

WE are exceedingly gratified at finding that an article on the proposed change of colour of the uniforms of the British Army, which appeared in our columns last week, is in complete harmony with the opinions expressed on the same subject by H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, in his speech at the Mansion House on Monday. And further confirmation reaches us from experienced officers of less exalted position. One who, after serving many years in India, commanded a Volunteer regiment in this country, and who is deeply interested in all questions bearing on the efficiency of the Army, has sent us the following observations from personal experience:—"What is the colour of grass under the snow? The smart answer to this riddle is, invisible green. The same answer, mutatis mutandis, might be given to the question, 'What is the colour of soldiers' uniforms under dust?' It has been my fate to march for months, day by day, through varying country,—light sand, black cotton-ground, grassy plains, &c. Whether the soldiers were dressed in blue, or red, or white, their appearance during a march was much the same, for they were covered with dust of the colour of the ground they were marching over. The important question about clothing is not so much one of colour as of cut." Another officer, who fought at Maiwand, reminds us that all the troops we had engaged there, European and Native, wore khakee uniforms. Had they been dressed in the brightest colours of the rainbow, the issue of that battle could not have been more disastrous. It must not be forgotten that the khakee so long used in India, was introduced during the Mutiny, instead of the white clothing, which was found to be too conspicuous and inconvenient in other ways, and not as a substitute for scarlet, or blue, or green. If the object of the "Colour Committee" had been to ascertain the most suitable kind of flags for signalling, under different circumstances and at moderate distances, their experiments might be as useful to the Army as they were interesting to the members; but as bearing on the complex question of the best colours for our soldiers' uniforms, they have no practical value whatever. The plain speech of the Duke of Cambridge will give sincere pleasure to the whole Army, with a very few exceptions. We trust we shall not have long to wait for some further equally decided expressions of his opinion, and that we shall soon see the last of government by Committees.

The Service will learn with regret that Brigade-Surgeon W. S. Oliver, A.M.D., the inventor of the equipment bearing his name, is about to retire, heart-broken at the treatment he has received. After a long and practical trial by the 52nd Light Infantry and 1st Battalion Rifle Brigade, the Oliver equipment was pronounced perfect in every way. The inventor asked nothing for his idea, only that credit might be given him for having so modified the valise as to remove the defects of which complaint had long been made. This credit the War Office has systematically refused to accord. The worthy doctor's ideas have been copied, he has been openly snubbed; but not one word of thanks has he received in return for all the money and time he has devoted to the public service. And all because he warned the Equipment Committee that the modified accoutrements recommended by them would fail, just where they have failed. Knowing, as we do, how perfect the Oliver accoutrements are, and how highly they were spoken of by the officers and men of the 52nd and Rifle Brigade, we have always espoused the doctor's cause. We have done this with no desire to support one inventor more than another, but only because all those who have had any opportunities of testing its merits are agreed in pronouncing the "magazine" superior to any other form of accoutrements; and experience has shown that the reports of committees are rarely, if ever, worth the paper they are written on—that of the Equipment Committee certainly was not. Dr. Oliver will carry with him into retirement the good-will and sympathy of the entire Army. He has laboured in a most disinterested spirit to promote the efficiency of the service, and has given much offence for doing so. However, he has the satisfaction of knowing that he has done his duty, and that to him will be due all improvements which may be effected hereafter in the equipment of our Infantry.

We consider too much value need not be attached to the recommendations of the Committee on Soldiers' Uniform, as the signature of one out of the four members of the Committee is that of the Deputy-Adjutant-General of the Reserve Forces, who has, rightly enough, since he has held office, been endeavouring to induce the Volunteers to adopt the red coat, with such success that out of 208 battalions of Volunteers but 40 wear different shades of grey, 59 green, the worst of all colours, and the rest, 109, scarlet. The tailors, however, always have had much influence in Pall Mall.

It is reasonable to believe that if the magical benefits to be derived from an Army clad in grey are as great as the War-Office Committee imagine, other nations not less wisely governed than ourselves will also adopt the same grey uniform. We would suggest, therefore, that another Committee should be appointed, to report on the management of a future campaign in which the armies engaged wear the same dress.

Major-General Hawley will complete his 62nd year on the 18th inst., when he must be removed from the Horse Guards' Staff under the Warrant of June 25, 1881, although his five years' Staff appointment will not expire until October 1, 1883. General Hawley served as Assistant Military Secretary from 1873 to 1878, so that he will have had a continuous Staff service of about nine years at the Horse Guards. General Hawley will, on removal to the Retired List, have the same claims for "compensation" for compulsory removal from the Army and the Staff as other Generals and Colonels who have been similarly treated, and have been fighting the Minister of War for equitable compensation since the introduction of that very expensive and injudicious Warrant of June 25, 1881. General Hawley will, moreover, under the same act, on removal be deprived of his distinguished-service pension, as a further recognition of his long and faithful services.

In the House of Commons, on Monday last, the Marquis of Hartington, in reply to a question asked by Mr. Puleston, stated "generally" that it was not intended to enter on any large scheme for the re-organisation of the Cavalry, and that measures would be at once taken to provide the number of men required for the drafts for the cavalry regiments in India. So the Military authorities will be satisfied for the present with the enormous amount of discontent and injury they have caused by mashing up our Infantry regiments. We heartily congratulate the Cavalry on the benefit thus involuntarily conferred on them by their unfortunate brethren in arms.

Colonel Robert Hay, R.A., has succeeded Major-General Smyth, R.A., as a member of the Ordnance Select Committee, as we anticipated.

The Governments of Victoria and New South Wales, having 50 converted Palliser 80-pounder guns mounted on their works at Melbourne and Sydney, have determined to try the new Palliser shot for these guns, to see if they can be made armour-piercing, as they now only fire common shell. These Governments have purchased a 6-inch compound plate, which will be fired at, on the return of Major-General Scratchley from Australia, with the new jacketed Palliser shot. The experiments are being conducted by the Ordnance committee. One of the new shot which had been rejected by Captain Edward Palliser for being badly chilled, was fired on Thursday at a 9-in. wrought-iron plate. The plate was merely placed erect, with two timber props to prevent it toppling over. When in this position, it was fired at by the 80-pounder gun, with 20 lbs. of pebble powder, at a range of 70 yards, and with a velocity of 1,400 feet. The ribbed and jacketed Palliser shot passed clean through the plate unbroken, and impressed itself on a slanting target in rear, leaving the impress of the ribs and body of the shot on the plate. The body of the shot was broken in half by this blow. The result was quite unexpected, and very interesting, in view of the reports of the continued progress made by Herr Krupp's steel shot and shell, which we are bound to equal, if we cannot excel.

It is hoped the armament of the Portsdown Hill Forts will be completed in the course of the ensuing summer. A Garrison Battery of Artillery is now stationed in the forts to expedite the work.

It has been found necessary to reinforce Portsmouth Garrison, which had already six service batteries of Garrison Artillery, by a seventh battery. This is caused by the batteries being much below their strength, and composed in a great measure of recruits. The work of mounting the heavy guns on the outer forts of the Spithead defences, viz., the Horse and No Man, will now be actively proceeded with. The inner or Spit Fort has been for some time complete in armament.

"The Finsbury Volunteers have been transferred from the Rifle Brigade to the King's Royal Rifle Corps." How long will this farce continue? What connection have the Metropolitan Volunteers with either regiment? Why, only a few weeks ago, the Adjutancy of one of them became vacant, and notwithstanding an application from a Captain of the regiment for the appointment, it was given to an officer from a distant district. So much for association and the "harmonious (w)hole!"

The Militia are at length to receive the valise equipment, but only "gradually." The Militia are clothed and equipped in a disgracefully shabby manner. If ever they are brigaded at Aldershot, they are made plainly to feel, by having no full-dress suit, by wearing great-coats 20 or 25 years old, and carrying knapsacks rather older, that they are considered very inferior to the Line. Several rifle regiments were made to cut a ridiculous figure, by wearing white belts with green uniforms during a great part of last year's training.

Considerable anxiety is felt at the difficulty of obtaining sufficient recruits for the Militia, but it does not seem to have occurred to the War Office that men who give 27 days yearly to the country at a mere nominal rate of pay deserve better treatment than Militiamen have hitherto received. The tailor, it is said, makes the man. If this is so, no wonder the Militia service is lacking in smartness, for certainly the tailoring department of the "old constitutional force" is a very weak point in its organisation. However, let us hope that better times are in store for the service, now that it has been welded with the Army into Lord Cardwell's "harmonious whole," of which so much was heard a few years back.

Lord Wolseley, the Adjutant-General, considers that nine hours' work a day for each company struck off duty is not too much to expect from the rank and file of the British Army. Nous verrons.

The Gazette announces the appointment of Captain F. T. Penton, 4th Dragoon Guards, to the Honorary Colonelcy of the 21st Middlesex Rifle Volunteers. This appointment may appear at first sight rather an extraordinary one; but, seeing that Captain Penton's father held a similar position for many years, and that his family are large landowners in the neighbourhood in which the Finsbury Volunteers have their head-quarters, the officer had clearly a claim to the appointment by right of inheritance, and the War Office is to be commended rather than censured for not having raised technical objections to the nomination which was made by the Lieutenant-Colonel of the regiment, in what he considered to be the interests of the Volunteer service.

Now-a-days, when so many officers have passed through Hythe, the abolition of musketry instruction will not be greatly felt by regiments, but the doing away with the Serjeant-Instructor is a very great mistake. A responsible non-commissioned officer, independent of any company, is an absolute necessity; and no doubt applications from commanding officers will be made for these Instructors to be reappointed.

Referring to the recent General Order, it may be instructive to those in authority to learn that in one regiment, not a hundred miles from Dover, there are not above sixty duty men; and the first company to be struck off duty for a six weeks' worrying at all sorts of drill numbers only eight files! And they tell us that we have built up a military system. It is a system, indeed!

Lord Truro has given notice that on Thursday next he intends "to call attention to the case of Surgeon-Major Thorburn, and to ask her Majesty's Government whether it is true that, notwithstanding a Court of Inquiry at Lucknow completely exonerated him from a charge of turf irregularity, the Commander-in-Chief in India held that, in his opinion, the same evidence confirmed a previous adverse decision of a Calcutta Racing Club, and ordered him to England, refusing to grant a court-martial; and whether, upon the matter being referred to the Military authorities at home, a court-martial was again refused, and Dr. Thorburn forced to retire, which presented him with a gratuity of £2,500, with the alternative of removal from the service; and whether any other acts of civil or military misconduct than that referred to were the real grounds upon which this determination was arrived at." It is to be hoped in the interest of the service that there may be no disposition shown to hush up this case, and that the matter may be thoroughly sifted.

The strength and general utility of the service-pattern "Wallace" entrenching tool, as proved by the numerous trials, and specially by the Egyptian Campaign, have led to its adoption by the Navy. The Admiralty have, through the War Office, ordered the manufacturers, Messrs. E. Lucas and Son, of Dronfield, to deliver 5,000 as soon as possible. Several of the Colonies have also ordered small quantities, with a view to eventually equipping their forces with it.

The debate in the House of Commons on the position assumed by the Government in regard to the claims advanced by Portugal to supreme rights and jurisdiction over the territory at the mouth and on the banks of the River Congo resulted in the adoption by the House of a resolution affirming "That, in the interests of civilisation and commerce in the South-west of Africa, this House is of opinion that no treaty should be made by her Majesty's Government affecting territories on or adjacent to the Congo that would compromise any engagements on which her Majesty's Government has heretofore entered, or that would not afford adequate securities to all the civilising and commercial agencies at work in those regions." We have, however, had a practical illustration in the "Boer Convention" of how the Government enforce engagements entered into by those who are at all likely to resist or resent interference, and to fight in earnest and shoot straight. Hence we can only look on the attitude of France and Portugal on the Congo with the greatest alarm, feeling convinced that the benefit of the work performed by Livingstone and Cameron is about to be reaped by foreigners, and a noble inheritance, the advantages of which it is impossible to over-estimate, lost to the nation. Stanley, supported by Belgium, is hardly a match for De Brazza, backed by France and French gunboats; and Portugal will, doubtless, further impede the progress of civilisation.

Captain Lord W. de la Poer Beresford may be expected soon in England, on a short leave of absence from his hard work as Military Secretary to the Governor-General.

The Cairo rumours are various. Major-General Dormer is to relieve Major-General Harman at Alexandria. The latter is to take up his home Staff appointment, as already announced, and Brigadier-General Arbuthnot will take over the Brigade at Abbassiyeh when Major-General Earle leaves to succeed General Whitmore at the Horse Guards.

In spite of the large amount to which the French war estimates have risen, we find that the French War Ministers are always asking for more money. The Progrès Militaire shows us that the soldier, when he goes on leave, receives only 1 franc 25 cents per diem, which is not sufficient to procure him two meals. The Minister hoped to be able to have this allowance raised to 2 francs (1s. 8d.); but it is feared that the Committee which scrutinises this budget will not sanction so great an increase, and that 1 franc 50 cents, or an increase of 2½d., is all that can be expected.

The Colossus, in dock at Portsmouth, is now having her armoured turrets fixed to her deck. The other ships in the new steam-basin are the ironclads Rupert, Devastation, and Dreadnought, the unarmoured ships Mercury and Bacchante, and two gunboats. The corvettes Active, Volage, Canada, and Cordelia are lying in the old steam-basin; the ironclad Triumph and the unarmoured frigates Shah and Inconstant are up the harbour, dismantled, waiting repair.

The surgeons of Haslar Hospital gave their third amateur dramatic entertainment, for the amusement of the patients, on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. The use of a vacant ward was sanctioned by Inspector-General Morgan, C.B., and a temporary stage was erected. The performances consisted of "Husbands to Order," by Maddison Morton; and "Puzzled," an original comedy by Surgeon Collins, under whose direction both pieces were produced with marked success, eliciting hearty laughter and applause. Miss Collins, Miss Hungerford, and Miss F. E. Hungerford played the ladies' parts most charmingly, the men's parts being taken by Surgeons Vasey, Collins, Johnston, Craig, Gunn, Lennox, and Hoskins, all of whom acquitted themselves very creditably. These praiseworthy attempts to break the monotony of hospital life amongst the patients are greatly appreciated by the convalescents.

The only step that will be taken this Session towards the new War Office and Admiralty will be a vote of £100,000 for the acquisition of lands and buildings, leaving a further sum of £65,000 to be voted next year, to complete the service under this head.

The reason why the Emperor of Germany found it necessary to make a change in the Ministry of Marine turns out to be, says the Hampshire Telegraph, "that Count von Moltke and Gen. von Stosch could not agree. The Field-Marshal holds the opinion that the German Army is of more importance to the Fatherland than is the Navy. Gen. von Stosch, on the other hand, is of opinion that the Navy is of quite as much, if not of greater, importance to Germany than is the Army. He, therefore, proceeded to create a Navy, and, as is universally admitted, succeeded in a most marked manner. But now came the question of finance. Field-Marshal von Moltke wanted all the available money for the Army. Gen. von Stosch insisted on the claims of the Navy being attended to. These claims Von Moltke thought exorbitant, while Von Stosch, on the other hand, was only astonished at his own moderation. He pointed to the vast strides made by German commerce since her flag had been properly represented abroad and her commercial interests protected in all quarters of the globe, and he argued that, colonies being necessary, to absorb German emigration, a navy was necessary to protect those colonies. But Count von Moltke pointed to the political situation on the continent of Europe, and carried the day. The Army got the money, and General von Stosch was told to stay his hand. On this, he determined to retire, and an officer of views not so pronounced, and holding opinions more in consonance with those of the Grand General Staff, has been selected to succeed to the post of Prussian Minister of Marine. This irritated Admiral Batsch, who, on learning the news, at once resigned his appointment of Commander-in-Chief at Kiel, and without waiting to know whether the King accepted the resignation, at once left for his private estate near Hamburg. The King of Prussia forthwith ordered him back to Kiel, and it having been forcibly conveyed to Admiral Batsch's mind that the Grosser Kurfürst incident was not forgotten, the wrath of the Admiral has given place to a spirit of repentance, and he has resumed his duties at Kiel. The Navy belongs to Prussia and is Royal, while the Army belongs to Germany and is Imperial. Hence, the Army is the senior service. General von Stosch desired to secure for the Prussian Navy in Germany the same position as is held by the Royal Navy in this country."

A Parliamentary paper has been issued showing the capital and income accounts of Greenwich Hospital for the year ending March 31, 1882. The capital held for the hospital on March 31, 1882, exhibits the following balances:—Government stock, £1,611,840 9s. 10d.; Indian Railway Stock and North-Eastern and Great Western Railways Debenture Stock, £766,340; Canadian four per cent. Guaranteed Bonds, £40,000; Indian Government four per cent. Debenture Bonds, £240,000; money on loan, £867,256 7s. 9d. We wonder what has become of all the old and priceless Queen-Anne plate?

Lewis's 2s Tea.—Send Postal Orders for 2s, and you will immediately receive, carriage free, delivered at your own house, 1lb. of Lewis's 2s Tea, neatly packed in a box; or, if you have tried Lewis's wonderful Tea, and you know its merits, you can order 6 lbs., 12 lbs., 20 lbs., 60 lbs., or 100 lbs. Lewis's have these quantities packed in boxes ready to send, carriage paid, to any part of the United Kingdom. All remittances must be made payable to Lewis and Co., Ranelagh Street, Liverpool.

FRENCH CRUISERS.

The Avenir Militaire has recently taken up the idea of building rapid cruisers, advocating their immediate construction with great warmth. It says that France has now an opportunity of once more becoming a great Naval Power (we consider that she is one), because the old type of war-ships has gone out of fashion, and because the nation which possessed the greatest number of those ships will suffer the most by the change. The writer refers to the uneasiness which this revolution has created in England to the doleful prognostics of Sir Thomas Symonds with regard to our Naval supremacy, and then complains that France has not done all that might have been accomplished with the money voted for the Navy, and that,—

> "She has neglected to follow the advice of the clever Naval architect who suggested steel ships, who built the Devastation, the best fighting vessel afloat, and who designed several other ships which have been too long on the stocks. The arsenals have not worked with sufficient activity; our resources are greater than those of our neighbours, for we have 26,000, as compared to 16,000 workmen [but few private yards], and our climate is more favourable than that of England. If the promises made to the Chamber when it voted the Budget of 1878 had been kept, we should have had in the Mediterranean last year, at the time of the Egyptian Expedition, a squadron stronger than that of England in ironclads of the best type and in heavy breech-loading guns. It is useless to regret . . . . . . the evil cannot be repaired; but at the moment when arrogant England deems herself authorised to oppose our civilising action and our commercial enterprises at every point of the globe, it behoves us to assure our country and our jealous rivals that we are determined henceforth to support our rights with energy, and to procure the means for so doing. England knows better than we do how vulnerable she is, depending for existence on corn which comes by sea from various parts of the world. As soon as she knows that we are in a position to cut off her supplies, and to stop her merchant vessels, which form 60 per cent. of the steamers and 37 per cent. of the sailing ships afloat, we shall find it much more easy to negotiate with her. . . . . . . What must we do? . . . . . . We have a sufficient number of fighting ironclads of the 1st class on the stocks; these must be finished as soon as possible."

The Avenir Militaire then directs attention to the arrangements made by England for arming her Merchant Marine in time of war, and turning the fast steamers now engaged in commerce into cruisers. After remarking that most of the sailors engaged on board these vessels are foreign vagabonds, while the French Government has at its disposal the whole maritime population of the Republic, the writer goes on to say:—

> "But there is a sad counterpoise to this advantage; we have not a single war cruiser afloat, not a single merchant steamer fulfilling the conditions enumerated above. . . . . . We have at Brest the Sfax, which was laid down a year ago, and which will be ready for sea in three or four years. The cruisers, more or less fast, which we possess, in wood or iron, are all liable to be burned or disabled by a shell."

This, and a good deal more, is to be found in the columns of the Avenir Militaire, which journal ought not to be so dissatisfied with a fleet which causes England so much uneasiness. Why the Avenir should allude to what France would have done at the time of the Egyptian expedition, had she had the ships afloat which she has on the stocks, is a mystery we cannot explain. We invited the French to join us in the expedition, and M. de Freycinet's Ministry was upset for desiring to send some Marines to look after the Suez Canal. Again, it was a well-recognised fact in France that if our campaign in Egypt had not been successfully conducted, Algeria and Tunis would have been all ablaze, and the French would probably have been driven from Africa. Then why these threats about bringing us to our knees, and starving us into submission? We might just as well write articles saying that France had best be quiet, for Germany would like to have the Champagne country, and Italy to win back Nice and Savoy, and that on the slightest provocation we shall be ready to aid in her further dismemberment. We may have no reason for apprehending any difficulty with France, but still we consider that the attention of our Admiralty cannot too often be called to articles such as the one of which we have given a brief sketch, for they indicate the feeling of the country, and the danger to which we might be exposed by one of those sudden convulsions which so often disturb the equanimity of our restless neighbours.

SPECTACLES v. BLINDNESS.—"Spectacles can only be perfectly adjusted by those having a thorough knowledge of the anatomy of the eye, combined with optical experience."—We have the highest medical authorities confirmed by daily experience, that imperfect glasses, together with the haphazard plan of selection generally employed by the mere vendor, is the cause of most cases of blindness and defective vision. Sir Julius Benedict writes:—"I have tried the principal opticians in London without success, but the spectacles you have adapted suit admirably. The clearness of your glasses as compared with others is really surprising." The Rev. Professor W. A. Hales, M.A. Cantab., 2 Minford Gardens, West Kensington Park, writes:—"The spectacles are perfect, and a most decided boon. I had occasion on Monday to write to Lord ——, and took the opportunity to mention your name and the wonderful power of your spectacles." Dr. Bird, Chelmsford, writes:—"I could not have believed it possible that my sight could have been so much improved and relieved at my age (82). I can now read the smallest type, although suffering from cataract on the right eye." Testimonials from Earl and Countess Lindsay; F. D. Dixon Hartland, Esq., M.P.; the Venerable Archdeacon Palmer, Clifton; Rev. Mother Abbess, St. Mary's Abbey, Mill Hill, Hendon; C. J. Alford, Esq., Gas Light and Coke Company, Horseferry Road, Westminster, &c. Mr. HENRY LAURANCE, F.S.S., Oculist Optician, 39 OLD BOND STREET, W. (late 3 Endsleigh Gardens, Euston Square), personally adapts his Improved Spectacles daily (Saturdays excepted), from 10 to 5. Special arrangements are made for invalids and others unable to wait on Mr. Laurance. Pamphlet, "Spectacles: their Use and Abuse," post free. City Branch, 6 Poultry, Cheapside.

LORD ALCESTER ON THE WAR.

Admiral Lord Alcester was entertained on Tuesday evening by the Worshipful Company of Cutlers, and was presented with the honorary freedom and livery of their ancient company, by Mr. Joseph Thorne, its master. After the ceremony, dinner was served in the great hall, the Master being supported by the guest of the evening, as well as by the Rev. Lord S. G. Osborne, Major-Gen. Alexander, Capt. C. F. Hotham, C.B., R.N., Capt. Alan B. Thomas, R.N., Com. Morison, Lieut. Colville, R.N., and other Naval officers. The Master gave the toast of the evening, "The health of their newly-made freeman and brother-liveryman, Admiral Lord Alcester," which having been drunk with three times three, Lord Alcester, who was loudly cheered, said:—"Our Master, in the kindest terms imaginable, has been pleased to allude to the success which accompanied the efforts of the Navy and my humble self during the recent operations in Egypt. But I will ask you one thing,—How was it possible not to succeed, with such a body of officers as I had, and many of whom I am glad to see here now? It was impossible, in fact, to fail. I may be allowed to speak also of the support we received from home. There was the country at one's back, and I knew that whatever we did, if it were done in a right spirit, and in an endeavour to maintain the honour of the country, the country would carry us through. There was opposition, as there must always be, in various shapes, in Parliament and in the country; but, as I said before, the country backed us, and the result was what you have seen. I may also give you another reason for our success. We had the honour of being associated with the finest army that I, with no small experience, have ever seen embarked for foreign service. That army had the advantage of having at its head the General of the age to carry us through, an officer whose merits I did not know for the first time, for he had been an ensign and I a commander in Burmah 30 years before. I knew who Sir Garnet Wolseley was, and I was confident that I could look to him for everything which I could possibly expect. Then, again, I may speak of the support we received from our superiors at home. There was nothing I could ask for which was not anticipated. Such was the character of the support I received from every one of my superiors—from the Admiralty, from the Transport Office, and elsewhere. Now, also, I can speak more freely of those with whom I was associated. There was a time—a very awkward one—when France, under the admirable management of M. de Freycinet, thought fit to back out. Of course, every nation has a right to its own policy. We thought we would not back out; and the support we did not receive France may regret, or may not. But no doubt there was a week before the force could be brought down the Suez Canal, in accordance with the plan arranged, when, if it had not been for the admirable management of my colleague, Sir Anthony Hoskins, I do not know what would have happened. At Suez there was one of the finest officers in the British Navy, Sir William Hewitt. At Port Said there was Sir Francis Sullivan, with a magnificent body of officers and men under his orders; and, lastly, there was my own squadron. I now take this opportunity—the first which has offered in England—to return my most sincere thanks to Capt. Hotham, Capt. Thomas, and Com. Morrison, and another young friend of mine whom I see here, (Lieut. the Hon. S. C. Colville, R.N.) I wish, indeed, to speak in the highest terms of all associated with me, both officers and men. Under these circumstances, I ask you again, gentlemen, is it difficult to account for the success attained by us? I thank you most sincerely and heartily for the great honour done me, and I will now only ask you to join me in a toast which I beg to propose in honour of my superior officer, Master Thorne, and to thank him for this magnificent banquet, and for the kindness he has shown in proposing my health."

OUR NAVAL BASE IN THE NORTH PACIFIC.

Major-Gen. Laurie, late Deputy-Adjutant-General of Militia in Canada, read a paper at the United Service Institution on the 6th inst., on "The Protection of our Naval Base in the Northern Pacific." Admiral Sir Edward Fanshawe, K.C.B., presided. The lecturer started by demonstrating the necessity for a strong squadron in the Northern Pacific, owing to the large trade relations we have in those seas. He spoke of the efforts Russia is making to strengthen her position out there, which must be for aggression, as she has no trade interests to protect. He next dwelt on the importance of a strong and well-fortified depôt whence the ships could draw supplies; pointed out that in Vancouver Island we possessed the only coalfields producing coal fit for steamers to use; also reminded his hearers that the Canadian Pacific Railway would be finished in 1885, and that its terminus must be protected. The present Naval yard at Esquimault is in a very indefensible condition, requiring strong works and a large garrison, and then the other interests alluded to would not be guarded. He advised the abandonment of the present Naval yard, and its establishment close to the railway terminus at Burrard Inlet, where it could be placed in a secure position, and whence Nanaimo coalfields could be guarded. The difficulties of navigation, owing to the occupation of San Juan by the United States, were fully considered, but the evidence of experts was relied upon to show that these difficulties were over-rated.

The gun with which an accident recently occurred on board her Majesty's ship Stork was one of the original Armstrong or "vent-piece" pattern guns, and was not one of the new breech-loaders. The gun in question was introduced into the Navy in 1859 as a boat or a field gun, and is called the "pinnace gun." It weighs 13 cwt. The accident occurred in consequence of the vent-piece not having been properly screwed up.

"TIME TRIES ALL THINGS."—Of the numerous preparations announced for promoting the growth of the hair few survive, even in name beyond a limited period, whilst ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, with an unparalleled reputation of more than 80 years, is still considered by the public to be the best and safest preserver and beautifier of the hair ever yet produced. They who prefer it can now have the oil of a golden colour, without in any way losing its beneficial effects. Sold everywhere. Sizes, 3s 6d, 7s, 10s 6d, and 21s.

WASTE OF NAVAL FUNDS.

SIR,—The following facts show up a little job which has walked into a good sum of the taxpayers' money. By the Admiralty Instructions, officers travelling on duty are allowed a certain quantity of baggage to be conveyed at the public expense. A scale is authorised according to relative rank, and this is rigidly adhered to when payments are made by the paymasters of her Majesty's ships, who would be charged by the Admiralty with the slightest sum paid in excess by error or oversight. A few months ago the Vivid was sent from Plymouth to Pembroke for the purpose of conveying the private effects of the present captain of the yard. The Vivid expended a large quantity of coal and stores. Many of your readers will remember that she had a very narrow escape from foundering off Mount's Bay. You may be assured that a very nice little bill was sent in for defects made good. Now, by the Admiralty Instructions, Capt. Chatfield was only entitled to have 26 cwt. of luggage conveyed at the public cost, and this could have been done at very small expense by goods train. According to the laws of equity and their Lordships' hard-and-fast rules, the value of the stores, wages, and defects should be imprest against the official who authorised such an improper use of the taxpayers' property for private purposes. If the Treasury auditors do their duty, the expenses of the vessel during her absence from Plymouth should be disallowed. I think there is very good ground for one of our Devonport Members to ask a question on this subject when Parliament meets. I fancy Captain Price, who knows the service, would work up a good case. A much worse case of wanton and improper expenditure of the Naval funds has just taken place. The Lively has just managed to crawl into Corcubion, disabled, and leaking in all her seams. Will some Member call for a return of the Lively's expenses, stores, and defects, from leaving England until she is reported ready for sea? Our friends the taxpayers will rather open their eyes. Lord John Hay is only entitled to have 40 cwt. of his baggage conveyed at the public expense. At least the Regulations say so; but with the Admiralty Lords the Regulations are idle forms, only to be enforced on Naval officers. My Lords look after themselves. The P. and O. steamer would have taken Lord John Hay and his staff to Malta for £15 per head, and a large amount of money would have been saved. Whatever the expense, the Navy has gained by his departure from Whitehall, for he is condemned in the Fleet as one of those who, when in office, allowed an honourable service to be insulted by civilian secretaries, and by encouraging the "spy" system has done a vast amount of mischief on board her Majesty's ships.—I am, &c., TAXPAYER.

ORIGIN OF "LANCE" AS APPLIED TO ACTING SERJEANTS.

SIR,—With reference to your suggestion, in your last issue, that some of your readers should send an explanation why the term "Lance" is used to designate acting serjeants, will you please insert the following? Like most of our military titles, it is taken from the French. The word "Lance" means a "portfire stick," derived from the French word "Lancinante" (shooting). In the French Army, during the 16th and 17th centuries, a company of infantry consisted of about equal proportions of pikemen and musketeers; the serjeants in charge of the latter were armed with a long weapon called a halberd, while the serjeants of pikemen only carried a short pike, which was fitted to receive a portfire. In those days percussion caps, and even the old hammer and flint combination, were not invented, the only method to ignite the powder-charge being by means of a lighted slow match. On the line of march the slow match was kept by each musketeer in his cartouche-box, for preservation from damp, but before going into action it was the duty of the lance (or portfire) serjeant, whose slow match was always kept lighted, to pass down the ranks and light each man's slow match. As this duty was not so important as that of directing the movements of the men, it would naturally devolve on the junior serjeants, who were thus called lance-serjeants, to distinguish them from platoon serjeants (also French). The improvements in small arms in time done away with the necessity for these duties, but the title "Lance" still remains; the Army, as is well known, being very conservative on these points. For instance, in the Royal Artillery, a proportion of portfires and slow match is still held on charge as part of the equipment of each fort, so as to be available in the event of the supply of friction tubes being exhausted by a long siege. Those of your readers who have done garrison duty in Gibraltar may have noticed that an artilleryman always mounts with the guard. His duty is to fire a loaded piece of ordnance (under the orders of the officer of the guard) at any Spanish guardacosta or revenue cutter, which, in the pursuit of smugglers, ventures within the limits of British waters, and he is still called the "linstock" gunner, that being the name of the instrument fixed in rear of the battery on which the slow match is suspended when in use.—I am, &c.,

March 20, 1883. MASTER GUNNER.

A general order directs that in future there will always be in each battalion serving in Great Britain, Ireland, or the Channel Islands, one company struck off all duties for one and a half month at a time, for the purpose of instruction under its own officers. In thus handing over to the officers commanding companies the responsible duty of instructing their own men in all they should know, the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief feels the utmost confidence in the zeal, ability, and tact they will bring to bear in carrying out this order, and he will in future estimate the fitness of company officers for promotion by the manner in which their companies are able to drill, to shoot, and perform outpost and reconnaissance duties, &c. It is suggested that lectures should be given by the officers to their men during this course of instruction.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT & PILLS.—As the seasons change, the climatic variations warn us all to be careful. Most especially is it incumbent on the aged, prone to bronchial attacks, outward ulcerations, and similar debilitating disorders, to have them removed, or worse consequences will follow. These remedies are their sheet anchors; on their powers all may confidently rely. The Ointment not simply puts their sores out of sight, but extirpates the source of mischief, extracts the corroding poison, and stimulates nature to fill up the ulcer with sound, healthy granulations, that will abide through life. Under this treatment, bad legs soon become sound, scorbutic skins cast off their scales, and scrofulous sores cease to annoy. Such hope for the diseased was unknown in former days.

PATENT
GERMAN MOSS LITTER.

This Litter is specially prepared from a moss-peat found in Germany, and introduced into this country by the Patentee, Dr. VERSMANN, Ph.D. After a most severe and extensive trial in public and private stables, cowsheds, and kennels, it is pronounced by the highest practical and scientific authorities to be the best and cheapest litter known.

ITS ADVANTAGES ARE:

1. Cheapness, it being not more than one-half the cost of straw.
2. Absorptiveness, as absorbing all the urine, and rendering drains and flushing of stables unnecessary.
3. Prevention of decomposition and generation of bad odours.
4. Affording an excellent soft and elastic bed, particularly agreeable and beneficial to the feet and limbs of horses.
5. Horses do not eat it as they do straw litter. therefore they do not require to be racked up or muzzled to prevent indigestion or broken wind.
6. It is easily managed in the stable, and does not soil or stain horses.
7. It has a wonderful influence on the growth of the hoofs and in maintaining the feet in health.
8. It is extremely portable, being compressed into bales weighing each about 3 cwt., ¾ cwt. to 1 cwt. being sufficient to litter a horse for a month or six weeks.
9. It is not inflammable, and therefore offers but little danger from fire.
10. It is essentially a sanitary litter.
11. The manure is much more valuable than that of straw, and occupies considerably less space.

MILITARY EDUCATION, GERMANY.—Colonel BERDOE WILKINSON, late R.E., formerly in charge of the Ordnance Survey in Ireland, and Lieutenant-Colonel WILKINSON SHAW, M.A. (Staff College), late Garrison-Instructor at Aldershot, prepare Candidates for Sandhurst and Woolwich, and for Line Commissions through the Militia.

University Candidates for Sandhurst are received as non-resident pupils. In this competition two candidates (the only ones sent up) have passed into Sandhurst during the past year; Mr. W. A. Grant taking fourth place in July, and Mr. G. Barton-Smith second place in December.

In addition to the University candidate, two other pupils passed on the general list at the recent Sandhurst Examination,—Mr. C. D. Radcliffe (tenth place) and Mr. H. Marwood.

Mr. B. Smith, on this occasion, made the highest score in Mathematics, and Mr. Radcliffe highest marks in German, as well as second highest in Freehand Drawing, out of 440 candidates up for Examination.

MILITIA COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION.

The standard originally fixed for this Examination having been much raised in September, 1881, no results previously gained should be taken into account in considering the successes obtained by Militia pupils. Since the date named, there have been three competitions. At these trials Colonel WILKINSON and Lieutenant-Colonel SHAW have secured 24 COMMISSIONS for their pupils, although they have only prepared and sent up a very limited number for Examination. The names of all successful pupils have already been published.

Also, at the October Literary Examination, Lieut. C. J. Stanton took 4th place on the list.

The results obtained at other Examinations bring the general score up to FORTY-EIGHT SUCCESSES, achieved by pupils in the last 16 months; during that period the number of pupils on the strength of the establishment, resident and non-resident, has always been limited to 60.—Address, DARMSTADT, GERMANY.

MILITIA COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION ONLY.—A Few Candidates desiring special individual attention are Prepared by Major COWPER, assisted by an Officer of equal experience, who has taken high honours in Fortification, Surveying, &c. At the last Four Examinations (the average number sent up for each being between 3 and 4), Pupils passed at their first trial 1st, 10th, 21st, 30th, 33rd, 34th, and 37th on the List.—10 Clifton Villas, Maida Hill, London, W.

The next Term will commence Jaunary 3, 1883.

MILITARY COMPETITIVE for MILITIA OFFICERS.—The Rev. A. PRITCHARD, who is assisted by a retired Field Officer of 8 years' experience as a Garrison Instructor, has, during the year 1882, gained five Commissions with the 14 Candidates who went up from him.

LIEUTENANTS of MILITIA desirous of competing for Line Commissions can be received by the Rev. WALTER BAKER, M.A., at Batcombe Rectory, Evercreech, Bath. They will be thoroughly prepared in all Military Subjects by Major Dickens (late 11th Foot), Staff-College Graduate, formerly Assistant Royal Engineer, S.E. District, and Colonel Palmer, late R.A., formerly Instructor at the R.M.A., Woolwich, and two of whose pupils obtained special mention from the Examiners at the last September Examination.

Great individual attention is given, as few pupils are taken, and each comes under actual vivâ voce instruction for 6½ hours a day. Since the introduction of the Military Competitive, out of Thirty-nine Lieutenants of Militia sent up, Twenty-four have been successful, several taking high places in the list. There are opportunities for healthy country amusements and games, a cricket and football ground, lawn-tennis courts (grass and asphalte), a private billiard-room, &c., and in all other respects a liberal and gentleman's establishment is kept.

A Large Staff of Experienced Tutors, all resident, assist in preparing for the Qualifying Examinations, and for the Sandhurst and Woolwich Competitions.

"A pleasant record of an interesting life......It would be impossible to give any notion here of the unceasing activity of mind which gives life to every page of this book; nor can we even hint at the number of charming little mechanical little 'dodges' contrived for all manner of purposes by Mr. Nasmyth in his odd moments. Those who take no interest in such matters—and we think they are to be pitied—will find much pleasant matter in Mr. Nasmyth's record of passing scenes and events; and we can congratulate him on having produced a well-written account of a most interesting life."—Saturday Review.

A JOURNAL of a LADY'S TRAVELS ROUND the WORLD, including Visits to Japan, Thibet, Yarkand, Kashmir, Java, the Straits of Malacca, Vancouver's Island, &c. By F. D. BRIDGES.

"Bright, vivacious, sparkling, the book is, and well fitted to interest and amuse. But it is far more than that; it is comprehensively wise and tolerant, and should do much to inspire in the minds of its readers a wider humanity......We can conscientiously say that we have not for several years had a more delightful volume of travel from a lady's hand; and this we write with the fullest recollection of the racy and instructive works that have been given us by Mrs. Brassey, Miss Gordon Cumming, and Miss Isabella Bird."—Nonconformist.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE. CHLORODYNE.

Dear Sir,—We embrace this opportunity of congratulating you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine, Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne, has earned for itself, not only in Hindostan, but all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported into the country, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.
Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff), discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. Gibbon, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states:—"Two doses completely cured me of Diarrhœa."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of

COUGHS, ASTHMA, COLDS,
BRONCHITIS,
EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC,
PALPITATION, HYSTERIA, and is the true Palliative in
NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER,
TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.
GREAT SPECIFIC for
DIARRHŒA,
CHOLERA, DYSENTERY.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.
The immense sale of this remedy has given rise to many unscrupulous imitations.

N.B.—Every bottle of genuine Chlorodyne bears on the Government stamp the name of the inventor,

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE.

Army Service Corps—Head Quarters, Winchester House, St. James's Square, S.W.

The opening dinner of the patrons and committee of the Vine Club and their friends took place on Monday evening, April 2, Lord Robert Brudenell-Bruce in the chair. It was mentioned that at the committee meeting held before the dinner, no less than 137 candidates were up for election, and 101 of them were elected as members, although only five days had elapsed since the last meeting.

On the occasion of the presentation to Lord Wolseley and Lord Alcester at the Guildhall on Wednesday, April 11, the library will be used as a reception-room, and detachments of the City of London Rifles and the Naval Volunteers will probably form the guards of honour. Invitations to the Lord Mayor's banquet at the Mansion House in the evening, to meet Lord Wolseley and Lord Alcester, have been accepted by the Duke of Cambridge, Mr. Childers (Chancellor of the Exchequer), Major-Gen. Drury-Lowe, Gen. Sir G. Willis, Sir H. Keppel (Admiral of the Fleet), Gen. Sir E. A. Whitmore, Admiral Brandreth, Lord Sandhurst, Admiral Sir A. Hoskins, Col. Sir S. R. Buller, V.C., C.B., Major-Gen. Sir A. Clarke, Major-Gen. Blake, Col. Sir Owen Lanyon, Col. the Hon. P. Methuen, Sir J. Stokes, &c.

Colburn's United Service Magazine.—A very excellent article on the "Money's Worth in Our Army" occupies the leading position in the current number of this oldest Naval and Military magazine. Commencing with a remark of Mr. Illingworth's, that "We do not get the full value for the money spent on our Army," the writer (who, we believe, is also the editor) goes on quietly and expressively to show that there is a good deal of truth in the assertion, pointing out very truly that the real Commander-in-Chief is neither the Duke of Cambridge nor the Marquis of Hartington, but some civilian or clerk who owes his position to political more than practical considerations. In the expectation of a perpetual peace, no attempt is ever made to prepare for war, the consequence being that when only a small one breaks out, the loss at first is nearly always on our side heavy. The suggestions or remonstrances of Generals and of other officers in authority, are replied to by civilians, who, knowing next to nothing about the matter in discussion, settle it in a dozen words by letter. We shall watch with interest the continuation of this important subject in the following numbers. "The Navies of the World" is another paper which will repay perusal; and the next article, the "Historical Records of the Household Cavalry," will be read with interest. A new feature introduced in this number, one which will prove of great advantage in the future, is a "Record of Naval and Military Events." This begins with January 1, and is continued until March 19, 1883, containing in a few pages a vast amount of valuable information.

The Nineteenth Century, for April, does not contain any article connected with the services.

The United Service, for April, opens with a biographical sketch of Field-Marshal Suvaroff, by David Graham Odel. It is followed by "A Comparison of Our System of Artillery Organisation and Administration with Those of Foreign Armies," contributed by Major Sanger, U.S.A. This instalment treats of a highly important subject,—"The Artillery Schools."

There is a good deal of variety in the new number of The National Review, but it seems a pity to devote at least a dozen pages to a subject which can scarcely prove attractive to half that number of readers. If the writer of "Our Critics" thinks he will cause as great a sensation as was caused some fifty years ago by "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers," he will be considerably disappointed. It seems what schoolboys vulgarly call a "cheeky thing," to introduce so much rubbish into the pages of a periodical which deserves a far different kind of consideration.

Although there is no particularly striking feature in the April number of Blackwood, it is quite up to the average. The opening pages of a new serial promise highly, and in all probability "The Millionaire" will prove as attractive a story as "The Ladies Lindores" has done. The latter is on the eve of conclusion, but still there is much to be managed, and no little curiosity exists as to how far Mrs. Oliphant will succeed in securing a graceful exit for each of her characters. There can be no doubt that "Old Rolls" is on the horns of a dilemma, and he most eloquently expresses his own knowledge of the fact. The only one as yet who has spoken his adieux is the pleasant little Marquis,—a well-drawn character, though a wee bit over-done. "Fleurette" is a charming though sad story, which will attract many admirers.

The War Office has decided to give the newly-invented repeating-rifle an exhaustive trial at Aldershot, at the Curragh, and the School of Musketry.

The following district order was promulgated at Portsmouth on Monday:—Lieut.-Col. W. R. Lascelles, Rifle Brigade, to be Assist.-Adjt. and Qrmr.-Gen. Southern District, vice Col. Bray, whose period of staff service has expired.

The Times announces that "The head-quarters of the Emperor and his foreign guests during the manœuvres of the German Army Corps this autumn will be at Homburg, which in that season is generally crowded with English visitors. The Prince of Wales and Prince Rudolf of Austria will be present. The 11th is the strongest corps in the Imperial Army, the Hesse-Darmstadt division being linked with the two divisions supplied by Hesse-Nassau, the whole furnishing a force of about 42 battalions, 30 squadrons, and 108 guns. The Emperor last manœuvred the Hessian troops in 1878, before he had completely recovered from the wounds inflicted upon him by Nobiling, and with his arm still sustained in a sling. It is expected that this year's manœuvres near Homburg, which promise to be more than usually brilliant, will commence about September 20."

Epps's Cocoa.—Grateful and Comforting.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in packets, labelled—"James Epps and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London."—Also makers of Epps's Chocolate Essence.

Gen. E. Seager died at Scarborough on Friday, aged 71. He enlisted in the Army in 1832, and after serving for nine years in the ranks, he was gazetted, in 1841, to a cornetcy in the 8th Hussars, obtained a lieutenancy in 1843, and was promoted to a captaincy in 1854. He served in the Eastern Campaign up to Feb. 1855, with the 8th Hussars, taking part in the battles of Alma, Balaklava, and Inkerman, and also in the siege of Sebastopol. In June, 1855, he was appointed assistant-military secretary to Major-Gen. Lord William Paulet, commanding on the Bosphorus, and he continued to act in the same capacity to Sir Henry Storks until the end of the Russian War. For his services in the Crimea, he received the medal with four clasps, and the 5th Class of the Medjidie and the Turkish medal. In 1858-59, he served in Central India, and was present at the action of Boordah. He was afterwards for some time employed as inspecting officer of the Yeomanry Cavalry Forces in Great Britain. He obtained the rank of lieut.-col. in 1859, and was promoted to a colonelcy in 1864. In 1877, he was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath, and he retired from the Army in 1881, with the rank of lieut.-gen.

Com. Robert Amyett Newman, R.N., died on April 1, aged 90. This gallant veteran officer entered the Navy in 1803, and was present in the Courageux at the capture of the French West India Islands in that year. He was the last surviving officer of the flying squadron of the Trafalgar Fleet, under the command of Admiral Sir Richard Strachan, Bart., who, on Nov. 4, 1805, captured off Ferrol Admiral Dumanoir's French Squadron, which a fortnight before had escaped from the battle of Trafalgar. Com. Newman was likewise present at the Walcheren Expedition, &c., in 1809. During Bonaparte's incarceration at St. Helena he was attached to the guardship stationed there, and on one occasion received the honour of an interview with the Emperor. He also saw much service during the American War.

Gen. von Hobe Pasha, one of the German officers who went to Constantinople last year for the purpose of reforming the Turkish Army, has been appointed an aide-de-camp of the Sultan and chief master of the horse.

"Sapo Carbonis Detergens" is a physician's name for a remedy prescribed for the past quarter of a century for every variety of skin disease. The public have found that as a preventive of small-pox, scarlet fever, and measles, it is unequalled. See that the Latin name described above, and the words "Wright, Southwark," are on each wrapper, and branded on each tablet, without which none is genuine.

NAVAL NOTES.

At the last periodical meeting of the general committee of management of the Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Society, held at its central office, Hibernia Chambers, London Bridge—there being present Capt. the Hon. Francis Maude, R.N., in the chair, Lord Ashley, Admiral Sir Claude Buckle, K.C.B., Capts. V. Budd, J. J. Holdsworth, D. Mainland, T. C. Porteous, and Col. W. Stuart, with the secretary, Mr. W. R. Buck—the usual half-yearly extra issues of charitable relief for the most necessitous dependants of deceased mariners, &c., were formally sanctioned to poverty-stricken recipients, numbering, on this occasion, 618 widows and 967 orphans respectively. Approval was also given to the allotment of the society's special marine aneroid barometers (as placed at the committee's disposal, through the philanthropic gifts of various private and public donors, "To help fishermen to save their own lives, and encourage them in saving the lives of others") in six individual instances, and to 47 fishing stations, to meet pressing local needs; while the silver medal of the institution was likewise awarded in 14 cases of exceptionally heroic exertions, at great personal risk, on the part of master mariners or their crews, in rescuing life from shipwrecks on the high seas during the more recent gales. The completed statistics of the society's work and operations during the past year, 1882, as carried out at home, abroad, and in the colonies, through its 1,200 honorary agencies, showed that urgent aid and relief had been extended to a total of 13,145 shipwrecked persons and widows or orphans, with other variously distressed sufferers amongst the seafaring classes. In these figures for the year were comprised a more than ordinarily large number of sad claims from Ireland, in relation to which it was noteworthy that the society's local chief representative and honorary agent-general (Mr. Thomas F. Brady, H.M.'s Inspector of Irish Fisheries) had on their behalf specially reported the whole maritime community as being, without exception, conspicuous for their complete holding aloof from all participation in the unfortunate course of events in that country. With respect to the society's later operations during the current year, the demands upon its organisation and resources from nearly all parts of the coasts of the United Kingdom generally had, owing to recurrent storms, been unprecedentedly excessive.

Admiral Lord Alcester was entertained at dinner on Friday evening by Vice-Admiral E. B. Rice, C.B., Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, at his official residence, Sheerness, a number of the Naval and Military officers of Chatham and Sheerness being invited to meet his lordship. In the morning his lordship inspected the vessels in the steam basin at the dockyard which are preparing for sea, including the Satellite, Caroline, Alecto, and Frolic.

It is understood at Chatham that a large ironclad will be selected to take the place of the Duncan as flagship of the Vice-Admiral Commanding-in-Chief at the Nore, the latter ship being altogether unsuited for the particular service on which she has been for so many years employed. The Ajax, now in the steam basin at Chatham, attached to the Steam Reserve at that port, will, it is believed, supersede the Duncan as the flagship at the Nore.

The Trent has left the Nore for the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, where she is to be employed for surveying duties in the Thames. She is placed under the temporary command of Chief Officer W. J. Blakey, of the Wildfire, during the time she is engaged on surveying duties.

The trial trip of the Merlin took place in the Channel, off Plymouth, on Monday. The speed attained was 10 knots. The trial was considered satisfactory. The Merlin is to prepare immediately for commission.

The Edinburgh arrived in Portsmouth Harbour on Monday morning. She left Pembroke under convoy of the Valorous at 10.45 on Saturday morning, under easy steam, the engines going at from 40 to 50 revolutions. The machinery was gradually worked up to and maintained at from 70 to 75 revolutions a minute, as many as 80 being occasionally recorded. The Valorous was soon left far behind. The Start was passed an hour after the ships parted company, Spithead being reached at 5 o'clock on Sunday afternoon. The engines worked well, and a mean speed of about 14 knots was realised. Mr. Philip Watts, assistant-constructor at the Admiralty, made careful observations as to her rolling during the passage.

The Triumph, in her coming refit at Portsmouth, is to have no alterations made in her armament. She will, therefore, carry during her next commission ten 9-inch 12-ton, four 64-pounders, two 8-cwt., and one 6-cwt. muzzle-loader guns, six 20-pounder breech-loaders, and ten Nordenfelt machine-guns.

Two of the departments at Chatham Dockyard were permanently closed on Monday, by order of the Admiralty. The more important of the two was that used for the remanufacture of iron sent from the other dockyards, and which employed about 80 men. The work will now be done by contract, and the men who have been employed at the work have been discharged, but work of another description will be found for them in other parts of the yard. The other department which is closed is that which has been used for the manufacture of lead. This building is situated near Melville Hospital. The supply of lead will be contracted for. It is a fact, somewhat strange, but nevertheless true and significant, that the departments closed by the present Government are invariably those which increase the contracting powers of the Administration, while decreasing the self-supporting resources of the Navy. From day to day the service is becoming more and more dependent on private manufacturing firms, and in due proportion less reliable and efficient in its matériel.

The Shannon, having had a thorough repair of her machinery at Devonport, was taken into the Channel on Saturday for a six hours' full-power trial. During the run, the mean pressure in the boilers was 52 lb., the minimum vacuum in the condensers 25·6 in., the mean revolutions a minute 66·6. The speed indicated by the patent log was 12·3 knots. The trial was considered satisfactory. The Shannon is to be attached to the Coastguard service.

"Justice" writes:—"I think military examinations have gone a little too far. I know an officer who has been denied promotion because while on active service he failed to qualify for promotion. He went up for the examination under most exceptional circumstances, and was then qualified in every subject, but did not get the aggregate number of points to qualify. The officer I refer to has some practical experience, for he has at least two medals. He probably was examined by some one who never saw or never heard a shot fired, and because he gave practical answers instead of theoretical he was 'ploughed.' I call it an abuse, and surely some small allowance might be made to officers who on active service try and cope with men fresh from garrison instruction. The examiners seem to look upon all alike, and the result is that officers who serve their country are passed over by those who prefer staying at home."

The Standard says:—"A Committee will be assembled at the War Office during the week to consider the present system of military sketching, &c., under the presidency of Major-Gen. Creagh-Osborne, Commandant Staff College. Col. Richards, from the Staff College, and Capts. Roberts, R.A., and Boyle, R.E., from Woolwich and Chatham respectively, will attend to give evidence."

STIMULANTS and insufficient amount of exercise frequently derange the liver. ENO'S FRUIT SALT is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use ENO'S FRUIT SALT.—"All our customers for ENO'S FRUIT SALT would not be without it upon any consideration, they having received so much benefit from it.—WOOD BROTHERS, Chemists, Jersey, 1878." CAUTION.—Legal Rights are protected in every Civilised Country. Examine each bottle, and see the capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it, you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d. Directions in Sixteen Languages, how to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at ENO'S FRUIT SALT WORKS, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. ENO'S Patent.

The Carl Rosa Opera season at DRURY LANE continues to greatly interest the musical public. "Il Trovatore" on Tuesday, with Madame Valleria's appearance as Leonora, has been a prominent feature of the week's programme, which has besides included a new opera written by Franz Hueffer, and composed by A. C. Mackenzie, entitled "Colomba." "Fidelio" was given for the last time on Friday, and "Maritana" is represented this evening, introducing Miss Amy Sherwin as the heroine. The new opera of "Esmeralda" was most warmly welcomed on repetition, and the general completeness of the orchestra and the excellence of the vocal interpretation claim in every instance the fullest acknowledgment.

The new play, entitled "Bondage," adapted from a drama produced a few years since at the Odéon, Paris, is not likely to encourage hopes of a financial success attending Miss Hilda Hilton's management of the OPERA COMIQUE in the Strand. The gloomy subject is not altogether new to the stage, and it has not been skilfully handled by the adapters. A financier has unconsciously engaged his first wife as governess to a little girl of whom he has become the father through a bigamous marriage, and he commits suicide to escape the consequences of discovery. Miss Hilda Hilton works hard to give tragic importance to the awkwardly situated governess, Miss Nelly Bromley represents the widow who has never been a wife, and Mr. Charles Kelly can do little with all his acknowledged talent to make an impressive character of the bigamist. There is comedy of a grim kind in the younger Mr. William Farren's representation of a suspicious partner in the firm of L'Estrange and Co., and Miss Agnes Thomas and Mr. Benn agreeably play two of the subordinate characters.

A lively vaudeville, called, "A Private Wire," furnished by MM. Felix and Desprez, with music composed by Mr. Percy Reeve, now precedes the comic fairy opera of "Iolanthe" at the SAVOY. A slight plot illustrates the misapprehensions which take place in a family circle from the use of a telephone; and with Miss Brandram, Miss Sybil Grey, Mr. Rowan, and Mr. Eric Lewis to serve as the interpreters of the pleasing melodies introduced, a favourable reception has been awarded. "Iolanthe" continues its successful career, and no immediate change of programme seems likely.

The GLOBE THEATRE will be reopened this evening with Mr. Robert Buchanan's new drama, called, "Lady Clare," a romantic play, illustrating phases of modern society. The cast includes Miss Ada Cavendish, Miss Jay, Miss Lydia Cowell, Miss Carlotta Leclercq, and Mr. Horace Wigan.

The benefit for Mr. Royce, who was so suddenly incapacitated by paralysis from continuing his profession, will take place at the GAIETY THEATRE early in May, under the patronage of the Prince of Wales.

When the Carl Rosa opera season has terminated at DRURY LANE THEATRE, Mr. Augustus Harris will revive the pictorial drama of "Youth," with a reproduction of the military effects on a more extensive scale.

The final night of "Caste," at the HAYMARKET THEATRE, is now fixed to be Friday, April 13, when Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft will act for the last time their original parts of Captain Hawtree and Polly Eccles; Mr. Hare appearing, for this occasion only, in his old character of Sam Gerridge. A few farewell performances of Mr. T. W. Robertson's comedy of "School" will afterwards be given.

Mr. Clifford Harrison gave, last Saturday evening, by special desire, his musical and dramatic recitals at Sandringham, in the presence of the Prince and Princess of Wales and a distinguished audience.

Mr. Whitworth, M.P., and Mr. Alderman Connolly waited upon Lord Wolseley at the War Office on the 30th ult., and presented him with the freedom of Drogheda, in compliance with a resolution passed by the town council.

Major-Gen. Sayer, lately in command of the Belfast District, who has been selected to succeed Lieut.-Gen. Pakenham, arrived at Plymouth on Sunday morning by the London mail train, and at once drove to the Royal Hotel, Devonport, where he will remain until Government House is prepared for his reception.

A return just issued shows the ages and length of service of the non-commissioned officers and men of the British cavalry and infantry present at the action of Tel-el-Kebir. The total number engaged (exclusive of two companies of the 2nd Batn. Seaforth Highlanders) was 10,652; of these, 220 of the Line had volunteered or been transferred, while 1,293 were "reserve men;" 25 of the soldiers were under 18 years of age, 31 under 20, and 1,025 under 21; 398 men had seen less than one year's service.

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL—ITS UNEQUALLED EFFICACY IN CONSUMPTION.—Dr. Sinclair Coghill, Physician to the Royal National Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest, Ventnor, writes:—"For many years I have, in private practice, exclusively prescribed the Cod Liver Oil of Dr. de Jongh, from a large and intimate experience of its superiority as a remedial agent in appropriate cases, to other cod liver oils ignorantly lauded on account of their comparative tastelessness and lightness of colour. More recently I have had, in the Royal National Hospital for Consumption here, an opportunity of instituting a more extensive and systematic comparison, and I have convinced myself that in tubercular and the various forms of strumous disease, Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other cod liver oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other cod liver oil, that Dr. de Jongh's Oil was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit. Dr. de Jongh's Oil is now the only cod liver oil used in the Royal National Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest." Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil is sold only in capsuled imperial half-pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s; by all chemists. Sole Consignees, Ansar, Harford, and Co., 77 Strand, London.

THE General Orders published on April 1 contain the details of a new system of instruction in all kinds of Military duties, to commence on the very day of their publication. These details were, however, "specially issued" on March 29; otherwise, it would have been absolutely impossible to begin the new course on the day named. In describing these General Orders and commenting on them, we shall not take the various items in the succession in which they occur; because we wish to present their more important features to our readers in a concise and comprehensible form. To follow the course of these details seriatim, as they appear in the Army List, would defeat that object, and waste time that may be valuable. It might at first be supposed, from the entire absence of any verbal limitation to "Line battalions," that the new system was to be applied to the Militia. But, apart from the impossibility of carrying it out in any Militia battalion not permanently embodied, we learn quite incidentally that it is not intended for those portions of the Territorial regiments. For the purposes of the new course of instruction, the year is divided into eight periods of a month and a half each; and the companies of every battalion at home are to be in succession struck off all regimental and other duties for one of these periods. During this time, they are to be handed over to their own officers for a course of instruction in drill of all kinds,—shooting, outpost duties, reconnaissance, &c. No leave of absence or furlough, except under the most urgent circumstances, is to be granted to any one belonging to a company undergoing this course of conversion into military "Admirable Crichtons." During the whole six weeks, more or less, drill and out-door instruction are to occupy every available hour of fine weather, and wet days are to be devoted to in-door instruction and lectures. When this course is over, the performances of the several companies are to be compared, and the efficiency of the company officers is to be measured by the proficiency of their men. But what chance has a company that shoots during the fogs and frost and snow and gales of winter of making as good scores as one that shoots in the genial months of summer, or the clear stillness of autumn? It is ordered, by way of compensation, that a company that shoots in winter is to shoot in summer the following year. But that is very poor consolation, because when men are passed so quickly through the military mill, and when wholesale transfers and extensive volunteering are so frequent, the personal identity of a company is soon changed. No allowance is made for those undoubted and by no means uncommon cases of a good and valuable working officer who cannot lecture in a style likely to edify any one, and who would be painfully and evidently conscious that he was appearing to such a disadvantage before his men as must tend to lessen his influence. There are many gallant and capable leaders who cannot extemporise the shortest address without hesitating and blundering, and who cannot even read the words of others clearly and impressively. The first alteration announced under the heading "Musketry," is that "all Regimental Instructors and Serjeant-Instructors of Musketry will be abolished," (not their offices, but themselves, poor fellows!) on March 31, the day before the date of the General Order! The Serjeant-Instructors, though "abolished," will be permitted to retain their rank and pay until otherwise provided for,—that is, we presume, otherwise than by abolition. From April 1, the instruction in shooting will be confided to the company officers and non-commissioned officers. The number of rounds to be fired annually by the "trained soldier," whether cavalry or infantry, is increased to 160. Cavalry soldiers have special arms to use and special duties to learn and to practise, while for infantry soldiers the effective use of the rifle is of paramount importance; yet here we find that the same number of rounds are allotted to men of both these arms of the service, without any reason being given,—because, perhaps, there was none to give. Ten rounds will be fired "individually," at each of eight distances from 150 to 200 yards. Twenty rounds will be expended in volleys, five at 300 yards in close order, and five at each of the other distances, 400, 500, and 800 yards, in extended order. Ten rounds will be used in "independent firing." In what is called the second part of the annual course, 50 rounds will be expended in various, and varying, practices, including the extravagant number of 10 rounds for match-shooting or private practice. Among the exercises in the second part, we find shooting at a "figure-target," 6 ft. by 2 ft. A diagram shows the part of the target which is blackened, to represent about the portion that would be covered by a man. When firing at this target, at distances between 285 and 140 yards, the sight for 100 only is to be used, and the aim is to be taken in every case in a line with the middle of the head of the figure, that is, about 6 in. below the top of the target. From 285 to 240, the legs should be struck; from 240 to 180, the body; and from 180 to 140 the head. Those shots only which strike the parts that ought to be hit at each particular distance will be counted. This would be reasonable if it were not followed by the startling addition that "all ricochets will count!" A premium is here clearly offered for bad shooting, even if we assume, in opposition to the terms of the order, that ricochets, as well as direct hits, will not count, unless they strike the parts that ought to be hit. If a man aim a little too high or too low, and so hit the target in the wrong place, he will get no marks; but if he should "bob" nervously, or drop the muzzle of his rifle so that his bullet may strike the ground far in front of the target, and then in its rebound chance to hit the right part of the figure, he will get marks for good shooting, instead of extra drill for unsteadiness. It may be said that ricochets count against an enemy; but this would apply equally to the rest of the course of shooting to which the same hap-hazard rule might be applied. Besides, the chance of hitting by ricochet depends mainly on the nature of the ground in front of the target. It is calculated that, allowing for Sundays and wet days, 22 mornings and 22 afternoons in each calendar month will be available for target practice. An estimate which provides for only four wet days in a month, and makes no allowance for fogs and gales, must surely be founded on the experience of a climate far more equable than ours. One paragraph seems so amusing, that we must quote it verbatim:—"In order that General and other officers may acquire a practical knowledge of the use and value of the various sorts of musketry fire, and of their application in the field, 1,200 rounds per battalion, and 800 rounds per regiment of Cavalry, may be annually drawn by order of any General Officer commanding a district or station, to enable him to carry out any experimental-fire tactics he may wish to practise." A General Officer who can acquire a practical knowledge of the use and value of the various sorts of musketry fire by seeing his men fire two shots apiece must be a transcendent military genius. On disentangling the rules for the instruction of recruits from other subjects with which they are needlessly involved, we find that recruits are to be drilled at Regimental Depôts for three months, as a general rule; that they are to be sent from the Depôts on the precise day on which one of the periods begins with the Home Battalion they are to join; and that on their arrival they are all to be posted to one company. It is hoped that their being all posted to one company may facilitate their musketry training, which will be conducted not according to, but "under the Musketry Regulations." The conditions according to which prizes are to be gained for good shooting are complicated beyond any before laid down. We notice that, for some inscrutable reason, the corporals and paid lance-corporals are to compete for a prize among themselves, while the serjeants are not specially mentioned. We are also told that "the daily work of a battalion on a range should be divided into two daily periods,"—whatever that may mean. If care has been taken in the composition of these General Orders, we have failed to discover any traces of it. The several subjects are mixed, and the paragraphs are placed without any regard to clearness. The inaccuracies and ambiguities of expression are too numerous to be noticed. The system laid down seems crude and ill-considered, and requiring extensive modifications. We hope it will soon be altered, notwithstanding the finality indicated by the frequent occurrence of the expression "in future." It is one more instance of hasty legislation, and its date is unfortunately suggestive.

THE Egyptian who reads the Times—there are some Egyptians who do—might prepare a very just remonstrance against the views expressed by the leading journal respecting the necessity of a permanent subjugation of his country, founded on an analysis of the subject set forth in the columns of our contemporary in relation to England itself. The sweeping indictment against the whole Egyptian nation which the Times has filed, is meant to secure a verdict in favour of a permanent military occupation of Egypt by a British Army, at the very moment that the other end of the African continent is abandoned to chaos. "Every department of the State in Egypt is rotten, and there is no health in it; but if a British Army is in garrison at Cairo and Alexandria, peace, plenty, and purity will prevail along the Valley of the Nile, the Fellaheen will be prosperous, the land will be fertile, the magistracy will be incorruptible!" Now, what might an Egyptian say who merely took the debates in Parliament and the news in the Times as his "guides" to arrive at a true estimate of the success of the British system of Government, if he perused the accounts of the condition of Ireland, or of the South-African colonies? He could scarcely be led to a favourable conclusion of our capacity for governing, nor would he be much struck with the superiority of our civilisation, as exemplified in London and our great cities, over that which prevails in Cairo, and along the Valley of the Nile, if he turned to police reports and the records of the trials before our Judges of Assize. But if he had no mind for a tu quoque, he might ask,—"Why this special solicitude about Egypt? Why have you abandoned Armenia and Asia Minor to the Turk, whom you were to have restrained and purified? Why don't you turn your attention to the Boers, and insist on their performance of treaty obligations? Why do you not take in hand the pacification of the States in South America which are given over to anarchy and bloodshed?" The answer would be, doubtless, that our interests in Egypt are of such a nature that we could not apply to that dependency of the Turkish Empire the rules laid down by our politicians in power for our conduct with regard to other provinces of the Ottoman Monarchy and other parts of the world. With the power to back such an answer, there would be quite enough logic in it to settle the Egyptian's argument. Nevertheless, what we think unwise and impolitic, even if the statement be true, which it is not, is to declare that all Egyptians are dishonest and incapable, and that the government of their own country must be taken from them, and given over to foreigners. It was the exasperation produced by the manner in which the annexation of the Transvaal was effected which caused an irreparable breach between the Boers and the British in South Africa. The charge that the Boers were cruel, cowardly, and incapable might or might not be well founded, but no one can think that the public assertion of the fact as a justification of our forcible suppression of the Republic was calculated to lead to friendly relations between the British Government and the newly-made subjects of the Queen. Whatever may be the Government of Egypt, the Administration must rely on natives to conduct all its minor operations, and it is most important that where there is such a difference in number between foreigners and the natives employed in the service of the State, these friendly feelings should be maintained between them, or failure is inevitable. These feelings cannot be entertained by the natives for Englishmen, if they are assailed with what is in substance coarse abuse by the English Press. Arab newspapers and Arab orators are quick enough to use such weapons as the London journals place in their hands, and there are plenty of enemies to British interests who would call attention to them, if needful. The recent "economies" demanded by foreign interests in the public service in Egypt must make hosts of enemies, for it is the poor and the many who suffer, and they are Egyptians. The paras and piastres are swept away—the pounds are only touched by the percentage of reduction—in other words, many small employés are sent away, and the great officers at the head of departments are only docked five per cent. There will not be wanting tongues and pens to attribute the privations and distress which menace Egypt, in spite of the prospects of a good harvest, to the burthens of the Army of Occupation. If they point out the fact that Egypt is paying its quota to keep six British Generals in the country for an army of 6,000 men, it will not be easy to make the people believe that even-handed justice is observed in our dealings with the Khedive. To show our right to be in Egypt at all might not be difficult, but that right would be sharply questioned, and even threatened, if we exasperated the Egyptians by invective in order to strengthen it, and if we exhibited the disregard of equity we attribute to their rulers. As to the Army in Egypt, it must be a matter almost of indifference to officers and men whether they are in that country, in India, in the Colonies, or at home. At present, the general good conduct of the troops has won for them a large measure of confidence and respect, but it would be positively hateful if they were placed on bad relations with the people. The foreigners, and notably the Greeks, who number, it is said, 40,000 in Alexandria alone, would hail with delight a declaration that the occupation would be postponed indefinitely; but the Egyptian people—and there are more than 5,000,000 of them—would be less enthusiastic on that point, and they would certainly not be amiable or grateful if they were called on to submit to an indetermined extension of the time in which law, and order, and guarantees for their maintenance are to be established under the pressure of a double Administration—the direct Government of the Khedive and the indirect Government of the Queen, especially if they were assured they were fit for nothing else. Let us do our spiriting gently, at all events, and do our best to prevent the irritation which is inspired amongst the most gentle or thick-skinned of races by the presence of a foreign garrison. When the time comes for the withdrawal of the British troops proper from Egypt, the Khedive will have at the command of his Government an efficient, well-disciplined standing army quite strong enough for his legitimate purposes, supported by a powerful gendarmerie and an active, intelligent, and honest police. Those who know Sir Evelyn Wood only as a brilliant soldier would be astonished indeed at the complete success of his labours as an organiser and administrator, but he would be the first to assign due share of the credit to the exertions of the excellent officers, such as Grenfell, Duncan, Slade, and others, who have accepted service under the Khedive, nor would he deny to the preliminary work of Baker Pasha full recognition among the causes of his rapidity of progress. There have been objections made to the constitution of the Gendarmery by the last-named officer, on the ground that he has followed too nearly or closely the lines of a purely military organisation; but we think an investigation would show that Baker Pasha had adopted a system admirably suited to the people and the country, and which in regard to economy and effectiveness leaves nothing to be desired. The police force is admitted to be already in a very satisfactory state, and we learn from Cairo that the Government have, through Sir Ralph Thompson, officially expressed to Baker Pasha their appreciation of the scheme he has devised for both Gendarmery and Police, and their promptness in rendering him so much justice makes some amends for the want of consideration which was evinced towards him when the Khedive was compelled by home pressure to remove him from the command of the Army. If it were only made plain to all concerned that the superintendence of the new order of things must be reserved to the Power which alone has sacrificed blood and treasure to institute it, without any interference whatever, we believe, the initial velocity once given, that our battalions, having established peace, might return home with honour.

THE Admiralty were pleased, about two years ago, to appoint a Committee to inquire into the expenditure incurred through the large and growing charges for non-effective services administered by the Board. The Committee were further instructed to report the measures which, after a full and careful consideration, they thought desirable to be introduced, with a view of ensuring that the non-effective expenditure of the Navy shall be so regulated in future, as to secure that the total inducements offered in the shape of pensions should not more than suffice to attract and retain efficient service. The inquiry was not to comprise commissioned officers, but was to be extended more especially to the classes of petty officers and seamen of the Fleet and Coastguard, and non-commissioned officers and privates of the Royal Marine Force. The members of the Naval Pensions Committee were Captain W. Codrington, R.N.; Lieutenant-Colonel E. C. Domville, R.M.; Mr. R. D. Awdry, of the Secretary's Department; Mr. C. D. Loveless, Superintendent of the Greenwich Hospital Branch of the Accountant-General's Department; with Mr. R. G. C. Hamilton, Accountant-General of the Navy, as president, and Mr. G. W. Godfrey as secretary. The inquiry entrusted to this Committee was one of a most serious and important character. They endeavoured not to go beyond the terms of their instructions, but found it very difficult to avoid dealing with questions having a grave executive bearing. For example, the question of periods of service had to be dealt with as an essential part of the inquiry. This raised incidentally the questions as to the proportion of petty officers in the Navy, and as to the possibility of combining sea and shore service for mechanics. There are in the Navy over 2,500 chief and first-class petty-officer appointments in home ships, while there are in the whole Fleet about 5,000 petty officers with less than twenty years' service. The Committee propose, in view of the fact that an immediate relief of the growing charge for pensions can only be effected by postponing the discharge of men now serving, that a further attempt should be made to induce men to enter into third engagements for periods of five or seven years, and, with this view, recommend that the Order in Council of April 20, 1880, be reissued, with the following amendments:—(1.) Its application to be general throughout the Fleet, instead of being restricted, as at present, to certain classes. (2.) The clause which guarantees the amount of pension earned after twenty years' service against any reduction or forfeiture on account of venial offences during subsequent service to be emphasized, clearly stating that only such offences as would lead to forfeiture of pension after discharge from the service would entail this penalty during the period of a third engagement; and these should, the Committee are of opinion, be defined. (3.) Employment in a home ship to be guaranteed, and in the same port, so far as is practicable, during the third term. This guarantee to be suspended only in time of war. Before making these proposals, the Committee satisfied themselves that the Orders in Council of August, 1878, and April, 1880, had not been productive of any good results, the re-engagements up to the present time numbering less than seventy. Hence, the Committee, having ascertained that in the harbour and reserve ships in which, under the above conditions, the third-engagement men would serve, at least 1,000 chief and first-class petty officers might be so employed, without unduly interfering with the present practice of giving to men of shorter service a fair proportion of employment in home ports, and giving to each of the 5,000 petty officers with less than twenty years' service about one year in every three and a half in home ships, strongly urge the Admiralty to grant the proposed concessions, with a view of obtaining immediate relief for the growing charge for pensions. In the case of Artificers, the Committee point to the fact that in our Dockyards these men have to serve until they are 60 years of age before becoming entitled to receive pension; and they suggest that, on an artificer of the Fleet having completed his sea time, he should be turned over to the Dockyard establishment, and made to serve on shore until he shall have attained the required age before being pensioned. Furthermore, the Committee consider a reduced scale of pensions for the first 12 years' service a desirable means of reducing the excessive pensions of the whole Artificer class, and others, such as Engine-room Artificers, whose entire service is in first-class Petty officer's ratings. The new scale they propose will not in any material degree affect the seamen class, as these seldom attain Petty officers' rank until after 10 or 12 years; but the prospective liability to the Crown on account of seamen's long-service pensions would be reduced from nearly £1,000,000 under the existing, to £450,000, under the proposed system of making men serve 22 years, instead of 20, before they can claim pension or discharge. The first term of service would be 12 years and the second ten, and this proposal having been adopted by the Admiralty, the financial effect of the new scale will be an average long-service pension to all ranks of about £25. The average rates for first class, second class, and non-petty officers will be about £28, £19, and £15 10s. respectively. The maximum for a first-class petty officer will be £37 15s., and a non-petty officer will be eligible for a pension of £18 5s., by earning the additional grants for badges, medal, and very good character. Those men who elect to re-engage for a further term of five years, making their total service in the Navy 27 years, will be able to secure an average pension of about £35 10s., or about £41 10s., £27, and £21 10s., for First Class, Second Class, and non-Petty Officers respectively. The maximum that can be earned by a First-class Petty Officer after 27 years' service on the new scale proposed by the Committee is £51 7s., and by a non-Petty Officer, £24 7s. The Committee have adjusted the rates as above, so that the financial effect to the State will be practically the same whether the men elect to leave the service on the completion of their 22 years' service, on a moderate pension, or to serve on for a third period, and then retire with a largely increased pension, yet retarding the growth of the expenditure by having served through a third engagement. These recommendations of the Committee, effecting so large a reduction in the non-effective expenditure of the Admiralty, have been based upon, and are in accordance with, the action taken by the late Conservative Board, in endeavouring to extend the service of men on the Active List. Such extension of service largely reduces the cost of the non-effective list, both by materially lessening the numbers upon it, and by reducing the period for which those on it will draw non-effective pay. At the same time, the Committee have shown how a reserve of seamen pensioners can be formed under their scheme at a comparatively small cost, from the men leaving the Navy after their first period of engagement. The Committee did not propose to touch the terms of the engagement under which existing men have entered, but merely to offer inducements which would be advantageous both to those men who may now take advantage of them, and to the State. But the Admiralty have thought differently; and while adopting the suggestions of the Committee, have made the longer service retrospective. As stated by the Parliamentary Secretary of the Admiralty, when introducing the Estimates last month to the House of Commons, all men now serving their first engagement of ten years will have to re-engage for twelve years, to obtain a pension. This is a pure breach of faith, and is regarded in that light by the men. They entered the service under conditions which enabled them to obtain a pension after 20 years' service, and they now find the term altered and lengthened to 22 years. The scheme proposed for the Royal Marines we purpose publishing next week. We cannot conclude without complimenting the Committee on the thoroughness of their report, and the fearless manner in which they have done their duty, even to exposing the errors committed by successive Boards of Admiralty. To quote the words of the Committee, "Before concluding this Report, we desire to state that our inquiry has shown us the vital importance of careful estimates being required in all cases of the financial effect of any contemplated alterations in the conditions of service which involve a future liability. It is clear that in the past this has not been fully considered, and, in many instances, it does not appear to have been considered at all. And we would further point out that when increased inducements are proved to be required, in order to secure the description of service wanted, it is frequently better that these should be given in the shape of increased pay than in that of increased pensions; for it will often be found that a present increase to an individual or class is much more attractive and much more appreciated, than such deferred advantage in the shape of increased pension as could be given at anything like an equal cost to the public."

IT is interesting to observe how, notwithstanding the assertions of Sir William Armstrong, the greatest importance is attached in Italy to the question of protecting war-vessels with powerful armour. If one were to judge from the tone of a part of the Press of that country, one would come to the conclusion that the elements for the future Naval progress of Italy are tenderly nurtured by the statesmen and politicians of modern Rome; and reading the articles published on the subject, one might even be led to conclude that a new Carthage is threatening them. Hence, the experiments made in Italy on the armour-plates to be used for the protection of the newly-constructed ironclads deserve especial attention. We need hardly refer to the assertions made a short time ago at a public meeting, by Mr. Barnaby, regarding the monster ironclads of proportions similar to those which are at present being constructed in Leghorn and other Italian docks, but it is important to note that, it being considered indispensable to proceed in haste to the arming with plates of one of their ironclads, the Italian Naval constructors, including Signor Brin, proposed, some twelve months ago, the adoption of compound plates, on the system lately adopted in England and partially in France, for several among the latest and greatest of the Italian ironclads. These compound plates, 48 centimètres thick, required to protect the ironclad from guns of the calibre adopted by the Inflexible, the Admiral Baudin, or the Duilio herself, were ordered in England, as there did not exist on the Continent any other manufactory of colossal armour-plates considered efficient, with the exception of the Creuzot, in France, a manufactory which of late has been greatly surpassed by our English ones. The Creuzot had never produced compound armour-plates. The steel plates cast in one block, and certainly powerful, made at the Creuzot, had proved, until November last, inferior to the compound plates used by us. It is no easy task to follow the arguments set forth by technical journals, both in this country and Italy, on several points connected with this question, because, with the exception of one point, on which all seem to be agreed, viz., the necessity of using powerful armour-plates, great moral, national, material, and industrial interests, besides purely scientific ones, are at stake; and as though this were not enough, party interests in Italy complicate the question. We had occasion to refer some time ago to the excellent results obtained by the experiments which took place at Spezia in November last, by two compound armour-plates 48 centimètres thick, furnished by Messrs. Brown and Cammell, by a new steel armour-plate of the same thickness, cast in one block, and submitted for competition at the last moment by MM. Schneider, of the Creuzot. Several newspapers in Italy exaggerated the importance of the results obtained by the Schneider plates, though, when compared with the English plates, the Schneider really were the worst perforated. In fact, the first shots perforated the plates in the following proportions:—1st, Brown, 75 millimètres; 2nd, Cammell, 175 millimètres; 3rd, Schneider, 210 millimètres. At the second experiment the following results were obtained:—1st, Cammell, 200 millimètres; 2nd, Brown, 205 millimètres; 3rd, Schneider, 235 millimètres. The Schneider plate, which had been more accurately fixed, was enabled to receive a third and fourth shot, while the other two, having fallen from their backing, because badly fixed, appeared at first-sight less powerful. Indeed, the simple looker-on believed that the other two plates had been completely beaten. In consequence of this most unfavourable impression, the corps of Naval Constructors in Italy, the artillery and naval authorities, and the Admiralty itself, were most severely attacked, on the ground that the armour plates by which the Italia is to be protected must necessarily be subject to equal destruction. The war waged against the Italian Minister of Marine, Signor Acton, by a few journals of the Opposition, has been as unjust as it has proved absurd. Admiral Acton is one of the ablest and most enlightened members of the Italian Navy, and has acted throughout this question of armour-plates in perfect understanding with the technical Committees and Commissioners whose duty it is to treat such matters. It must be remembered that the armour-plates for the ironclad Italia were ordered after a vote of the Chamber of Deputies in 1881, which called upon the Minister of Marine to hasten the arming of the new and monster vessel. The point which the Italian Opposition journals ought to have verified before attacking, for political reasons, the Minister of Marine, was whether, in ordering the compound armour-plates from the firms of Cammell and Brown, the Minister acted of his own caprice, or in accordance with the resolutions taken by the technical authorities to whom the question had been submitted. The following resolution was adopted by the Committee on December 5, 1881:—"The Committee, having become acquainted with the preceding report, expresses its unanimous opinion that compound armour-plates should be employed for protecting the ironclad Italia, and is furthermore of opinion that these armour-plates should be provided in equal parts by the firms of Cammell and C. Brown and Co., these two firms being the only ones which present sufficient guarantees for the execution of the work, and because it is considered necessary to entrust the work to two firms, in order that the amount of armour required may be obtained as soon as possible." This resolution, which contained other particulars, bears the signatures of Cavaliere Bozzoni, the Director of Naval Engineers; the Inspector of Naval Engineers, Cavaliere Micheli; of the Junior President of Naval Constructions, Cavaliere Brin; and of Captain Martinez. Admiral Acton, in compliance with these resolutions, signed the contracts with the English firms. After the experiments at Spezia, the question was brought before the Italian Parliament. Politicians who know nothing of military and naval questions will rise in every Parliament to discuss matters they are absolutely incompetent to deal with. This has been the case even in Italy, where Admiral Acton was attacked on the ground of having signed a contract for the arming of the Italia, disregarding to a certain extent existing laws and regulations. These accusations have proved fallacious and absurd, and Italian patriots, who have at heart the future of the Italian Navy, must hope that Admiral Acton may continue to fulfil his duties with the intelligence and impartiality exhibited since his first accepting office. In the Chamber of Deputies, on April 7, Admiral Acton, replying to Signor Boselli's interpellation, stated that no one was more desirous than he of encouraging the national industry, but in certain cases it was desirable to have recourse to foreign countries, as Italy has not yet the great means of construction which were available abroad. He justified the commission given by the Italian Government to Messrs. Armstrong for the ship Giovanni Bauson, as also the orders for the armour-plates above referred to, on the ground that they would be able to have the vessel in fifteen months instead of thirty, and also the plates much sooner than would have been the case if they had been built in Italy. The utmost would be done by the Government to promote the national industries without sacrificing the interests of necessary military preparations.

Viscount Sidmouth moved on Thursday night in the House of Lords for the appointment of a Select Committee to inquire into the present state and condition of the Navy, and the adequacy of the Fleet to meet the increasing demands made on its services, and such further demands as might hereafter arise in consequence of the augmentation of the strength of foreign navies. Lord Sidmouth compared the strength of the English and French Navies, and in reply, the Earl of Northbrook made light of such comparisons, remarking that he found "that the tonnage of the ships launched during the last six or seven years was greater by ourselves than by France." The First Lord of the Admiralty also stated that the reason of the present activity in the French dockyards was due to the decision of a Commission of the French Chamber in 1878, that in a certain number of years a considerable number of wooden armour-plated ships in France would become unserviceable, and that it would be necessary to replace them with new ships. The same necessity has long existed in regard to the ironclads designed and built in this country between the years 1859-76; but of this fact Lord Northbrook took no notice. His lordship, on the contrary, prided himself on the Navy of England being superior to that of France. The facts of the case are, however, very different. It cannot be denied that the the ironclads of both countries designed and launched prior to the year 1876 are now obsolete. During these years, England built and launched 55 ironclads, of a gross tonnage of 343,616, displacement; and France, 47 ironclads, of 221,806 tons' displacement. These are all obsolete. The new type of ironclad was first launched in 1876. Since then, England has constructed 14 ironclads, with a gross tonnage of 103,920 displacement; and the French, 15 ironclads, of 105,664 tons' displacement. England has now building eight ironclads, of 27,450 tons' gross displacement; and France 23 ironclads, of 104,552 tons' gross displacement. These will be ready to launch in 1885-86, at the latest, for the French are straining every nerve to get these ships afloat. How will matters then stand? Omitting from our consideration the obsolete ships of both nations, the facts are as follows:—England, 22 modern ironclads, of 131,370 gross displacement tonnage; and France, 38 ironclads, of 210,216 tons' gross displacement, thus giving France the advantage over this country of 16 fast, powerful ironclads, of modern type, displacing together 78,846 tons, or an average of nearly 5,000 tons per ship. The displacement of the Conqueror, one of our newest ironclads of the most approved type, being only 6,200 tons, it will be seen that the French Navy will soon have an enormous preponderance of modern ironclads over the Navy of England.

The Earl of Belmore will, on Tuesday next, move the House of Lords to express an opinion on the present position of the Sub-Lieutenants and Lieutenants of the Navy. Lord Belmore asks that the pay of these officers should be assimilated to the pay of Captains and Lieutenants in the Army. A more fair request could hardly be made. It is an anomaly that these ranks in the Army, the junior service, should be better paid than the corresponding ranks in the Navy, the senior service. Should the Government grant the request, the cost to the State will be under £36,000 a year. Considering the increased responsibility thrown on the Lieutenants of the Navy since the introduction of ironclads, and also the fact that these officers carry their lives, so to speak, each day in their hands, we are of opinion that the country will support this most just proposal.

The Greenwich Hospital Age Pensions, established in 1865 upon the recommendation of a Committee presided over by Mr. Childers, are about to be abolished, the Committee on Naval Pensions recommending the extension of the award of special pensions in lieu, to be styled "Greenwich Hospital Pensions."

It used to be customary to allow service in the Army to count towards pension when a soldier joined the Marines or the Navy. But now that short service has been adopted in the Army, we find the Committee on Naval Pensions making the following recommendation to the Admiralty:—"With respect to men who leave the Army and join the Marines, the present system of short service in the Army will render it almost impossible for such men to fulfil the conditions required by the Regulations to enable them to reckon their Army time for Marine pensions; but if any such cases should arise, we are of opinion that Army time should be excluded. Men who leave the Army after 12 years' service do so without any right to a pension, and we consider, therefore, that the Admiralty is in no way required to recognise on account of Army service a claim that is repudiated by the War Office."

We understand that the Accountant-General of the Navy has brought before the Admiralty the position of Yarmouth Hospital, in which, at present, the number of Naval Pensioner inmates is as great as the number of inmates who are not pensioners, and that the Admiralty are seriously considering the advisability of discontinuing this hospital.

The various memorials referred by the Admiralty to the Naval Pensions Committee, having reference to the claims of Chief Petty Officers to a distinct and higher rate of pension, have been carefully considered, but the Committee are of opinion that no sufficient reason has been advanced for creating such a distinction, the more so that the chief petty officer's rank appears to have been conferred in some ratings more for the sake of its additional dignity than on account of any claim arising from the attendant duties. Chief petty officers receive a higher rate of pay, which is considered in itself sufficient remuneration for the additional responsibilities of their positions.

Naval pensioners emigrating will soon be allowed to commute their pensions, receiving in lieu gratuities at the rate of not more than four years' purchase of their pensions.

The Secretary of State for War has called the attention of the Admiralty to the fact that Staff Officers of Pensioners have been superseded by the new district Paymasters, whose military duties so fully occupy them that they will be unable in future to undertake the duty of paying Naval pensions. The Admiralty were requested two years ago to relieve the district Paymasters of this task. The matter was referred to the Naval Pensions Committee, who, having fully considered the question, have proposed that the Admiralty should undertake the payment of their own pensions in the Naval ports, and also in London, Woolwich, and the surrounding districts, where the bulk of the Naval Pensioners reside, the payments to be made by an Admiralty officer to be appointed for the purpose. Why could not the Naval Reserve Office undertake this duty? It seems absurd, though, that the Admiralty should take two years considering a request of this nature.

The present net income of Greenwich Hospital is about £160,000 a year, and the present normal expenditure may be taken at £148,000 a year, leaving a surplus balance of about £12,000 a year, which the Admiralty have determined to devote to form a fund out of which to pay pensions to the widows and orphans of seamen and marines killed in action or by accident while on active service.

We understand that it was the intention of the War Office, prior to the Egyptian Campaign, to discontinue the employment of Marine officers and non-commissioned officers in the Auxiliary Forces, as Adjutants and Staff Serjeants, and to apportion such duties to officers and non-commissioned officers of the Army. But the gallant behaviour of the Marines in Egypt appears to have altered this decision, and to have even necessitated the throwing open of further Staff appointments to the corps.

The Earl of Sandwich will on Monday ask the First Lord of the Admiralty as to the appointment of First Lieutenants to the Garnet.

The Russian Admiralty has issued a circular this week directing that officers who quit their ships, while on foreign service, for domestic reasons, are not to be allowed the full term of leave, nor yet the rewards assigned to other officers remaining with the vessel throughout its cruise. The order has been provoked by the frequency of the attempts made by officers to quit vessels on foreign service for purely fictitious reasons. In regard to officers ordered home on such leave, the circular adds that the right of such individuals to furlough and rewards will be treated in each case upon its own merits. Another circular, issued at the same time, refers to the dislike shown by commanders of men-of-war to Cardiff coal. In the Baltic Fleet no native coal is used, the fuel being obtained entirely from Cardiff and Newcastle. But the commanders of men-of-war do not like Cardiff coal, and hence in drawing their supplies at Sveaborg and Cronstadt either take an undue proportion of Newcastle coal, or refuse Cardiff coal altogether. In consequence of this, Newcastle coal fell short at Sveaborg last season, while 3,000 tons of Cardiff coal remained on hand. To prevent a recurrence of this, the Russian Admiralty orders that in future any commander refusing to take a proportion of one-third of Cardiff coal to the quantity drawn upon, will be treated as having disobeyed the instructions of his superior officers.

The Danish Government have finally decided upo an expenditure of 6,500,000 crowns yearly, to carry into effect the project of the Minister of Marine for creating a fresh Navy during the next 10 years; to comprise 8 ironclads, 4 large unarmoured cruisers, 10 corvettes, 12 gunboats, and 30 torpedo cutters. The Swedish Government is also going to spend 2,250,000 crowns extra yearly, in order to develope its fleet in the Baltic. On the other hand, Russia has reduced her estimates for ship-construction in the Baltic by 1,000,000 roubles this year, although no important additions have been made to the Baltic Fleet for several years past.

Colonel Makins will on Monday ask the Secretary of State for War what was the number of officers and men wanting on April 1, 1883, to complete the establishment of the Army and the Militia respectively in the United Kingdom.

Our special correspondent at the Brighton Review and sham-fight admits that he was not aware of the alteration in the number of paces in quick time from 116 to 120, which was announced in G.O. of April 1, 1881. But others, too, were not aware of it, for the bands which advanced playing at the rate of 120 were ordered to play more slowly. General Orders and Army Circulars have latterly become so voluminous, that few who have any other work to attend to can master their endless intricacies and alterations.

Brevet Major C. F. Call, R.E., has been appointed a member of the Royal Engineer Committee at the War Office, to represent the Government of India.

Sir Henry Fletcher will on Monday ask the Secretary of State for War whether, in consequence of the contemplated change in the undress uniform of the Infantry of the Line, viz., from red to grey, it is intended to carry out the instructions for officers to provide themselves with the badges, forage-caps, &c., of the new Territorial Regiments to which they now belong; and whether any allowance will be made to officers towards providing these new uniforms, after having already been put to a considerable expense during the last few years by frequent changes of uniform. Sir Henry Fletcher is earning the gratitude of all concerned,—except, perhaps, the tailors!

What with new forts round Paris, and new forts and entrenched camps necessary to replace Metz and Strasburg, and the other strong places which formerly protected the eastern frontier, the French, although pretty safe from attack, go on spending money on defensive works. We believe that £100,000,000 has been laid out since the close of the Franco-German war in armaments of various kinds, and now we see that another £1,000,000 is required for fortifications. A good many officers object to all these works, as uncongenial to the instinct of the French soldier, which is to dash on the enemy. With a system of forts and entrenched camps you will have, they say, Generals afraid to leave their shelter.

One of the most injudicious reorganisation moves against the distinguished officers of the Army, was depriving the Generals of distinguished-service pensions on their compulsory removal for age or non-employ to the Retired List. These pensions were specially given for distinguished or exceptionally good service, and were held by all General officers, to whom they were awarded, until death or advancement to the emoluments of "Colonel of a regiment." But in 1881 all distinguished Generals who were removed for age or non-employ on the new scale of pensions for all General officers were deprived of the £100 a year good-service pension, and all Generals, good, bad, and indifferent, were reduced to a common denominator. This act is still considered extremely unjust to the most distinguished officers of the Army. And it is thought that this arbitrary act might be reconsidered with immense advantage, and to the great content of the Generals, by the new Secretary of State for War. It must be borne in mind that these officers have now not even a "good-service cross" or a bit of ribbon to put on their coats like foreign officers for similar services, to show that they ever did anything but garrison duty all their lives. The institution of a "good-service cross" or gold medal would be highly appreciated. Here is an opportunity for Lord Hartington to introduce a reform advantageous, we think, to the Army. If money should stand in the way, let each good-service pension officer be charged for the decoration, and doubtless they would pay for it, to have something to show for their good service.

The review of seven battalions of the Egyptian Army under Sir Evelyn Wood, before the Khedive, at the Abbassiyeh, on Saturday, March 31, was, we learn from one of our correspondents at Cairo, a very interesting spectacle, and as an experiment, a decided success. One battalion was absent, we believe, at Tantah, but the Infantry in its entirety, with that exception, was on the ground, with one battery of six guns, under Colonel Duncan, R.A. The Khedive, who is constitutionally Commander-in-Chief of his Army, does not appear to set much store on military insignia or uniform, and his Highness, who was dressed en bourgeois, with a dust-coloured paletôt over plain clothes, wore no more deadly weapon than his well-beloved, green-lined umbrella, and received the salute on foot, standing in front of his carriage, reminding one of the homely tastes and garniture affected by the "Citizen King" of France. But the Khedive, nevetheless, watched the march past with keen and appreciative interest, and when the review was over, his Highness shook Sir Evelyn Wood warmly by the hand, and expressed the thankful satisfaction he felt at the display. There were about 3,500 men on the sand, and the appearance of the troops, as they were drawn up in battalions, was very striking. The neat white tunics, trousers, and gaiters, relieved by the red fezzes, looked very smart, and the impression of "brightness" was enhanced by the glittering barrels and bayonets of their rifles. A considerable number of spectators drove or rode out from Cairo to the ground, and the officers and soldiers of Earle's force, in the barracks near at hand, furnished a liberal contingent of military critics, whose verdict, on the whole, was very favourable. Lord and Lady Dufferin, the members of the diplomatic and consular bodies, the Egyptian Ministers, and a large number of the Europeans resident or visiting were also present. The Khedive, who drove on to the ground with his usual mounted escort at 5 o'clock, was received by a salute from the battery, which left something to be desired in regularity, and which was fired before he was on the actual schauplatz. The salute announced that he was coming, at all events. His Highness, who was met on the road outside the parade-ground by Colonel Slade, Adjutant-General of the Army, was received by Sir E. Wood and his staff, and drove down the line of the battalions, front and rear, and then took up his station at the saluting-point, near which were massed the carriages of the ladies of the Viceregal and other hareems. The English Brigade, as it is called, under Brigadier-General Grenfell, first marched past by companies, each about 100 strong; generally the distances were well kept, but the imperfect vision of the Egyptian fellah sometimes prevents him seeing the points distinctly. Without going into the comparative anatomy of the different regiments (one battalion each), it may be said that it would not be possible, our correspondent thinks, to have produced such results in the time with average English recruits, for the aptitude of the Egyptian to learn his drill up to a certain standard is very great. The men are, on an average, an inch and three-quarters taller than our Line. They are very straight and broad-shouldered, with flat backs and muscular arms, but many of them are rather flat-footed. Egyptians, as of old, have large feet, these do not go with their modern shoes and white gaiters or leggings. There were to be observed in the ranks men who put down their feet in a very gingerly fashion, but for all that the companies marched past with extraordinary steadiness and élan, and "as straight as a wall." It has been asserted that the Egyptian Brigade under Usuf Pasha was more advanced than the so-called English Brigade under General Grenfell; our correspondent, having watched them both narrowly, says he has come to the conclusion that there is truth in the assertion, but he adds it is natural it should be so, for several reasons. First of all, the officers of the Egyptian Brigade speak the language of their men, and the non-commissioned officers have no difficulty in understanding their orders; secondly, the Egyptian officers do not hesitate, our correspondent thinks, to quicken up the men at drill by little stimulating processes which the British officers cannot employ; and thirdly, it is understood that the Egyptians have made a point of showing that they can, under their own Egyptian officers, do better than they can under foreigners. This latter we may question, but it is possible. With all drawbacks, however, the marching and appearance of the battalions generally were extraordinary. It must be remembered they have only been two months at work, and that they are all fresh recruits. It is in the native officers that shortcomings exist. Many of them offer strong contrasts in physique and setting-up to the men they command. Usuf Pasha and several of the native officers are indeed very fine, soldierly-looking fellows, but there are some who could not either lead or follow, and with no "command" about them. The English officers, from Sir Evelyn Wood downwards, wore the fez. The new white tunic of the officers looks smart, but several wore an ugly, glazed, white shoulder-belt, which spoiled their appearance greatly. It is plain that there is still something to be done to complete and set off their present uniform. There cannot well be a more unmeaning head-dress than the fez, unless, perhaps, it be the crumpet stuck on three hairs which decorates the top-knots of some of our hussars; but it keeps off the sun as well or as badly as a glengarry, or the new cheesecutter. The advance and salute at the close were exceedingly well executed. A murmur of pleasure ran through the crowd, who were politely callous and undemonstrative; but every one whose opinion was worth anything said openly that "Sir Evelyn has done wonders." On the Monday following, the Khedive held a levée of all the officers at Abdeen Palace, and expressed his very great satisfaction at what he had seen, returning to one and all his best thanks for the exertions which had resulted in securing an efficient and well-drilled army for the service of the country.

A grand military assault-at-arms will take place on Monday at the Albert Hall, under the patronage of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke andDuchess of Edinburgh, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, the Duke and Duchess of Albany, the Duke of Cambridge (Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief), and the other members of the Royal Family, in aid of the Egyptian War Fund. The spectacle to be witnessed on this occasion in the arena of the Albert Hall is one which will be certain to fill the loggia, stalls, and galleries of this noble building with the élite of London society. The same Military Gymnastic Staff which, in July last, under Lieutenant-Colonel Gordon Cleather, won such applause in Sweden, will on this occasion enable their own countrymen to judge of the proficiency of the British Army in the calisthenic art. In addition, other attractions, have been provided. Mons. Theviet, Professor d'Escrime of the London Fencing Club, will cross foils with Mons. Davet, Professor d'Escrime of the French Club, Paris, who has come over to this country on purpose to meet his rival swordsman. Other points of interest there are en masse in the programme: Shaw's Fire Brigade; Nordenfelt machine-guns; the tug-of-war between boys of H.M.S. St. Vincent, who come up expressly from Portsmouth under Commander Bromley, and boys from the Woolwich Garrison. The gymnastic exercises of Serjeant-Major Clisham and the trained Staff Serjeants, led by their gallant Inspector, Lieutenant-Colonel Gordon Cleather, form an exhibition of skill, strength, and endurance no lover of the calisthenic art should miss witnessing. It astonished the Swedes, professed gymnasts though they be; and it will not fail to create a great sensation in London society, when once witnessed and understood.

It is to be hoped that when men of the Reserve are sent home for discharge from foreign countries or after a campaign, that measures will be taken to enforce strict discipline among them on their way back, and that the complaints of their behaviour last autumn and early this year will not be repeated.

With that ignorance of facts for which officials are remarkable, as a rule, in their replies in Parliament to questions put to them on matters relating to the services, Sir A. Hayter, in answer to Mr. Whitley, stated on Thursday that "the grant of decorations for service in time of war is generally limited either to those who have been actively engaged under fire, or have performed duties of special responsibility during the campaign. Of the officers of the Commissariat and Store Departments who received decorations, the whole number, with one exception in each department, served at the front and accompanied the advance to Tel-el-Kebir. Of the two excepted, the Commissariat officer was in chief charge at Ismailia, and the Store officer was in chief charge at Alexandria, where their duties were exceptionally heavy and responsible. The Paymasters were all, or almost all, at Ismailia, and their duties were of a specially responsible character, excepting those of the Chief Paymaster, Colonel Oliver, who received both a decoration and a C.B." It really is distressing to find a gentleman in the position of the Financial Secretary displaying such a want of accurate information and inexcusable inconsistency. Here is a Minister who in one sentence asserts that rewards are generally limited to those who have been actively engaged, and yet admits, in the next breath, that though this may be the rule, it is oftentimes more honoured in the breach than the observance, and was so in Egypt. When Members ask for information in Parliament, they have a right to be treated as rational beings. He would be a clever man, indeed, who could make anything of Sir A. Hayter's statement. Sir A. Hayter complained that there were various inaccuracies in the article which appeared in our columns. He was, however, particularly careful not to say what those inaccuracies were; indeed, he fully bore out all we said on the subject by the details he gave. Mr. Whitley asked "whether it was true, as asserted in the Army and Navy Gazette of March 17, on the authority of an official statement regarding the treatment of the Army Pay Department in Egypt, that various departmental officers who were never under fire had displayed qualities which were rewarded by decorations and promotions; and whether he could explain why none of the officers of the Army Pay Department who had been recommended by the head of their Department in that country, for their services under similar circumstances, had not been decorated or promoted." Sir A. Hayter holds that this statement is not borne out by facts, but by his reply virtually admits its truth by showing that two Departmental officers were decorated, one of whom never got beyond Alexandria, while the other served at Ismailia!

Colonel Dulier,—a Belgian officer, who, if we mistake not, with the unfortunate Maximilian, entered the service of the Khedive about ten years ago, and was engaged on the Staff in the war with Abyssinia, and in the war between Russia and Turkey,—was attached to Sir Garnet Wolseley's head-quarters during the late campaign, and accompanied them from Alexandria viâ Ismailia, to Tel-el-Kebir. When the Cavalry set out in pursuit, Colonel Dulier placed his services at the disposal of General Drury-Lowe, and proved of the utmost assistance to us in the advance to Belbeis, owing to his knowledge of the country, &c.; but it was at the critical moment of the arrival of the exhausted and scanty force of horsemen on the sandhills outside the Abbaseyah Gate, on the evening of September 15, that Colonel Dulier rendered the most important and really invaluable aid in the conduct of the pourparlers which led to the surrender of the mass of men in garrison, and of Arabi and the chiefs who were in Cairo. General Drury-Lowe has, we are sure, expressed the sense he entertains of that assistance, and the officers of the Army with which Colonel Dulier served have given their testimony in his favour; but he is now not merely passed over in the distribution of honours, but is actually exposed to great injury and virtually driven out of employment by the action of the Anglo-Egyptian authorities, as he is ordered to go off, with his wife (an English lady of position and family), to live in some filthy village, on the pretence that there is no room for him in the work of the Cadastre at Cairo or any of the large cities, and the post he had at Court is abolished. M. Van den Nest, the able and excellent Consul-General of Belgium, has made several efforts to avert the hardship; but the Egyptian authorities are only too happy to avail themselves of the protection of the words "economy and the English Government," when they are cutting down the salaries or wiping out the offices of European employés; and it seems as though Colonel Dulier would be made a victim to the spirit of reform, and illustrate the hollowness of national "gratitude" when the pinch is past.

The Government of the Queen is oftentimes very ill served by those whose duty it is to see that the interests and "reputation" of the Empire are not neglected and vilipended by slovenly, careless, or callous administration. Nothing can be worse than the way in which some work is done by our officials, and the manner in which honours and rewards are conferred stands haud facile princeps in the category of slovenly, tardy, inelegant administration. Certain officers of the Khedive's army attached to the British expedition rendered very valuable services in the field last year, and it was at last decided that these officers should be included in the list of those entitled to the British medal, &c. But when the time came for these officers, after long and impatient waiting, to receive the coveted mark of the Queen's recognition of their services, the form in which it was conveyed to them was in the worst possible taste. There was no ceremony of any sort or description, no official "acte" of any kind. The ribbons and medals, neatly done up like parcels of cheese from a grocer's, were sent to each officer, to do as he pleased with them, and there was an end of the business. Bad as that was, however, in point of form, there has been greater mischief done in substantial neglect of the Englishmen who gave such admirable assistance to the authorities at the time when local knowledge and experience were of priceless worth, as every officer who was conversant with the operations at and before Alexandria can testify. Night and day the services of Captain Blomfield, R.N., Captain of the Port, were given to those who were engaged in the naval and transport services, afloat and ashore, and the thanks of the authorities have been freely and fully conveyed to him; but "fine words butter no parsnips," and men are astonished, as each gazette arrives, to learn that there is nothing done to reward zealous and devoted labours in the national interest. But Captain Blomfield only represents a considerable class, and though he may be at the head of it, the claims of such men as Morice Pasha, Morice Bey, Mr. H. P. Le Mesurier, Mr. Gibson (of the Cadastre), Mr. Carey, Mr. Donald, Mr. Baines, &c., for some mark of favour for the important aid they rendered, each in his degree, to the expedition, are so strong, that it seems almost incredible there should be so great a delay in according to them the acknowledgment of the part they played in the operations against the Egyptian rebels of 1882.

There would appear to be some evil spirit dominating the administration of the Army Pay Department by the authorities at the War Office. In his speech introducing the Army Estimates to the House, about a month ago, the Secretary of State for War stated, with reference to the Pay Department, that Warrants had been prepared and referred to the Treasury, and provision made in the Estimates, for the following, amongst other changes:—The number of Chief Paymasters to be increased from twelve to fifteen; Paymasters, after five years' service as such, who joined before June, 1881, to have the rank of Major; and the published Estimates also provide for three more Staff Paymasters. As the military year commences on the 1st of this month, it was naturally expected that the London Gazette would have announced the promotions alluded to above, a fortnight ago. Nineteen Paymasters completed five years' service in the Department on March 31 last, some of these having performed arduous but unrewarded service in the recent campaign in Egypt. All these should have been gazetted to the honorary rank of Major from the 1st inst., and the three selected for the grade of Staff Paymaster to complete establishment been promoted at the same time. The selections for Chief Paymaster should also have appeared concurrently with the above. Now, considering the paucity of candidates for the Department, and the widespread feeling of dissatisfaction of which we are receiving constant proofs —notably in connection with the recent distribution of honours for Egypt—it is a matter of amazement to us that the War-Office authorities, merely as a question of policy, have not seen the expediency of promptly announcing these promotions in the first Gazette of the new (official) year.

NAVAL PROMOTION AND RETIREMENT.

SIR,—It is evident by H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh's report, lately presented to the Admiralty, that he sees that the present state of the Lieutenants' List and general state of affairs as to promotion are unfair to the greater body of the executive officers, and detrimental to the interests of the service. Under the existing circumstances, can anything else be expected but that the greater number who have not sufficient interest to get appointments that lead to promotion will but do their duty in a grudging spirit, and curse the day they entered the service, telling their captains, when remonstrated with and threatened with stoppage of promotion, as one officer did, "that a thing cannot be stopped that is never likely to be given?" If officers had a certainty of promotion if their work was performed well, or the certainty of a retirement on which they could live, if from disease brought on by the exposure to bad climates, or the strain on the system caused by night-watches, and the general grind of a service where the officers are always on duty, and may be, and often are, called upon at any moment by night or day; if, I say, promotion or a sufficient retirement were held out as a prize to officers who may have served the country in a most wearing service for 14 years as commissioned officers, I might safely say all officers would serve with zeal and good-will, knowing that they were being treated with justice; and the general atrophy which is daily growing over the lieutenants would disappear. My general idea of what would be just to the lieutenant is the following:—After a lieutenant has served ten years in that rank, he is probably 33 years old, and has about 14 years' commissioned officer's time. If he is then fit to serve, he is fit for promotion. If he is unfit to serve, first, from incapacity, the Admiralty ought not to have employed him for five years previously, and so have got rid of him, for surely there can be no question as to the impropriety of employing incapable officers, and four years as sub-lieutenant and four more as lieutenant should be a sufficient time for the Admiralty to test an officer's capability. Second, if an officer is unfit, through general ill-health, as many are, through no fault of theirs, then give them a retirement they can live on, and let them go to some healthy climate to recruit their health and make their living. The sum I would suggest would be £100 a year, in addition to the half-pay they had earned on the present scale, as the least possible sum officers in their condition could live on. By these means, we should have no lieutenants on the list over ten years' service, a very proper state of things. But we should have a much larger commanders' list, and employment would be the difficulty. This, I would suggest, could be managed by giving the Coastguard appointments, at present held by antiquated lieutenants, to the young commanders for three years only, and also by appointing the junior commanders to the other appointments held at present by the senior lieutenants, such as the commands of gun-vessels and gunboats, at present tenders to the Reserve ships, and the other independent commands. I would also cut off from the top of the Commanders' List all having served ten years in that rank, which would bring their age to about 43 or 44 on the proposed system, promoting the fit, and retiring the unfit. A doctor's examination would do it, and it would be working with the immutable laws of nature, the survival of the fittest. Of course, a fair retirement should be given, for officers at the age of 43 or 44 would be too old to emigrate, and appointments now-a-days are difficult to obtain on shore. Besides, an officer, after 24 years' commissioned officer's time, is entitled to some little ease and comfort. To obtain this, I would suggest that a commander's first half-pay should be 10s., and after three years' full-pay service 15s. Then, when it became necessary, after ten years' service, to promote or retire, give an extra £100 a year to the retiring commanders, making about £370 a year, surely not an extravagant sum, after so much service. Whether it would be advisable to carry the same system higher up the tree, I leave to those better able to judge; but I feel confident that for the lower branches the system would improve the general tone of the service, cause a just and equable flow of promotion, lop off all the antiquated and unfit, and dive scarcely any, if any, deeper into the taxpayer's pocket. Of course, at present, as the service is now, the few who get promotion, or expect to get it, having sufficient interest to get the appointments that bring promotion, are all enthusiasm; but the many who have, through no want of ability, to leave hope behind of even obtaining a sufficiency to begin life again on, are filled with bitterness and disgust, and the tone of the service depends on the many. Those in authority can be little aware of the feeling of the service at present; treat these men with the commonest justice, and things would be very different. It may be urged against this plan that it would put too many on the Commanders' List at once, whilst only taking 36 off it that are at present on. I don't think so, for if given the option of retiring on half-pay, plus £100 a year, most of the lieutenants in the Coastguard would go, in preference to being promoted and being placed on 10s. a day half-pay; and a considerable number of those who had obtained their maximum half-pay as lieutenant would also gladly go. However, the Admiralty could use their discretion in letting these officers retire; and if the Admiralty cannot spare their services, they should be promoted and employed as described above.—I am, &c.,

December, 1882. LIEUTENANT, R.N.

ARMY NOTES.

Notice is given that H.R.H. the Prince of Wales will, by command of the Queen, hold a levée at St. James's Palace, on behalf of her Majesty, on Monday, April 23 next, at 2 o'clock. It is the Queen's pleasure that presentations to his Royal Highness at the levée shall be considered as equivalent to presentations to her Majesty. The Knights of the several Orders are to appear in their collars, it being a collar-day.

Field-Marshal Lord Napier of Magdala, who has spent the last few months in an extended tour of travel, is expected to return to England in the early part of next month.

A well-executed chromo-lithograph has been published by the well-known firm of Mr. A. Ackermann, 191 Regent Street, from the original drawing by Orlando Norie, representing a group of seventeen officers and men of the Indian Contingent, engaged with the British Forces in the Egyptian Campaign, 1882. The engraving shows the uniforms of the several branches of the service, and is in all respects most admirably finished.

The Queen has signified her intention of conferring the honour of knighthood upon Professor Frederick Augustus Abel, C.B., F.R.S., in recognition of the valuable services rendered by him to the War Department, and to other departments of the Government, in his capacity of War Department Chemist.

In compliance with instructions received at Aldershot from the War Office, a committee, consisting of Major Hamilton, Royal Engineers; Major Thrupp, Inspector of Army Signalling; and Lieut. Davidson, King's Royal Rifle Corps, has assembled at the Signalling School, Aldershot, to consider and report upon a revision of the "Manual of Instruction of Army Signalling."

A Royal Warrant, just issued, notifies that in future the First-class Army Reserve will consist of two divisions—the men in the second division not being liable to be called out on permanent service until directions have been given for calling out the whole of the first division on such service.

It is believed that Gen. Hardinge has submitted proposals for the assimilation of the dress and equipments of all native cavalry regiments in the Bombay Army, on the understanding, however, that the utmost consideration shall be shown to all ranks on the introduction of the changes involved. Gen. Hardinge has also proposed to adopt the Bengal system, whereby native cavalry regiments, as a general rule, provide their own swords, accoutrements, saddlery, and equipments, by private arrangement, without the intervention of the Ordnance Department.

The Army.

2nd Dragoon Guards. The regiment is to be moved shortly from Manchester to Aldershot.

4th Dragoon Guards. The regiment was paraded in the barrack-yard at Preston, Brighton, on the afternoon of the 6th inst., to receive the Khedive's star for the Egyptian Campaign, the ceremony being performed by Gen. Shute, C.B. After addressing his old companions-in-arms in a few well-chosen sentences, Gen. Shute proceeded to decorate the officers and men, commencing with Col. Shaw-Hellier, specially complimenting him on the smart appearance of the regiment.

7th Dragoon Guards. On Wednesday last, Lord Hartington, the Secretary of State for War, presented the Egyptian medal and Khedive's star to the regiment at Shorncliffe. The whole of the other troops composing the Shorncliffe garrison were paraded to do honour to the occasion. The 7th were drawn up in line on foot, facing the saluting-point, the other troops forming a second line in rear. His lordship arrived on the ground a few minutes after 12 o'clock. having travelled down from London by the ordinary tidal train. His arrival at the saluting-flag was the signal for a general salute, almost the first he has received from troops under arms since his accession to the office of Secretary of State for War. The salute over, the 7th were formed into a three-sided square. A barrack-table escorted by two of the troopers, and carried by a couple of infantry Tommy Atkins's, then made its appearance from the crowd of sightseers, the cortége being brought up in rear by the nine dragoons carrying a clothes-basket full of medals. The table having been duly placed in a proper position, it was covered with the Union Jack, which gave it the appearance, from the crowd, of a coffin about to be deposited in the grave. His lordship, escorted by Major-Gen. Newdigate, C.B., then advanced to the table, and the ceremony of presenting the medals commenced. First, the officers received theirs, then the band, and as fast as the other soldiers could come to the table, they were presented with their well-deserved decorations. One lady was observed busily assisting the officer commanding a troop to pin the men's medals to their manly "buzzums." After Lord Hartington had presented the last medal, he addressed the regiment as follows :—"Col. Campbell, officers, and non-commissioned officers and men of the 7th Dragoon Guards,—I have been asked to say a few words to your regiment to-day, and I have great pleasure in doing so. The regiment has well deserved the medals which I have had the honour of presenting to-day by the part it has taken recently in the short but brilliant campaign in Egypt. You who were in the field could have no adequate idea of the anxiety and interest with which every action and event of that short campaign was followed at home. It was not that we had any doubt as to the result. Of that we were certain. We thought the enemy was a very formidable one; but we felt that the eyes of all Europe were upon our Army, and we hoped and trusted that the work which it had to do would be done well, efficiently, and quickly. That was done, and this regiment, I am glad to learn, has borne its full share in the labours and in the honours of the campaign. You took part, and a brilliant part, in the charge of Kassassin—one of the most stirring incidents of the campaign; and you have also played a distinguished part in other actions, which I need not recite. We never felt at home a doubt that the British Army would on this occasion show any lack of its ancient valour and good-conduct in the field. But I would remind you that it is necessary, in order that the British Army should effectually serve its country, not only to show valour in the field, but that it should arrive on the field in a state of efficiency and in good order. I am glad to know that the condition of this regiment on its arrival in Egypt, during the campaign in Egypt, during the occupation in Egypt, and on its return from Egypt, has been creditable to its character and to the officers who command it; and I am glad to learn that the regiment has returned as it went out,—with its men, and especially its horses, in a state of efficiency which reflects credit upon all. Col. Campbell, I have been informed that an ancestor of my own was instrumental in the original formation of this gallant corps. William Cavendish, Earl of Devonshire, is one of my ancestors, of whom his family have always felt most proud, not only on account of his own gallant character, but because he bore a large part in those matters which have led to the creation of our present free Constitution, and have secured to the country the privileges which it enjoys. He originally raised this regiment, and I wish it had been possible that it should have continued in some way or another to maintain its connection with the family of its first colonel; but that has not been so. Your regiment has served under many names, but it has always served with distinction in the past, and I doubt not that it will continue to do so in the future. Col. Campbell, I have had much pleasure in taking part in the interesting proceedings here to-day, and I will not detain you longer, but conclude by wishing you every prosperity in the future to your gallant regiment." Col. Campbell, in reply, on behalf of the regiment of the 7th Dragoon Guards, thanked his lordship for the honour he had done them. The troops then marched past, the 7th leading the way, and the 16th Regt. bringing up the rear. A mead of praise must be awarded to the excellent marching of the Bedfordshires; and considering that the majority of the men composing the six companies only averaged between seven and eight months' service, the regiment certainly deserves great credit. The men wore their Indian helmets, scarlet tunics, and drab overalls. They appeared to be a very fine and well-set-up lot; and if our infantry soldiers were like the cavalry men, what an Army we should have! With the exception of the 16th, all the troops had served in Egypt, and every man and boy wore one or more decorations. The Marquis was afterwards entertained at lunch by Col. Campbell and the officers. The death is officially announced of Lieut. J. Murphy as having occurred on the 22nd ult. He entered the service July 29 last.

12th Lancers. Capt. Hill has been granted leave from India to England for 12 months, on medical certificate. Capt. Dean, military secretary, has been appointed private secretary to the Governor of Bombay.

14th Hussars. Lieut. Mitchell has leave from India to England for 15 months, on urgent private affairs.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The following movements are announced :—Nos. 1 and 2 Batys. 1st Brig. Cinque Ports Division, at Dover, embarked on Monday, the former for Guernsey and the latter for Alderney; on Tuesday, the 2nd Baty. 1st Brig. Lancashire Division left Weymouth for Jersey. During the week, the 1st Baty. 1st Brig. Northern Division has left Alderney for Weymouth; the 2nd Baty., Jersey, for Dover; and the 3rd Baty., Guernsey, for Dover.

Officers of Royal Artillery in India are to be allowed to compete for joining the advanced class at Woolwich, and, if successful, will be seconded.

Grenades and numerals are no longer to be worn on the collars of the great-coats of the Royal Artillery.

The following appointments appear in Indian General Orders :—"Lieut. J. D. H. Waller, R.A., to be an Assistant-Superintendent of Factories, vice Capt. J. G. Stone, R.A., appointed Superintendent of Factories. Punjab Frontier Force, No. 2 Mountain Battery.—Lieut. C. P. Triscott, R.A., 2nd subaltern, to be officiating 1st subaltern, vice Lieut. E. A. Smith; and Lieut. W. Moore-Lane, R.A., to be officiating 2nd subaltern, vice Lieut. C. P. Triscott. No. 3 Mountain Battery.—Capt. R. A. C. King, R.A., commandant, No. 5 Garrison Battery, to be officiating commandant, vice Capt. W. Aitken, R.A., on furlough. No. 5 Garrison Battery.—Lieut. E. A. Smith, R.A., 1st subaltern, No. 2 Mountain Battery, to be officiating commandant, vice Capt. R. A. C. King."

K Baty. 4th Brig., under command of Major W. L. Hutchinson, will be removed from Glasgow to the Curragh, to replace the I Baty. 4th Brig.

M Baty.. A Brig. R.H.A., under command of Brevet Lieut.-Col. W. S. Curzon, is in readiness to move from St. John's Wood to Portobello Barracks, Dublin.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Col. A. B. Fyers, Surveyor-General of the Island of Ceylon, died at Bath on the 5th inst., in his 54th year. The deceased was the son of the late Major-Gen. T. Fyers, R.E. He was born in 1829, and gazetted 2nd lieut. in 1847. He was promoted to capt. in 1856, and to lieut.-col. in 1873. From 1849 till 1858 he served in the Mauritius, and during the greater part of that period he was "Government Meteorological Observer" in that island. He was stationed at the Curragh Camp from 1858 until 1861, and and at Malta from 1861 until 1865. In 1866 he was nominated Surveyor-General of Ceylon, and was then placed on the seconded list of the Corps of Royal Engineers. In 1878 he attained the brevet rank of colonel in the Army. As Surveyor-General of Ceylon he held a seat in the Legislative Council.

Col. R. N. Dawson-Scott has been appointed Deputy-Director of Works for Barracks at the War Office, in succession to Col. P. Ravenhill, C.B.

Major-Gen. A. C. Cooke, Director-General of the Ordnance Survey at Southampton, vacated his appointment on the 6th inst., being succeeded by Col. R. H. Stotherd, who has been for some time in charge of the Ordnance Survey at Mountjoy Barracks, Dublin.

No. 5 Compy. is under orders to proceed from the Cape to Gibraltar, and No. 32 Compy. from Gibraltar to the Cape.

The Bombay Gazette says :—"When the order was issued limiting the tenure of command of native regiments to five years, it was not clearly understood whether it was the intention to include a corps like the Sappers and Miners. But on reference, it was ruled that the order applied to the Sappers and Miners, as well as to native regiments; and in consequence, Col. Hills, C.B., R.E., the distinguished officer at present in command of the Bombay Sappers and Miners, will have to vacate, as he was appointed commandant of the corps in Aug. 1871. We believe that, in recognition of Col. Hills' services in the field, and of his efforts to bring the corps to the high pitch of efficiency to which it has long attained, he has been granted an extension of command to the end of this year. We are decidedly of opinion that the period might have been still further lengthened with advantage to the service."

Grenadier Guards. Lieut. the Hon. C. R. W. Colville has resigned his appointment as A.D.C. to Gen. Hardinge, Commander-in-Chief of Bombay.

4th King's Own Royal Lancaster Regiment. The 2nd Batn. will, it is rumoured, leave Bombay in the winter for Poona.

6th Royal Warwickshire Regiment. Capt. N. F. Mansergh, Adjt. 3rd Batn., died at Warwick, after a short illness, on the 9th inst., aged 37 years. He joined the Army Dec. 4, 1866; became lieut., Oct. 27, 1871; and capt., May 17, 1879.

7th Royal Fusiliers. Lieut.-Col. W. B. Colvin, commanding the 2nd Batn., died at Bellary on the 8th inst., aged 42 years. The deceased entered the Army Nov. 17, 1851; became lieut., Aug. 16, 1859; capt., Nov. 7, 1862; brevet major, Dec. 19, 1876; major, Sept. 25, 1878; lieut.-col., March 23, 1881; and served in the Afghan Campaign. Lieut.-Col. Butler will succeed to the command of the batn., Major Sweny becoming lieut.-col. Lieut.-Col. Butler, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for 15 months, on urgent private affairs. Major Smith, 2nd Batn., is about to retire.

10th Lincolnshire Regiment. Private John Cocklin was charged before Mr. Justice Straight, at the Allahabad Sessions, on March 12, with the murder of Lieut. and Adjt. W. H. Coode, at Benares, on the evening of Feb. 16. Nine European and East Indian gentlemen formed the jury, Mr. Robert Carr being the foreman. Mr. Hill, who prosecuted, stated at some length the circumstances upon which the prosecution was based. Provost-Serjt. Cosgrave said that when prisoner fired the last shot he was 15 or 20 yards distant from Mr. Coode, who was in the act of dismounting when that shot was fired. He called out, "What are you doing, man?" two or three times. The jury found the prisoner guilty, and he was sentenced to death.

12th Suffolk Regiment. Col. Baker, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on urgent private affairs.

14th West Yorkshire Regiment. Lieut. MacAdam, a probationer for the S.C., has been granted leave from India to England, on medical certificate.

15th East Yorkshire Regiment. The 2nd Batn. is expected to move next relief season from Poona to Bombay. Lieut. Hamilton, 2nd Batn., has been approved Aide-de-Camp to Sir J. Fergusson, Bart., Governor of Bombay. Capt. G. B. Skinner, late of the regiment, died at Montpellier, Bristol, on the 4th inst., aged 39 years.

16th Bedfordshire Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Wetherall, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for fifteen months, on urgent private affairs.

17th Leicestershire Regiment. Lieut. Cowper, a candidate for the Madras S.C., has been appointed to the 14th Bengal N.I., on probation.

18th Royal Irish Regiment. The move of the regiment from Malta to Aldershot will be carried out next month.

21st Royal Scots Fusiliers. As it is a matter of the rarest occurrence for one officer during his term of command to command the two battalions of the same corps, and as the rarity is realised in the Royal Scots Fusiliers, the following address by Col. Gildea, A.D.C., may be interesting, on the occasion of his first appearance on parade in command of the 1st Batn. after he had resigned command of the 2nd Batn. :—"Officers, non-commissioned officers, and men, I think it will not come amiss of me to say a few words to you on this, the first parade, I have had the honour to command in the 1st Batn. As a rule, an officer or man joining a new regiment must feel a little strange, but when I look around me and see so many of my old comrades, and remembering, as I shall ever do with pleasure, the many happy days I have spent under the same colours as you have, I do not feel so. I need say nothing to my old comrades (men of the 2nd Batn.), beyond that I hope they are as glad to see me as I am to see them. To those of you to whom I am unknown, I would say it will always be my utmost endeavour, as your colonel, to perform my duty to you justly and strictly, to make your soldiering under me as happy as I can, and to use my utmost endeavours to instil into you that esprit de corps and love for our regiment which alone can keep it second to none in her Majesty's service; but I cannot do this unless you will join me, and I trust, from the senior officer in this battalion to the last-joined recruit, I shall receive every support. You must, one and all, endeavour, by a strict performance of your duty, whether that duty is, by obedience to all orders, by attention to your drill, by your good conduct, both in and out of barracks, and with your good comradeship one with another, to help me. If you do this, I feel certain in after-life we shall be able to look back with pleasure to the time we have soldiered together. And one word more. I trust that during my tenure of command I may be able to unite the two battalions, so that they may look on each other as one and the same,—to repress all jealousy, and to have one great aim always in view, and that is, to raise, if possible, the good name of the Royal Scots Fusiliers."

23rd Welsh Fusiliers. Lieut. Helbert, 1st Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on medical certificate.

24th South Wales Borderers. Lieut.-Col. Caldwell, 2nd Batn., has leave from India to England for six months, on urgent private affairs. Capt. Logan, 2nd Batn., has passed the higher-standard examination in Hindostanee.

25th King's Own Borderers. The 2nd Batn. has moved from Fermoy to Kinsale. Capt. M'Causland, 1st Batn., has passed the necessary examination for appointment to the Pay Department, and has been posted to the King's Dragoon Guards as pymr. Lieut. Keene, 1st Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for 15 months, and Lieut. Johnston for eight months, on urgent private affairs.

29th Worcestershire Regiment. Lieut. and Adjt. Hilton has been granted leave from India to England for eight months, on private affairs.

30th East Lancashire Regiment. Major Clowes has been granted leave from India to England for 15 months, on urgent private affairs.

31st East Surrey Regiment. The move of the regiment from Malta to Aldershot will be carried out next month. The death is officially announced of Lieut.-Col. J. U. Mosse, captain on the Retired List. The deceased entered the Army April 18, 1856; became capt., April 1, 1870; and retired with the hon. rank of lieut.-col.

40th South Lancashire Regiment. Lieut. Simpson has leave from India to England for twelve months, on private affairs.

41st Welsh Regiment. Lieuts. Ansell and Jones are candidates for the S.C. Lieut. Ansell has been posted to the 28th Madras N.I., and Lieut. Jones to the 14th Madras N.I., on probation.

42nd, Black Watch (Royal Highlanders). The Bombay Gazette says :—"Lieut. T. Souter, who has lately received a commission in the Black Watch, is an Anglo-Pathan. His father was a major in the Army, his mother a Pathan lady. After the father's death, the mother pined away; and on her death-bed she sent for Mrs. Clark, wife of the Rev. Robert Clark, C.M.S., who was then at Peshawur, and consigned the son to her care. Mrs. Clark accepted the charge, and educated young Souter at her own expense, both in India and Scotland. Not wishing to burden his foster-parents, he enlisted. His distinguished valour at Tel-el-Kebir has been made the occasion for giving him a well-earned commission."

43rd Oxfordshire Light Infantry. Lieut. Acton is a candidate for the S.C., and has been posted to the 1st Madras N.I., on probation.

44th Essex Regiment. Lieut. Watson has leave from India to England for 15 months, on private affairs. Major J. W. Glubb, formerly of the regiment, died at 1 Norfolk Square, Brighton, on the 7th inst., aged 70 years.

ROYAL MARINES.

Vacancies on the Staff of the Royal Marines will occur during the present year, in consequence of periods of Staff service expiring, as follows, viz. :—Deputy-Adjt.-Gen., on Sept. 3; Assist.-Adjt.-Gen., Aug. 9; Commandant, R.M.A., July 3; and Commandant, R.M.L.I., at Gosport, July 4. A vacancy for Quartermaster will also occur at the depôt at Walmer, by the retirement of Qrmr. Herring, who will reach the limit of age in July next. Rumours point to Col. Howard Jones, C.B., A.D.C., who commanded the Marines in the late Egyptian Campaign, as the coming Assistant-Adjutant-General.

57th Middlesex Regiment. Lieut. Fraser, a candidate for the S.C., has been appointed to the 2nd Madras N.I., on probation.

58th Northamptonshire Regiment. The regiment is under orders to move from Natal to the Cape.

65th York and Lancaster Regiment. Lieut. Wilmer, a probationer, wing-officer 19th Bengal N.I., is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C. from August 23, 1881.

66th Berkshire Regiment. The Globe says :—"The members of the 2nd Berkshire Regt. (66th Foot) may be pardoned for viewing the process of military medal giving as somewhat peculiar. For services in Egypt, about six months ago, the Duke of Cambridge handed others on Saturday not only the Egyptian medals, but the Khedive's stars; while for their services in the Afghan Campaign, and particularly at Maiwand, two years and a half ago, the gallant 66th only then received their solitary decoration. Why the 2nd Berkshire should be selected for such an unnecessary test of patience, after it has given such unmistakeable proof of bravery, the public will be at a loss to understand."

67th Hampshire Regiment. It is stated that Lieut.-Col. Baker, who served in the Afghan Campaign, and was with his regiment in the march on and capture of Cabul, and at the fighting round Sherpur, &c., is to be appointed to the command of Wellington Depôt in the Nilgiris. Lieut. Henderson is a candidate for the S.C., and has been appointed to the 10th Madras N.I., on probation.

68th Durham Light Infantry. Lieut.-Col. Shaw has been appointed commandant of the convalescent depot at Kussowlee.

72nd Seaforth Highlanders. The regiment was inspected by H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, at Parkhurst, Isle of Wight, on the 6th inst. The battalion was drawn up in line, under command of Lieut.-Col. Stockwell, C.B. His Royal Highness, who arrived on the ground shortly after 12 o'clock, was received with a Royal salute. He walked down the ranks, making a close inspection of each individual officer and man. After the inspection, the battalion was formed into column and marched past. It was then wheeled into line, and by command of his Royal Highness was formed into three sides of a square. His Royal Highness then addressed the regiment as follows :—"Col. Stockwell, officers and men of the Seaforth Highlanders, I cannot express how great a pleasure this brief visit to you has afforded me. I congratulate you cordially on the magnificent appearance of your regiment, and the smart and soldier-like way it has been brought before me by you, Colonel Stockwell, on the steadiness of the men in the ranks, and the precision with which all movements have been executed on parade. I can assure you it has never fallen to my lot to inspect a finer regiment, and I hope that when, in future years, I shall visit you again, I shall find the regiment in the same magnificent state. The excellent example set by Col. Stockwell, the officers, and such smart non-commissioned officers, and so well followed by the men, has earned for the regiment the distinguished name it now bears, and has brought it to a state of efficiency I have never seen surpassed. Men of the 72nd, of your behaviour on parade I can judge for myself; the medals on your breasts speak for themselves. What the regiment has done in India and in Egypt is well known to all, and I have no doubt that, should war arise in future, you will well sustain the glorious name which you already bear. Col. Stockwell and officers of the Seaforth Highlanders, I thank you for the great pleasure it has given me merely to look at your magnificent regiment to-day, and I congratulate myself on having had the honour of inspecting such a distinguished corps; and you, Col. Stockwell, much more so on commanding it." Before dismissing the parade, his Royal Highness ordered the regiment to march past him to their quarters in fours. His Royal Highness was accompanied by his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, General commanding the Southern District, Col. Lord W. F. E. Seymour, the Duke's A.D.C., Col. Sir Owen Lanyon, K.C.M.G., C.B., and Lieut.-Col. Lascelles, Assist.-Adjt. and Qrmr.-Gen.

83rd Royal Irish Rifles. Lieut. Armstrong, a candidate for the S.C., has been appointed to the 1st Bombay N.I., on probation.

89th Royal Irish Fusiliers. Capt. Boyle has been appointed military secretary to Sir J. Fergusson, K.C.M.G., the Governor of Bombay, in succession to Capt. Dean, 12th Lancers, who takes up the appointment of private secretary.

90th Cameronians (Scottish Rifles). Capt. Fergusson has leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate.

91st Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. The regiment is ordered to move from the Cape to Ceylon.

95th Sherwood Foresters (Derbyshire Regiment). Lieut. Gifford is ordered home from India to join the depôt for two years.

98th North Staffordshire Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Heathcote has resigned his appointment as comdt. of the Parundhur Sanatorium, Bombay. A correspondent writes :—"Under the head of '98th North Staffordshire Regiment,'—98th and 64th Regts.,—allusion was last week made to the stagnancy of promotion on the subalterns' list, and to the still further prospect of its suspension by the intended absorption of Capt. Carey's vacancy, so reducing the list of captains to its minimum, no allowance being made for the two adjutants, who happen to be subalterns, although the regiment has been sent, 950 strong, to the Afghan frontier—Quetta. It is difficult to see upon what sound principle, if upon any principle at all, the War Office have acted of late, in carrying out Royal Warrants and in the distribution of Staff appointments and promotions, &c. It is inconceivable that a gallant regiment should remain under a ban for the delinquency, real or imaginary, of the unfortunate officer recently deceased. Yet that officer, although having passed the Staff College five years ago, and for a brief time on the Staff in South Africa, never was seconded, and hence gave no promotion. It is further observable that, while a wholesome—nay, rapid—flow of promotion of subalterns has taken place in many regiments through seconding, no officer of the 98th Regt. above the rank of lieutenant is seconded. A pall is thus felt to rest on them." The second wing left Kurrachee on the 4th ult. for Quetta, on relief by the first wing of the 61st Regiment returning from Quetta. The families have been permitted to accompany the regiment; consequently, no depôt of the corps will be formed at Kurrachee as originally intended.

100th Leinster Regiment (Royal Canadians). Capt. Denys, having passed his examination for the Army Pay Department, has been posted to the 2nd Batn. Seaforth Highlanders as Paymaster. Capt. Kempster has been permitted to resign his probationary appointment for the S.C., and revert to duty with the regiment.

101st Royal Munster Fusiliers. On arrival home from Nova Scotia, the regiment will be stationed at Aldershot.

1st West India Regiment. Lieut. Errington, a candidate for the S.C., has been appointed to the 1st Bombay N.I., on probation.

Pay Department. During the past month, the following changes have occurred in the Department :—Majors Forbes, on passage to Ceylon; Rippon, from 29th Regimental District, Worcester, to District office, Gibraltar; Thorburn, from District office, Gibraltar, to 29th Regimental District, Worcester; Noyes, from Cyprus, to 43rd Regimental District, Oxford; and Beaumont, from 2nd Batn. Grenadier Guards, to unattached list; Capts. Compigné, from 13th Regimental District, Taunton, on passage to Ceylon; Brockman, on passage to Bermuda; Jackson, to Malta; Bell, from Southern District to Discharge Depôt, Gosport; Ward, from 37th Regt., to District office, Cork; and Longbourne, to civil employment, Ireland. One officer has joined on probation, Capt. W. H. A. Denys. There are seven Regimental Districts, three cavalry, and 28 infantry regiments wanting paymasters; total, 38 vacancies. From Egypt we hear that Capt. Stradling is recovering, sufficiently to accompany his regiment to Malta; and Capt. Mortimer has so far improved in health as to be able shortly to proceed to England, on sick-leave. Capt. A. Gleg, 53rd Light Infantry, who had a very bad fall from his horse in Egypt, is still under medical treatment from the effects of the accident.

Medical Department. Deputy-Surg.-Gen. W. G. N. Manley, V.C., lately serving with the Expeditionary Force in Egypt, has been appointed principal medical officer to the Chatham Division.

Veterinary Department. Vet.-Surg. J. Anderson, recently on active service in Egypt, succeeds Vet.-Surg. Queripel as Assistant Superintendent of Horse-breeding Operations in India. The death is officially announced of Inspecting Vet.-Surg. H. Tatam, on the Retired List, as having occurred on March 8.

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

Royal Scots Fusiliers. We (Ayr Advertiser) regret to announce the death of Major James Miller, which occurred at his residence, Netherby, Racecourse Road, on the 5th inst., at 6.30. Deceased, who had reached his 80th year, enjoyed perfect health until the previous day, when he had a shock of paralysis, and never regained consciousness. Major Miller was adjutant of the Royal Ayr and Wigtown Militia for a period of over 20 years, during the colonelcies of Sir Thomas M. Cuninghame and Sir James Fergusson. He retired about 17 years ago with the rank of major, and has resided in Ayr since, enjoying the respect of all who knew him. He rendered efficient service as a Director of the Ayr Industrial Schools; and though refraining as a rule from taking part in public movements, his sympathies were enlisted on behalf of all good objects, and he was never happier than when he had the opportunity to do a good turn to anybody.

In answer to Sir J. Bailey, the Marquis of Hartington stated on Tuesday that a new edition of "Regulations for the Militia," issued in 1880, was in course of preparation.

The Hampshire Engineers assembled at Gosport on Thursday for 56 days' training. The following regiments are ordered out on Monday :—Artillery : 6th Brig. North Irish Division, at Dungannon. Infantry : 5th Batn. Derbyshire Regt., Derby; 4th Batn. Norfolk Regt., Great Yarmouth; 3rd and 4th Batns. Northamptonshire Regt., Lichfield; 3rd Batn. Royal Irish Rifles, Newtownards; 4th Batn. Royal Irish Rifles, Antrim.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

1st Essex Artillery. Authority has been received for the brigade to encamp at Harwich from May 10 to May 16. During the stay under canvas, Lieut.-Col. Howard's command will carry out a course of gunnery practice.

17th (North) Middlesex Rifles. This battalion will go into camp for a week at Ealing at Whitsuntide, and will be officially inspected on May 12.

19th Middlesex (Bloomsbury) Rifles. Lieut.-Col. Richards entertained Major-Gen. Higginson, the Staff of the Home District, and some fifty other guests, on Saturday evening, at dinner, at the new head-quarters of the corps, in Chenies Street, Tottenham-Court Road, to meet the officers and non-commissioned officers of the regiment. No wonder the Bloomsbury Rifles stand foremost among Metropolitan Volunteer regiments, when they are commanded by a chief whose generosity knows no bounds! If ever a Volunteer commanding officer deserved recognition, he is Col. Richards, for he, by his liberality and soldierly devotion, has set an example to the whole Volunteer service.

24th Middlesex (Post Office) Rifles. The Khedive's star was distributed to the contingent which served in Egypt, at a parade at St. George's Barracks, on Wednesday morning, 34 non-commissioned officers and men receiving the award at the hands of Major-Gen. Higginson, who was accompanied by Col. the Hon. P. S. Methuen, A.A.G. The battalion proceeds to Portsmouth on the 9th prox., and will, as usual, be officially inspected on the day on which her Majesty's birth will be celebrated (May 26).

Major-Gen. Higginson, C.B., has approved of the various regiments in the Home District undergoing their annual official inspection on the dates and at the places indicated below :—Artillery.—1st London, July 21, Wellington Barracks; 2nd Middlesex (Customs), June 9, the Tower; 3rd Middlesex, June 23, Wellington Barracks. Engineers.—1st London, June 23, Regent's Park; 1st Middlesex, June 9, Wellington Barracks; 2nd Tower Hamlets, June 16, Victoria Park. West Surrey, June 16, Croydon; 2nd V.B. West Surrey, July 23, Shalford Park; 3rd V.B. West Surrey, June 2, Southwark Park; 4th V.B. West Surrey, June 30, Lambeth Palace; 3rd Surrey, June 23, Wimbledon; 5th Surrey, June 11, Bushey Park; 7th Surrey, July 7, Lambeth Palace; 1st Oxford, June 15, Oxford; 2nd Oxford, at head-quarters of corps; 1st Bucks, August 8, in camp; 2nd Bucks, July 28, Eton.

The annual meeting of the Volunteer Services Accident Fund Society, which was established in 1862, was held on the 4th inst., Major Norbury Pott, Surrey Rifle Volunteers, in the chair. The report for 1882 showed that 186 claims on the fund had been made during the year, and that grants of money, varying from 10s. to £37, had been made to 165 claimants, the remaining 21 having either withdrawn their applications, or failed to comply with the rules of the society. Since its establishment, the society has made grants of money amounting to more than £10,500, to 2,308 claimants. The annual subscription is only 1s.

It may not be generally known, yet it is a fact (says the Calcutta Englishman), that the European garrison of India has been during the last two months reduced by 5,000 men. The reduction, which has been going on steadily and quietly, has been accomplished by reserve men out of their time being sent home, and no new men brought out to fill up the rather serious deficiency. Whilst, on the one hand, the revenue will benefit to some extent by this move, and Major Baring's expenses be lightened during the year, we think that, on the other hand, it presents matter for grave and thoughtful consideration, and we trust the authorities may yet see fit, although the trooping season is past, to bring up our army of occupation to the number which has been laid down as absolutely necessary for the interests of India.

The Queen, Empress of India, has been graciously pleased to permit the Bombay Sappers and Miners to bear upon their appointments the inscription "Candahar, 1880," in commemoration of the services of No. 2 company of that corps on Sept. 1, 1880.

It is notified that the Secretary of State for India in Council has been pleased to decide that existing commandants of native regiments who have not completed 32 years' service for pension on March 31, 1883, may retain their commands until April 1, 1884, provided that any commandant who completes the term of 32 years' service for pension between March 31, 1883, and March 31, 1884, shall vacate his command on the date of completion of that term.

Army & Navy Gazette.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1883.

WHEN the Royal Warrant came into operation in October last by which Colonels and Lieutenant-Colonels on the old Royal Artillery List promoted subsequent to September 30, 1877, were run out of regimental employment after five, and Majors after seven, years in the rank, we drew attention to the anomaly of the officers of the late Indian Lists being exempt from its operation; and, as it was felt on all sides that it would be detrimental to the best interests of the regiment having officers serving together under such entirely different conditions, it was generally assumed that arrangements would soon be made to put an end to such a state of things. Six months have now elapsed, and there seems no sign of any move in the matter. The sores caused in the Royal Regiment by the amalgamation have been healing year by year. The only effect of this new arrangement will be to open them all again. This cannot be wondered at, if a portion of one class of officers serve on more advantageous terms, as regards tenure of command, than another. In the best interests of the regiment at large, the sooner this matter is put right, the better. The following facts will serve to show the serious consequences likely to arise to many of the Captains in consequence of the present anomaly. Of the 30 senior Captains, three reach the age of 42 this year, and 16 will be 41 before April 1, 1884. As they cannot expect to run through the Majors' List under seven years, it is of vital importance to them, in order to avoid compulsory retirement at 48, to obtain speedy promotion. If the dead-lock in the Indian lists continues, many of the junior Captains also will ultimately be forced to retire, either as Captains or Majors, for the evil assumes serious proportions, when we recollect that there are 76 Royal and 54 Indian Lieutenant-Colonels, or, in other words, that four of the promotions to the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel hinge on this question. The seniors of the Royal List naturally complain of their forced retirement, whilst their Indian compeers continue to serve; and the juniors feel that their interests suffer from the same cause; and the amalgamation of the regiment into one harmonious whole will never take place, so long as officers of the same corps serve under such different conditions. Surely some pressure might be brought to bear, either by the removal of these officers to an unemployed list after five years in their respective ranks, or by a revision of their pension regulations. If this is impossible, the Authorities might, at all events, modify the Warrant (Article 100), by substituting 49 for 48 years, as the age for compulsory retirement of Majors, so long as such a large proportion of their seniors are unaffected by the regulations for compulsory retirement.

We see it stated that Lord Wolseley is to succeed Sir Daniel Lysons in command of the Aldershot Division. What next shall we be told?

Lieutenant-Colonel Sir C. W. Wilson, K.C.M.G., C.B., who has been employed for some time past on special service in Egypt, has been selected to succeed Colonel R. H. Stotherd, R.E., in charge of the Ordnance Survey in Ireland, on that officer's transfer to Southampton, as Director of Ordnance Survey.

It has been remarked in Cairo with surprise that, owing to a slip, Colonel Hicks, who is chief of the Staff to the Governor of the Soudan, describes himself in a recent despatch as "giving orders to his own General, Abd-el-Rader." It may be that it was so, but it would be more politic, any way, not to say so publicly.

We are glad to be able to state that Colonel George Bray, the late highly popular Assistant-Adjutant-General of Lieutenant-General Prince Saxe-Weimar's Division, is better, and slowly rallying from the severe illness with which he was seized on the very day on which he completed his five years' Staff service at Portsmouth, and immediately after the Volunteer Review, at which he served as Chief of the Staff. Colonel Bray served for three years in the 39th Regiment, and for 31 years in the 96th Regiment, which he commanded for eight years. He held various Staff appointments, including Assistant-Adjutant-General and Deputy-Adjutant-General of the Bombay Army, and Assistant-Adjutant-General of the South-Western Division. Colonel Bray is a most popular and well-known officer, who has made a host of friends, who deeply regret his severe illness.

A Distinguished Service Reward has been conferred upon Colonel the Hon. E. G. Curzon, half-pay, late 52nd Light Infantry. Colonel Curzon, who held, until a few weeks ago, the appointment of Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General at Aldershot, joined the Army December 14, 1844, and became colonel February 19, 1875. He served in the Indian Mutiny Campaign of 1857-58.

Major Clarke, R.A., whose services in the Cape Colonies, Transvaal, &c., were conspicuous during the past few years, has arrived in Egypt, and will be entrusted by Baker Pasha with the command of a select body of gendarmery.

The utmost regret is felt at the retirement of Major E. J. Lynch, 3rd Buffs, who has resigned his appointment as Garrison Instructor, and left the service. It would be difficult to find words to express the esteem in which Major Lynch was held by all classes of officers throughout the Home District. Fortunately, Major Lynch is not to be entirely lost to the service, for he is about to bring his experience to bear in the preparation of Army aspirants, of whom there are so many now in search of a qualified "coach."

A return lately presented to Parliament shows the numbers wanted to complete the establishment of the Militia in the United Kingdom at the training of 1881. The total deficiency in England and Scotland was 14,702, an increase of 7,547 on the former year. There were also absent without leave 7,168, so that the total deficiency was 21,870, against 14,950 in 1880. The chief delinquents are, as usual, the Infantry; the worst, as in previous years, being the South Lancashire (late 4th Lancashire), with 655 of all ranks, and in the Liverpool (late 2nd Lancashire), with 545. The additional battalion to these regiments appears a misnomer. The next in order of demerit are the South Yorkshire (late 1st West York), with 414; the Sussex (double battalion), 387; 2nd Surrey (double battalion), 377; 3rd Stafford, 351 (to be now reduced two companies); East Kent (double battalion), 342; and 4th Devon, 334. Following these are the 4th Stafford, 291 short; Dorset, 279; West Kent (double battalion), 259; North Lancashire (late 3rd Lancashire), 257; 3rd East Lancashire, 254; 3rd Shropshire (to be reduced two companies), 227; 3rd Essex, 221; Cornwall, 219; 3rd Devon, 214; South Stafford (double battalion), 214; York and Lancaster (late 3rd West York), 213; West Riding, 222; 7th King's Rifles (late 2nd Middlesex), 206; 4th Oxford, 205; 3rd Suffolk, 204. Twenty-seven other regiments have deficiencies from 200 to 100, of which the worst-off are the 4th Derby, 199 short; 3rd Lincoln, 191; 3rd Northumberland, 182; 4th Essex and 3rd Wilts, 177; 3rd Cheshire, 173 (to be reduced two companies); 3rd and 4th Leicester, 181 (to be increased two companies). For the first time, four of the Scotch regiments show large fallings-off,—the Highland Borderers, 215; Ayr and Wigtown, 202; Aberdeen Highlanders, 175; and the Edinburgh Light Infantry, 140. It would seem, therefore, that the authorities are not really desirous of bringing up the Militia to the establishment voted by Parliament.

Dr. Cameron will on Monday ask the Financial Secretary to the War Office, with reference to the mules purchased by Major Carre for the Egyptian Expedition, whether they have as yet been paid for; if so, it being acknowledged that the Veterinary Surgeon who accompanied Major Carre to Smyrna refused to pass the mules, and that the Committee appointed to report on them on their arrival at Ismailia reported only 198 out of a consignment of 612 animals as fit for service, by whose authority the payment was made.

Apropos of Wednesday's ceremony at Shorncliffe, we would suggest that Secretaries of State for War, when inspecting or decorating troops, should wear their official uniform, instead of appearing in an official capacity, at a full-dress parade of her Majesty's troops, in a very ordinary suit of mufti. More éclat would be conferred upon the proceedings if this suggestion could be carried out. Lord Hartington is Honorary Colonel of the 3rd Battalion (Sherwood Foresters) Derbyshire Volunteers. He might surely have donned his uniform on Wednesday in honour of the occasion.

Captain Farquhar (late Coldstream Guards), now in the Soudan, has received brevet rank as field-officer with the forces there.

Mr. Macfarlane will on Monday ask the Secretary of State for War if he will lay upon the table a copy of the memorial presented to the War Department by Mr. Lynal Thomas, and the correspondence which has passed between Mr. Thomas and the War Office since July, 1882, having reference to a claim for repayment of expenses in connection with heavy rifled cannon.

It is currently reported that, as one of the results of Lord Morley's Committee, no more promotion to the rank of Quartermaster or Lieutenant of Orderlies will be made in the Army Hospital Corps, and that the positions held by these officers will in future be filled by warrant officers, to which rank a number of non-commissioned officers in the corps will shortly be raised.

From all we hear, a wide-spread feeling of dissatisfaction exists, and we must admit that it is not unreasonable, at the extraordinary delay in publishing the long expected and long promised Army Pay Department Warrant. Scarcely a month ago, with a flourish of trumpets, the contemplated changes were announced by the Secretary of State for War, when introducing the Army Estimates to the notice of the House of Commons, and the natural inference was that the Warrant would appear with the April Circulars; but in those issued with the current official Army List, there is nothing whatever directly or indirectly bearing on the subject. It may possibly be urged that delay has been occasioned by the Treasury, but even if such is the case, the War Office are alone to blame, for not having formulated their proposals months ago, particularly when it is remembered that the Accountant-General, so far back as last June, acknowledged that the proposals laid before him for the improvement of the Department were just and reasonable, and that he trusted to have them carried out in the autumn. In the face of all this, why such delay?

The difficulty in regard to the land at Dungeness having been overcome, a camp of instruction will, we understand, be opened in June near Lydd for garrison batteries of Artillery, who will undergo there a course of siege practice with heavy guns. The first commanding officer of the camp will, it is believed, be Lieutenant-Colonel Tupper, R.A., now stationed at Portsmouth.

Dr. Farquharson will, in Committee of Supply on Army Estimates, Vote 4, Governor and Commandant of Netley, move to reduce the vote by £548.

Mr. Dillwyn will, on Civil Service Estimates, Class 1, Vote 7, Public Offices' site, move to negative the vote, which is for the purpose of acquiring land for the new War Office and Admiralty.

We cannot congratulate Mr. Marriott on the appositeness of the suggestion made on the 10th inst., in the House of Commons, that ground should be taken for the annual review of the Volunteers compulsorily from the farmers of Brighton, or any other place at which the review may in future be held. Apart from the new principle which would be involved in such an act, the fact of such compulsion would be an unnecessary disturbance of the rights of property. As Lord Hartington remarked in reply, if the authorities of Brighton or any other place are anxious to have the review held in their vicinity, it is obviously their duty to provide a suitable field for the operations. The inhabitants of Brighton have certainly more than compensated themselves for any such expense by the high rates charged for accommodation to the Volunteers during the Easter holidays. It was the same last year at Portsmouth, where as much as 15s. a night was paid for stabling an officer's charger. It is certainly hardly reasonable for the Brightonians to complain of the cost of entertaining, after having the kudos of doing so, especially as the entertained paid to the fullest extent for the hospitality accorded.

A Royal Warrant has notified that the First-class Army Reserve will "in future" consist of two divisions, of which the second will not be liable to be called out on permanent service till all the men of the first division have been called out. In the event of an important war, all the Reserves, if we may judge by the late small war, would be required to fill the vacancies left by the striplings unfit to take the field, so that the subdivision now ordered is immaterial. We would suggest the division of our Reserves into many classes. This might lead any foreigners who know nothing about our Military organisation to suppose that we have a Reserve worth dividing.

A work of extreme interest will be published in a few days by Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co., from the pen of Mr. Charles Marvin. The book is of 500 pages, divided into five parts, one of which contains all the opinions of interest in the work recently published by the Russian General Staff on the Afghan War. This work, a voluminous one of 819 pages, was compiled under the auspices of General Soboleff, the head of the Asiatic Department of the General Staff, and now Minister-President in Bulgaria, and is remarkable for the rancour with which he attacks most of the individuals of prominence who took part in the campaign. Besides giving all the opinions expressed in this work, Mr. Marvin furnishes an annotated translation of General Annenkoff's pamphlet on the military position of England and Russia in Central Asia; the adventures of two officers who penetrated in disguise to Merv, a short time ago; the explorations of Lessar, in Afghanistan, and a series of essays on the changes that have come over the Central Asian question since the evacuation of Candahar. Finally, the book is illustrated with 30 sketches and views of Merv and the Turcoman region, including a full-sized one of the fortress of Merv, and a series of the railway from the Caspian to Kizil Arvat, and several maps of the country recently surveyed by Lessar and other explorers. In an appendix is an account of the actual condition of the Russian Navy, and the results that would attend a development of Russian cruisers acting against our communications with Merv.

There is no truth whatever in the report, which has been widely circulated, that Major-General W. Earle, C.S.I., C.B., now in Egypt, will succeed Lieutenant-General Sir Edmund Whitmore as Military Secretary at the Horse Guards. General Whitmore has no intention of resigning his appointment.

Mr. Melton Prior, the special artist for the Illustrated London News, gave a lecture at the Public Hall, Croydon, on Tuesday, 10th, on the late Campaign in Egypt, illustrated by his original sketches. Many of these drawings were very spirited and lifelike, but the test of being enormously magnified was too severe for some of them. Mr. Prior mentioned his own share in the events he described without any of that reserve which is usually shown by naval and military men.

The latest frivolity on the part of irrepressible military officials seems to be to gazette an officer a Major in his regiment, and after allowing him to hold the rank for a term more or less lengthy, to cancel the previous announcement, and relegate him to his former position as a captain. This sort of proceeding may be all very well for those who have idle time on their hands, and do not know exactly how to employ it, but they forget that there exist persons who are only blessed with ordinary intellects, and cannot understand on what principle, under a system of selection, an officer is selected for promotion, when he is not qualified for the grade to which he is advanced. Is this pretty little arrangement copied from the Germans, like so many other of our recent reforms?

Sir A. Alison, by our last accounts, had benefited very much in health by his residence at Ramleh, the Brighton of Alexandria, and was still at his quarters in the little hotel of "Beau Séjour," but the fever had not left him. Duty, however, he does, notwithstanding. On March 28, he made a careful and tedious inspection of the Palace Hospital, Ramleh, accompanied by Major-General Harman and the medical staff. A few days later, he inspected the 46th, under Lieutenant-Colonel John (the 2nd Battalion of "The Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry," which has got exactly one Cornishman, an officer, in it), and he certainly does not take absolute rest. Surgeon-Major Pollock is in attendance on the General, and Deputy-Surgeon-General Irvine was to leave Cairo on the day after the mail left for Ramleh, to consult with his colleague as to Sir Archibald's condition. The fever returns regularly every night, and the temperature mounts to 100 degrees.

There was another of those gatherings in the City on Wednesday, with which the country is becoming unfortunately only too familiar. The occasion was the presentation of a sword of honour to Lord Alcester, and a casket and address to Lord Wolseley, in recognition of their recent services in Egypt. Now, no one objects to any honours which may be conferred upon soldiers and sailors who have distinguished themselves in the service of the State, as Lords Alcester and Wolseley have done lately. But there is a medium in all things, and when civic banquets are made use of for the display of back-scratching to the extent that this pleasing occupation was carried on Wednesday, the services cannot but feel some amount of uneasiness. Where will it all end? Really, if we go on much longer as we have been doing, somebody will, one of these days, stand up, and compare the engagement of Tel-el-Kebir to the decisive battle fought sixty-eight years ago on the plain of Waterloo!

The Navy.

EGYPT WAR MEDAL.

Department of the Accountant-General of the Navy and Comptroller of Navy Pay, Admiralty, Spring Gardens, April 12, 1883.

Notice is hereby given, that Medals for the operations in Egypt are ready for issue to the officers and crews, entitled thereto, of the ships named below:—Her Majesty's ships "Agincourt" and "Invincible." Application should be made personally or by letter to the Accountant-General of the Navy and Comptroller of Navy Pay, Admiralty, London, S.W. Petty officers, seamen, and marines, whether applying in person or by letter, are requested to produce their certificates of service.

ADMIRALTY, April 9, 1883.

NOTICE.—His Highness the Khedive of Egypt (authorised by his Imperial Majesty the Sultan of Turkey), having signified his desire to express his approbation of the services rendered by the Naval Forces during the recent operations in Egypt, by conferring a bronze star on the officers and men of such forces, her Majesty the Queen has been pleased to grant permission to the officers and men of the Royal Navy and Royal Marines who were engaged in those operations from July 11 to Sept. 14, 1882, both days inclusive, to accept and wear the decoration in question. A further notice will be given by advertisement in the London Gazette when the Stars are ready for issue.

ADMIRALTY, April 6, 1883.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of July 21, 1876, the under-mentioned retired officers, having attained fifteen years' seniority as Commanders, have been authorised to assume the rank and title of Retired Captain from the 3rd inst.:—Commanders Stratford Tuke, John Robert Deane Cooper, and Hugh Davis.

Acting Engineer William Fedarb (b) has been confirmed as Engineer in her Majesty's Fleet, with seniority of March 1, 1883.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of April 1, 1881, Fleet-Surgeon John Richard Burke, M.D., has been placed on the Retired List from this date, with permission to assume the rank and title of Retired Deputy-Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets.

ADMIRALTY, April 7, 1883.

Staff Surgeon William Jabez Inman has been promoted to the rank of Fleet Surgeon in her Majesty's Fleet, with seniority of April 2, 1883.

ADMIRALTY, April 10, 1883.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of February 22, 1870, Staff Captain Frank Inglis has this day been placed on the Retired List, with permission to assume the rank and title of Retired Captain.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of April 30, 1877, the under-mentioned Engineers have been placed on the Retired List from the 9th inst.:—Andrew Ross Stewart and Robert Roots.

ADMIRALTY, April 11, 1883.

The seniority of Mr. George Augustus Frederick Cunyngham Sceales as Paymaster in her Majesty's Fleet, is Jan. 19, 1883, instead of March 7, 1883, as stated in the Gazette of March 13 last.

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL.—ITS UNEQUALLED EFFICACY IN THE WASTING DISEASES OF CHILDREN.—Dr. G. Saunders, C.B., late Deputy-Inspector-General Army Hospitals, Superintendent London Medical Mission, writes:—"I have used Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil extensively among the sick poor of St. Giles's, and consider it a valuable remedy, especially in the wasting diseases of children." Dr. Stavely King, Physician to the Metropolitan Free Hospital, writes:—"I can very conscientiously testify to the superior qualities of Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil. I have employed it with great advantage in cases of mesenteric and pulmonary tubercle, and in the atrophic diseases of children." Dr. R. C. Croft, author of "Handbook for the Nursery," writes:—"I have tried Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil, and find that it contains all the properties which render the Oil so efficacious. I find, moreover, that many patients prefer it to the Pale Oils, and are able to retain it more comfortably. It is almost a specific in many of the diseases peculiar to infancy and childhood, and I have seen marked benefit produced by its use." Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil is sold only in capsuled imperial half-pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s; with his stamp and signature and the signature of his sole consignees on the capsule and the label under wrapper, by all Chemists. Sole Consignees, Ansar, Harford, and Co., 77 Strand, London.

NAVAL NOTES.

Capt. William Codrington, C.B., has taken up his appointment as Captain-Superintendent of Sheerness Dockyard, in succession to Capt. John O. Hopkins, A.D.C., who has been appointed to succeed Rear-Admiral Herbert, C.B., as Director-General of Naval Ordnance.

The committee which has been constituted to inquire into the whole subject of torpedo fittings on board men-of-war, and with special reference to the difficulties which have arisen in connection with the submerged gear of the Polyphemus, is composed as follows:—Capt. Wilson (chairman), of the Hecla, torpedo store ship; Mr. Phillip Watts, Assistant-Constructor at the Admiralty; Com. May, of the Polyphemus; Lieut. Gallwey, of the Vesuvius, torpedo vessel; Chief Engineer Miller, of the Vernon, torpedo school; and Mr. Anderson, of Woolwich Laboratory. It is proposed to conduct a long series of experiments on board the Polyphemus at Portsmouth. In the meantime, the condemned locomotive boilers of the ship are to be examined, and reported upon, by two locomotive engineers connected with railways.

On Sunday last, at a full parade of the Chatham Division of the Royal Marines, the men of the division who took part in the recent Egyptian Campaign were presented with the medal which had been awarded them for their services. The presentation was made by Col.-Comdt. Bland Hunt, A.D.C., who expressed his regret that the Colonel-in-Chief of the corps, the Duke of Edinburgh, was unable to be present to make the presentation. The Commandant alluded to the conspicuous part taken in the campaign by the men of the division, and hoped they would never disgrace the medal they were about to receive.

The bands of the several divisions of Royal Marines assembled at the head-quarters of the Royal Marine Artillery, at Eastney, on the 12th inst., for combined practice, prior to performing as an orchestral band in London on the 16th inst., at the banquet to be given on that day to his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, on his appointment as honorary colonel of the corps.

At the quarterly meeting of the directors of the Naval Medical Supplemental Fund, held on the 10th inst., Sir W. R. E. Smart, K.C.B., M.D., Inspector-General, in the chair, the sum of £55 was distributed among the several applicants. At this meeting a case of two young orphans of a medical officer was brought forward, in whose favour a grant would have been made, had the father, who entered the service since compulsory subscription to the fund was abolished, ever constituted himself a member of the fund by a voluntary contribution.

Some interesting trials took place at Westminster on Monday last, in the presence of Admiral Sir Cooper Key, Rear-Admiral Brandreth, Mr. George Rendel, and Mr. Nathaniel Barnaby, with a second-class torpedo-boat, recently built for the English Government by Messrs. Yarrow and Co., in order to illustrate the new system of steam impulse introduced by them. The gear is similar to that recently tested at Portsmouth with great success, it being found very superior to the plan previously adopted. The arrangement consists in building two troughs inclined at an angle of five degrees in the bow of the boat, which are provided with suitable guides for carrying the Whitehead torpedo. Aft of these troughs or guides are two long steel steam cylinders, six inches in diameter and seven-feet stroke, the piston-rods of which press against the ends of the torpedoes, and upon steam being admitted into these cylinders the torpedoes are instantly forced out with considerable velocity, the speed being estimated at about 15 miles an hour. The arrangement is exceedingly simple, and under the entire control of the steersman. After the torpedo had been fired several times, the boat proceeded down the river with the Admiralty authorities, and the opportunity was taken to inspect a small launch driven by electricity, stored in accumulators manufactured by the Electrical Power Storage Company, the construction of which was fully explained by Mr. Volckmar; after which the Admiralty authorities inspected the Brazilian ironclad being built by Messrs. Samuda Brothers, returning to town in the torpedo-boat.

Capt. John A. Fisher, C.B., last week assumed the command of the Excellent, in succession to Capt. Codrington, C.B., transferred to Sheerness Yard.

Sir Thomas Brassey paid another visit to Portsmouth Dockyard on Saturday. His purpose was to conclude the interviews with representatives from the various classes of workmen in the yard who had any grievances to complain of. Sir Thomas sat for about two hours at the office of the Admiral-Superintendent, during which he received numerous deputations, mainly, on this occasion, from the steam or factory department.

Rear-Admiral Sir Francis W. Sullivan, K.C.B., C.M.G., was on Saturday appointed Director of Transports, in the place of Admiral Sir W. R. Mends, G.C.B.

Rear-Admiral John C. Wilson was on Saturday appointed second in command of the Channel Squadron, in the place of Rear-Admiral Sir Francis W. Sullivan, K.C.B., C.M.G.

The Italian Minister of Marine, Admiral Acton, has entrusted to MM. Maudslay and Elder the construction of the engines for the ironclads Lauria, Morasini, and Doria, now in course of construction.

The dinner that was to have been given to Admiral Sir William Mends is unavoidably postponed, owing to the indisposition of that gallant officer. H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh has expressed his desire to attend, and invitations have been accepted by Lord Alcester, Lord Wolseley, and by many of the highest officers at the War Office and at the Admiralty.

The under-named men have been awarded the medal for long service and good conduct:—George Conway, John Cashman, John James Tregashis, Henry C. Clark, and Samuel Robert, commissioned boatmen, John Donovan, boatman, Maurice Scanlon James McCoubrey, William Chittick, chief boatmen-in-charge, all of the Coastguard; Walter Davis, stoker, of the Osborne; William Tarrant, ship's corporal, 1st class, of the St. Vincent; George Reeves, boatswain's mate, of the Excellent; Philip Adams, chief quartermaster, of the Duke of Wellington.

THE CHANGE OF UNIFORM.

SIR,—It is proposed to change the red uniform of the British Army to grey, on account of the conspicuous target which the former presents to an enemy. Now, there are three great reasons for retaining the bright scarlet coat:—1. For its old traditions. 2. For its attractive propensities to would-be recruits. 3. For its smart and distinctive appearance. So that what is really required is a uniform which, while being most invisible at long ranges, should, at the same time, be red, gorgeous, and distinctive at close quarters. But can these conditions be combined? They can. We know that a series of black and white stripes at a distance look grey. So, also, do stripes of red, yellow, and blue. This is because of the combination of complementary colours. For this reason, a red coat, with bright green or even blue and yellow facings (and a few additional badges, &c., to relieve otherwise large red patches), and green accoutrements, is, I believe, as invisible as grey, and has a dazzling and smart look when near. This, therefore, fulfils all our conditions, and has the advantage of retaining the existing coats and accoutrements, which latter could easily be made green or grey, when required. The trousers might be grey, for this would not interfere much with traditions or appearance. I have worked out the details of such a dress, and tested it with model figures against different backgrounds, and beside other uniforms. The wear and expense are, of course, important matters, but these need be no greater than at present. The old English uniforms of the last century give a good idea of a handsome yet inconspicuous combination, although introducing too much white. I hope, before any change is definitely decided on, the committee may consider the invisibility of the combination of complementary colours at a distance.—I am, &c., A PHANTOM WARRIOR.

SIR,—I was glad, and hundreds of others, thousands, one may safely say, rejoiced, at the national loyalty of the Duke of Cambridge, in his recent protest against a reckless and ill-considered renunciation of our old colours. The "too-clever-by-half" plan of letting the people see "I think and can show what never man could before," may be all very well for the gratification of personal vanity, and for the purpose of keeping one's-self always coram publico; but the same misty morning which makes grey somewhat indistinct will equally do so with the "varied" colours which our old Redcoats, when in field equipment, display. These blended do more to make a figure or a body of men indistinct than any other process could accomplish. I have had great difficulty in recognising at a couple of miles' distance the old red battalions on field service. You could see some movement, and your eyes might detect a long column, but only with difficulty, and this was not because the "party-coloured" grey was absent, but exactly because red blended with other colours becomes exceedingly indistinct. The dark green of rifle regiments is, on the contrary, near or far, extraordinarily visible. For what it is worth, therefore, I hope the whole service will give its support to the manly maintenance of its old colour, and truckle in no way to the aims at glorification by any THERSITES.

MUSKETRY INSTRUCTION.

SIR,—I think it a mistake to do away with the Musketry Instructors. We know that musketry is distasteful to both officers and men, but it is a necessary evil. A head is, like in everything else, essential to arrange the details and give necessary instructions. More especially in the Militia would this change be felt, where perhaps in a regiment there is not a single officer who would understand how to instruct the men, and a musketry serjeant is indispensable. He has to hunt about and get the names of Instructors for the various squads, and a great deal of other work to arrange, ordering fatigue men, &c. The colour-serjeants would not have the time to do it. In aiming drill, one often finds a man taking a bad aim, and on inquiring, it is found he has lost or damaged his eyesight by breaking stones since last training. If you did away with Instructors, you would not be so likely to find these cases, and it would simply be a public waste of ammunition their firing. As the figure of merit is to be done with in the Army, it does not matter so much, but let a strict order be issued that no officers or serjeants be allowed to fire during the practice of their companies, as it causes confusion; and a separate account should be kept of the hits, otherwise, in checking targets, these would be unfairly added to the register, and give a wrong figure of merit. Above all things, give a few more prizes for shooting.—I am, &c., INSTRUCTOR.

As the determination of Vice-Admiral Batsch to quit the service is now definite, notwithstanding the Emperor's letter requesting him to remain, the deepest regret is manifested in German Naval circles. Admiral Batsch retires into private life because, like Admiral Werter, he endeavoured, but in vain, to separate the chief command of the German Navy from the Navy Minister, and bring the former into the hands of an experienced seaman. As long as the system of appointing infantry Generals as Ministers of Marine is continued, similar conflicts will occur, much to the injury of a service in which men really qualified for superior commands are not over-numerous. It would be better to appoint a civilian First Lord of the Admiralty, as is done in this country.

The flag of Rear-Admiral F. A. Herbert, who has succeeded Rear-Admiral M'Crea as Superintendent of Portsmouth Dockyard, was on Saturday last hoisted on board the Asia, but before being saluted it was discovered that Admiral Herbert was on leave, and, consequently, the flag was hauled down again. Admiral Herbert was to arrive in Portsmouth to-day, when his flag will be again hoisted and saluted.

"SAPO CARBONIS DETERGENS" is a physician's name for a remedy prescribed for the past quarter of a century for every variety of skin disease. The public have found that as a preventive of small-pox, scarlet fever, and measles, it is unequalled. See that the Latin name described above, and the words "WRIGHT, SOUTHWARK," are on each wrapper, and branded on each tablet, without which none is genuine.

LINE AND MILITIA.

SIR,—I have been reading for a very long time of the amalgamation of the Auxiliary Forces with the Regulars, and the many advantages thereby arising to both services. I have served many years in both branches, and at present am in command of a Militia regiment that, I believe, has always been most favourably reported on. Notwithstanding all that has been said, I fail to see any one point by which we derive the slightest benefit. In fact, the so-called "amalgamation" has been only in name. The Territorial System is disliked. The officers have been put to great and unnecessary expense by the change of uniform, and the young officers who join with the uniform of the Linked Line battalions rarely, if ever, get appointed to the regiments of which they are supposed to have formed a part on being gazetted to the Army, after passing what must now be looked upon as a most trying examination. The recruiting has certainly been most seriously affected by the non-training of the Irish Militia for the last two years. I am glad to see that the authorities intend calling out the regiments this year, and I would suggest that they should be trained for 56 days, or, at all events, for a longer period than 27 days. They cannot otherwise be expected to bear comparison, or in any way to be as efficient, as the English and Scotch regiments, many of which were out for the full period last year. The recruiting should be carried on by the permanent staff of the regiments, and the adjutants should be recruiting officers. This system has hitherto worked well. Why has it been changed? I also approve of training the recruits for the two months immediately preceding the training of the regiments. Too much, however, is expected from regiments in the short time there is for work; and if the Militia is ever to be better than it is at present, more time must be given to them. From my long experience, I think I could give many practical hints that might be useful, but I fear I have already trespassed too much on your valuable space.—I am, &c., COLONEL.

"Fair Play" writes, "Can you inform me why it is that by a Royal Warrant recently issued all captains of Royal Engineers and Royal Artillery are promoted brevet majors after 20 years' full-pay service, and Royal Marines after 21 years', but the unfortunate Line captain of cavalry and infantry does not get the same advantage? In the cavalry and infantry of the Line, there are at present about 10 captains of 20 years' service."

Lieut. Gimlette, of the Alexandra, fell whilst on watch from the gangway into a dockyard launch which was alongside, owing to the rail giving way. He sustained some serious injury, but it is not considered of a very dangerous nature.

ACTIVE SERVICE cannot wear out the teeth that are brushed night and morning with ROWLAND'S ODONTO, the purest and most fragrant dentifrice ever made. All dentists allow that neither washes nor pastes are as efficacious for polishing the teeth and keeping them sound and white as a pure and non-gritty tooth-powder; such ROWLAND'S ODONTO has aways proved itself. Ask any dealer in perfumery for ROWLAND'S ODONTO, and avoid spurious imitations, theirs being the only original and genuine Odonto.

THE PARASCHO CIGARETTES.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—For the cure of debility, bile, liver, and stomach complaints, this inappreciable medicine is so well known in every part of the world, and the cures performed by its use are so wonderful, that it now stands pre-eminent above all other remedies, more particularly for the cure of bilious and liver complaints, disorders of the stomach, dropsy, and debilitated constitution. A course of these digestive Pills painlessly but surely regulates the organs of digestion, and acts most beneficially on the secretory and excretory organs generally. They expel from the secretive organs and the circulation those effete and morbific matters which produce inflammation, pain, fever, debility, and physical decay, thus annihilating, by their purifying properties, the virulence of the most painful and devastating diseases.

PATENT

GERMAN MOSS LITTER.

This Litter is specially prepared from a moss-peat found in Germany, and introduced into this country by the Patentee, Dr. VERSMANN, Ph.D. After a most severe and extensive trial in public and private stables, cowsheds, and kennels, it is pronounced by the highest practical and scientific authorities to be the best and cheapest litter known.

ITS ADVANTAGES ARE:

1. Cheapness, it being not more than one-half the cost of straw.
2. Absorptiveness, as absorbing all the urine, and rendering drains and flushing of stables unnecessary.
3. Prevention of decomposition and generation of bad odours.
4. Affording an excellent soft and elastic bed, particularly agreeable and beneficial to the feet and limbs of horses.
5. Horses do not eat it as they do straw litter, therefore they do not require to be racked up or muzzled to prevent indigestion or broken wind.
6. It is easily managed in the stable, and does not soil or stain horses.
7. It has a wonderful influence on the growth of the hoofs and in maintaining the feet in health.
8. It is extremely portable, being compressed into bales weighing each about 3 cwt., ¾ cwt. to 1 cwt. being sufficient to litter a horse for a month or six weeks.
9. It is not inflammable, and therefore offers but little danger from fire.
10. It is essentially a sanitary litter.
11. The manure is much more valuable than that of straw, and occupies considerably less space.

It will be found of immense advantage to Veterinary Infirmaries, in Stud Farms, Dairies, Kennels, &c.

MILITARY COMPETITIVE EXAMINATIONS. — Lieutenant-Colonel G. M. CARDEW, p.s.c., is PREPARING a Class of LIEUTENANTS of MILITIA. As the number is strictly limited, early application should be made.—14 Observatory Avenue, Kensington, three minutes from the High-Street Station.

MILITARY EDUCATION, GERMANY. —Colonel BERDOE WILKINSON, late R.E., formerly in charge of the Ordnance Survey in Ireland, and Lieutenant-Colonel WILKINSON SHAW, M.A. (Staff College), late Garrison-Instructor at Aldershot, prepare Candidates for Sandhurst and Woolwich, and for Line Commissions through the Militia.

University Candidates for Sandhurst are received as non-resident pupils. In this competition two candidates (the only ones sent up) have passed into Sandhurst during the past year; Mr. W. A. Grant taking fourth place in July, and Mr. G. Barton-Smith second place in December.

In addition to the University candidate, two other pupils passed on the general list at the recent Sandhurst Examination,—Mr. C. D. Radcliffe (tenth place) and Mr. H. Marwood.

Mr. B. Smith, on this occasion, made the highest score in Mathematics, and Mr. Radcliffe highest marks in German, as well as second highest in Freehand Drawing, out of 440 candidates up for Examination.

MILITIA COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION.

The standard originally fixed for this Examination having been much raised in September, 1881, no results previously gained should be taken into account in considering the successes obtained by Militia pupils. Since the date named, there have been three competitions. At these trials Colonel WILKINSON and Lieutenant-Colonel SHAW have secured 24 COMMISSIONS for their pupils, although they have only prepared and sent up a very limited number for Examination. The names of all successful pupils have already been published.

Also, at the October Literary Examination, Lieut. C. J. Stanton took 4th place on the list.

The results obtained at other Examinations bring the general score up to FORTY-EIGHT SUCCESSES, achieved by pupils in the last 16 months; during that period the number of pupils on the strength of the establishment, resident and non-resident, has always been limited to 60.—Address, DARMSTADT, GERMANY.

SANDHURST, WOOLWICH, C. S., MILITIA, PRELIMINARY, &c.—CAREFUL PREPARATION for any of the above. Upwards of 130 successes during the past four years. Highest places in lists, Nos. 5, 8, 9, 15, 18, 29, 34, 37, 38, 52, 61, 63, &c. More Preliminary successes in February and March, 1883.

MILITARY COMPETITIVE for MILITIA OFFICERS.—Special course, in charge of Colonel STORY, late South Lancashire Regiment. 8 years' experience as Garrison Instructor. Highest places gained, Nos. 3, 18, 20, 22, 25, 27, 31, 32, &c. Last year, 5 out of 14 candidates were successful.

Address, Rev. A. PRITCHARD, Wargrave, Henley-on-Thames.

MILITIA COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION ONLY.—A Few Candidates desiring special individual attention are Prepared by Major COWPER, assisted by an Officer of equal experience, who has taken high honours in Fortification, Surveying, &c. At the last Four Examinations (the average number sent up for each being between 3 and 4), Pupils passed at their first trial 1st, 10th, 21st, 30th, 33rd, 34th, and 37th on the List.—10 Clifton Villas, Maida Hill, London, W.

LIEUTENANTS of MILITIA desirous of competing for Line Commissions can be received by the Rev. WALTER BAKER, M.A., at Batcombe Rectory, Evercreech, Bath. They will be thoroughly prepared in all Military Subjects by Major Dickens (late 11th Foot), Staff-College Graduate, formerly Assistant Royal Engineer, S.E. District, and Colonel Palmer, late R.A., formerly Instructor at the R.M.A., Woolwich, and two of whose pupils obtained special mention from the Examiners at the last September Examination.

Great individual attention is given, as few pupils are taken, and each comes under actual vivâ voce instruction for 6¼ hours a day. Since the introduction of the Military Competitive, out of Thirty-nine Lieutenants of Militia sent up, Twenty-four have been successful, several taking high places in the list. There are opportunities for healthy country amusements and games, a cricket and football ground, lawn-tennis courts (grass and asphalte), a private billiard-room, &c., and in all other respects a liberal and gentleman's establishment is kept.

A Large Staff of Experienced Tutors, all resident, assist in preparing for the Qualifying Examinations, and for the Sandhurst and Woolwich Competitions.

THE STEAM HAMMER.

"A pleasant record of an interesting life......It would be impossible to give any notion here of the unceasing activity of mind which gives life to every page of this book; nor can we even hint at the number of charming little mechanical little 'dodges' contrived for all manner of purposes by Mr. Nasmyth in his odd moments. Those who take no interest in such matters—and we think they are to be pitied—will find much pleasant matter in Mr. Nasmyth's record of passing scenes and events; and we can congratulate him on having produced a well-written account of a most interesting life."—Saturday Review.

2/- TEA OF EXTRAORDINARY QUALITY,

As Supplied to Dukes, Earls, Barons, and the County Families of England.

THE unprecedented depression in the Tea Market now enables COOPER COOPER and CO. to offer such value in Tea as would, a few years ago, have been considered simply impossible, but is now a realised fact, for at

TWO SHILLINGS

A POUND,

COOPER COOPER and CO. are able to supply Tea of amazing strength and exquisite quality, while the choice kinds at Three Shillings a pound, which are coming to hand in lessening quantities year by year, COOPER COOPER and CO. have the greatest difficulty, after ransacking the markets of China and India, in procuring in sufficient quantities for their consumption. These choice and selected Teas COOPER COOPER and CO. have the honour to supply to many Foreign Princes, Potentates, Ambassadors, &c.

THE enormous success—without competitors and with no rivals—which has attended the sale of COOPER COOPER and CO.'s Teas is perhaps unparalleled in the annals of this or any other trade, and can only be accounted for by the way in which their business has been conducted, which has gained the patronage of all classes. COOPER COOPER and CO. number among their customers Princes, Dukes, Earls, Barons—in fact, a large per-centage of the entire Peerage—Church dignitaries of every grade, and ministers of all denominations, County Families from every county in Great Britain, and from all classes of the community. COOPER COOPER and CO. are also shipping their Teas every day to foreign parts. Paris would appear to draw its supplies from COOPER COOPER and CO.'s Stores, and in almost every large city, and especially in the seaport towns of Europe, Asia, Africa, and America—in fact, to the very ends of the earth—COOPER COOPER and CO.'s Teas and COOPER COOPER and CO.'s name are known.

COOPER COOPER and CO. have their own Agents in China and India, and are consequently able to sell their Tea at a price which is actually under that which wholesale merchants, brokers, &c., charge to ordinary dealers. They are enabled to do this as they have not the expense of travellers, and no bad debts to provide for, their terms being strictly for nett cash before delivery. They also save an immense amount by keeping no horses and vans—many houses having from 20 to 100 horses, vans, and two men to each, to deliver, sometimes, half-a-pound of tea miles and miles away, this overwhelming expense having all to come out of the quality of the Tea.

COOPER COOPER and CO. have, in fact, no expense but indispensable rent and labour, which in consequence of still-increasing business, amount only to a fraction on the price of the Tea they sell.

COOPER COOPER and CO. may mention that they include among the regular buyers of their Tea a great many London Tea Brokers, from the simple fact that it can be purchased cheaper and better from them than from the importers themselves.

COOPER COOPER and CO. sell their Teas for ready money only. They have thus no provision to make for bad or doubtful debts.

AND now a word about this year's crop. It is hardly satisfactory on the whole, but some of the choice crops secured by COOPER COOPER and CO. are simply delicious, COOPER COOPER and CO. are still enabled to sell the very best at Three Shillings a pound, and it is veritably a marvel of goodness—a "thing of beauty" and "a joy for ever." But the most astonishing thing of modern times is the Tea at Two Shillings a pound which COOPER COOPER and CO. are now selling. The rich and wealthy buy this Tea. Ladies drink it in their boudoirs and at their early drums, and, as one of our country patrons writes, "It is lovely."

COOPER COOPER and CO. may add that Indian Tea is becoming day by day a greater favourite among the best judges, and this year's crop has been prepared with greater care than ever. It is strong, pungent, with most agreeable flavour, and the better it is known, the more it will be liked. The Tea is 3s a lb., for the best.

COOPER COOPER and CO. charge threepence a package (of any size) for delivering their Teas at any of the Railway Stations in London, or any place within the limits of the London Parcels' Delivery Co., thus putting all on an equality; those who send for their tea, and those who require it sent.

COOPER COOPER and CO. do not pay railway carriage, but are willing to compound for the same on receiving the sum of 6d. in addition to the price of the Tea, to any Railway Station in England, on quantities of the value of £2 and upwards. Families residing in the country can thus, by clubbing together, have their Tea sent almost carriage free, as well as save about 9d a lb. in the cost.

EGYPTIAN NOTES.

(FROM AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Cairo, April 2, 1883.

	Total Force.	Sick List.	Proportion per cent.
Artillery, Cairo	664	32	4·8

	8,631	597	6·9
Horses	1,463	66	4·5
	2,099	70	3·3

As an instance of the varying health of the troops, I may mention the South Staffordshire, with 53 sick out of 533 men; and the King's Royal Rifles (60th), with only 29 out of 671.

The s.s. Calabria, expected to arrive at Alexandria about the 7th inst., will convey troops to Malta, Gibraltar, and England—probably the South Staffordshire, and the C Battery, 3rd Brigade, Royal Artillery, which will leave, instead of I Battery, 2nd Brigade, Royal Artillery, previously ordered.

Lieutenant-Colonel Elton, C.B., Royal Artillery, will proceed to England, on appointment to the Auxiliary Forces; and Captain Allsopp, Royal Artillery, is invalided, and permitted to proceed to England at his own expense. Captain Moubray, Royal Highlanders, has similar permission.

Surgeon-Major T. Wood, A.M.D., Surgeon R. V. Ash, A.M.D., are struck off the strength of the command, from March 17.

The Rev. F. W. Agassiz has taken over the duty of Chaplain with the 2nd Brigade at Abbassiyeh.

The services of Lieutenant Graham Thomson, R.E., are placed at the disposal of Lieutenant-Colonel Ardagh, C.B., D.A.A.G., for survey duties.

It has been announced that the summer dress of all regiments and corps in Egypt shall be grey serge. Mounted corps to wear Bedford cords and high boots. The full dress, which is also to be worn on guard, of Highland regiments will be grey-serge frocks and kilts. Officers will wear the uniform prescribed in Sec. XII., Para. 11, Army Regulations, viz., blue patrol jackets, except on guard, courts-martial, or parades, where the men wear helmets; tunics on these occasions must be worn, but officers may furnish themselves with a second tunic of serge or light cloth. The blue patrol jacket may also be made of any thin material, provided it is of regulation colour and pattern. Helmets to be worn on all occasions by officers and men, in and out of barracks, between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. Summer clothing to commence from April 15.

It has been currently rumoured in Alexandria that the whole of the troops will be transferred to that town, which will become the head-quarters. Lest such a report, ridiculous as it is, should have been telegraphed to England, it may be as well to state that there is not the smallest foundation for it.

A sanatorium will be established at Ramleh, near Alexandria, to which will be sent invalids and convalescents, as well as officers and men who may from time to time require change of air.

The General commanding will return to Cairo in about a week, and will stay there until the Khedive comes to Alexandria, when a portion of the head-quarters will also be transferred to that town.

As regards the command in Alexandria, General Harman leaves to take up his duties in England, and will probably be succeeded either by General Earle or General Dormer.

NOTES FROM ALDERSHOT.

(FROM AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.)

There has been little Military exercise or instruction at the Camp during the week. Horse-racing, theatricals, and amusements of all kinds have been in full swing, to the exclusion of all business. Thursday and Friday were observed as half-holidays, and Divisional offices closed, because of the steeplechases. The races, notwithstanding the weakness of the garrison and the stern prohibition of luncheon tents for officers, have been an unqualified success, thanks in a large measure to the indefatigable exertions of the honorary secretary, Lieutenant-Colonel Toogood, late R.A. (of Aldershot Lodge). The theatre at the Officers' Club was crowded on Tuesday and Wednesday nights, many being unable to obtain admission. On Wednesday afternoon, a concert was given by the Royal Engineers' Band from Chatham, in the Royal Engineers' theatre; and on Friday night, the steeplechase ball at the Club House brought the week's festivities to a conclusion. Musketry instruction under the new system has been going on during the week. Many inquiries have been necessary to clear up doubtful points in the new orders, which have already been considerably altered and amended by Horse-Guards letters and memoranda. It has been notified in Divisional Orders that if any troops or companies of a regiment or battalion have fired the 150 yards at a target with the 1-foot bull's-eye, then all the other troops or companies of that regiment or battalion may for this year fire the 150 yards at a target with a 12-inch bull's-eye. The target practices of the Cavalry recruit and cavalry trained soldier will be carried out in all respects as laid down for the Infantry, including volley and independent firing in close order. The preliminary drills and judging-distance practices will be carried out in the Cavalry as heretofore. The rule established in Paragraph 42, Musketry Instructions, 1879, will in future be relaxed, and companies will be struck off duty from time to time, at the discretion of commanding officers. The 1st Grenadier Guards proceeded to Pirbright, on Wednesday, for field-firing, returning to Camp in the afternoon. This brings their course of musketry to a conclusion. The bronze star for Egypt has been arriving at the Camp by the hundredweight. Although a divisional parade was talked of for distributing them, the idea, if entertained, has been abandoned, and the distribution of the distinction is being proceeded with regimentally. Those for the Royal Engineers were handed round on church parade last Sunday; those for the 84th, on Wednesday. With reference to General Order 10, of 1883, the following officers are attached for instruction, under the Staff College Regulations, from this date, as follows:—To Cavalry—Captains Innes and Trotter, R.A.; Leefe, R.M.A.; Warton, 2nd 10th; Gordon, 21st; Lieutenant Bamfield, 22nd. To Royal Artillery—Majors James, 2nd Dragoons; Allen, 15th; Morris, 58th; Captains Stephenson, 56th; Mortimer, 64th; Lloyd, B. S. Corps; Lieutenants Codrington, Coldstream Guards; C. M. Hutton, 52nd. To 3rd Infantry Brigade—Lieutenant de Haig, R.E. An alarming rumour circulated in the camp on Sunday afternoon last, that an attempt had been made to blow up or damage the Queen's Pavilion. A strong guard is daily mounted on this building, as if it were permanently in occupation by Royalty, though rats and mice and such small deer are its only tenants. The foolish report referred to originated in the over-zealousness of an individual, who, observing a small group of civilians in close proximity to the building, immediately alarmed the guard, the commander of which reported to the Field Officer of the day, who acquainted the police, civil and military, who made no little noise in the matter. Double sentries and police kept watch and ward all night, and the structure is still intact. It has transpired since (diligent inquiries having been made), that the civilians observed near the Pavilion were not Fenians, but innocent natives, engaged in the harmless game of "pitch-and-toss," who, on finding that they were observed, had made tracks. It is certain that this crazy old place is about the last building in the kingdom that dynamitards would attempt to hoist. The operations of the Egyptian Relief Society (Lieutenant-Colonel Sartorius, V.C., D.A.Q.M.G., honorary secretary), formed at Aldershot for the relief of the wives and families of soldiers serving in Egypt, have been brought to a close. A sum of about £200 has been expended in and around the Camp, for the relief of sufferers. Surgeon-Major Scott, C.M.G., has assumed medical charge of the 3rd Brigade; Surgeon-Major Maunsell, the Horse and Field Batteries; and Surgeon-Major Beattie, the 2nd Brigade. F Battery B Brigade and H Battery B Brigade Royal Horse Artillery will this year carry out their annual firing practice at Oakhampton. Lieutenant R. J. Tudway, 56th Regiment, will proceed with the draft of the 85th to Malta, instead of Major Robertson, 107th. Surgeon H. J. Barratt, A.M.D., is under orders for foreign service. The 1st Battalion Grenadier Guards (less one company, to remain behind to go through the prescribed course of drill) returned to Chelsea Barracks from the Camp on Thursday, on completion of musketry practice. A general court-martial will assemble on Monday next (president, Colonel Stevenson, C.B., 87th Royal Irish), for the trial of Private Richardson, 84th Regiment, for fraudulent enlistment.

Manual for the Use of Artillery Volunteer Corps. By Capt. C. E. Coffey, R.A., Adjutant 1st Worcestershire A.V. Corps. (W. Leicester, High Street, Worcester.)

Originating in a series of lectures delivered to his corps by Captain Coffey, this neat and handy manual is a complete résumé of the information required by the officers of our Volunteer Artillery, contained in a small compass, and it may well be studied also with advantage by their brother-officers of the Royal and Militia Artillery. Time is of much value to our Volunteer officers who sacrifice their own leisure to apply themselves to military work, and such a handbook as Captain Coffey's is most useful, in saving the necessity of searching for necessary information in a number of larger works. Part 1 deals concisely with the materiel employed by garrison gunners, and is illustrated by diagrams. The explanations are short and clear, and an officer wishing to spare any risk when working with artillery appliances can, by means of these explanations, readily calculate what strain he can, with safety, put upon such appliances. Gunnery is treated of in Part 2, and the most recent text-books have been laid under contribution to bring this portion up to date, to explain the terms in gunnery now used, and to make clear the general considerations of artillery fire. An exceedingly useful and interesting portion of the Manual, for Volunteer officers, is that contained in Parts 3 and 4, which deal with the interior economy of a corps of Volunteer Artillery, and the mode of carrying on official correspondence. These are points of considerable importance, and even the most experienced officers may here find many hints not to be despised. References are given throughout this portion of the book to the various Volunteer Acts and Regulations where necessary, and will doubtless save much time and trouble, and the turning-over of many a long page of these Acts in many cases. This unpretending little manual is a useful addition to the military literature of our Volunteer Artillery, and may be well recommended to the notice of Artillery officers, Royal, Militia, and Volunteers.

The Bombay Gazette says:—"Those officers who are anxious to obtain employment in Egypt would do well to make certain of the terms on which their services would be lent to the Egyptian Government. As we stated before, Col. W. P. La Touche, who has been appointed Chief of the Police in Egypt, will be paid £1,200 a year by the Egyptian Government, and he will receive £365 per annum as English (unemployed) furlough pay, the total being £1,565 per annum. But this, of course, is an exceptionally good appointment. The pay of the commandant of one of the newly raised local corps will be £750 per annum, and if the holder of the post be an Indian Lieut.-Col. he would receive £365 per annum unemployed pay from his own Government, giving a total of £1,115 per annum. The question is, whether this pay, good as it undoubtedly is, is good enough to tempt Indian officers to give up appointments in this country, and to undertake work which will most certainly be difficult, if not harassing. For officers of the British service, we think the chance of employment in Egypt is a very good one, because officers in the British Army (at any rate in England) are not at all highly paid, nor are their prospects at all secure, as long as the present mania for constant change prevails in high places."

NAVAL DINNER TO LORD ALCESTER.

The President and officers of the Royal Naval College entertained Admiral Lord Alcester at dinner, in the mess-room of the College, at Greenwich, on Tuesday evening, the 10th inst. The following were asked to meet his Lordship:—Admiral of the Fleet Sir H. Keppel, G.C.B.; Admirals Sir A. C. Key, G.C.B., and Sir G. P. Hornby, K.C.B.; Rear-Admirals Sir F. Sullivan, K.C.B., and Sir A. Hoskins, K.C.B.; Major-Gen. Sir C. Adair, K.C.B., Royal Marines; Capts. George Tryon, C.B.; Lord Walter Kerr; J. A. Fisher, C.B.; C. Hotham, C.B.; L. A. Beaumont; Atwell Lake; A. B. Jenkings; and A. Thomas; Staff Capt. Henry Hosken; Pymr. Moore (secretary); Lieut. Hon. T. C. J. Colville (flag-lieutenant to Lord Alcester), &c. Admirals Hornby and Sullivan and Capts. Fisher and Hotham were unavoidably prevented from being present. The total number who sat down to dinner was 130, including the Chinese, Japanese, American, and Russian Naval officers now studying at the College. At the conclusion of the dinner, the President, Vice-Admiral Luard, C.B., gave the toasts of "The Queen" and "The Royal Family," the Admiral appropriately referring to the words of Sir H. Keppel on a previous occasion, that "if all Royal families were like ours, there would be no Republics." These toasts having been loyally drunk with the usual honours, the President next proceeded to give the toast of the evening. In an eloquent speech of considerable length, he traced out the career and past services of Lord Alcester. He referred particularly to the successful way in which the delicate negotiations were carried out by his lordship when in command of the international squadron in Austrian and Turkish waters before Dulcigno in 1880, the difficult task of keeping together a fleet of different nationalities and representing so many conflicting interests having been so successfully performed by his lordship as to prominently bring before the world his great tact and talents, gaining for him the friendship and regard of the numerous distinguished foreign officers with whom he was at that time associated, and for the successful termination of which negotiations his lordship (then Sir B. Seymour) received the G.C.B. Referring to his lordship's services during the Egyptian Campaign, he remarked that few people appeared to understand fully the responsibilities of his lordship's position during the anxious time immediately preceding the attack on the forts of Alexandria, or to appreciate how admirably the whole of the delicate negotiations with the other Powers represented in Alexandrian waters had been conducted. When the right moment came, his lordship had to decide as to the proper course to pursue; the right one was chosen, and the plans of attack so well and carefully prepared as to result in the signal success which crowned the operations of the day. Admiral Luard then proceeded to refer to the other operations of the campaign in which the Navy took part,—to the harmony which existed between the Navy and Army, and which was so conducive to success, and also to the splendid services of the Royal Marines, and concluded an eloquent speech by thanking Lord Alcester for finding time amongst his numerous engagements to come down and dine at Greenwich. He also expressed the great pleasure that it had given to all the officers at the College to be able to express in some way to his lordship the feelings of pride and admiration with which he was universally regarded by the Navy, as well as their united best wishes for his future welfare and prosperity. The President, during his speech, was constantly greeted with rounds of hearty applause, and at its conclusion, "Rule, Britannia," having been played by the band, three cheers were given for Lord Alcester. Lord Alcester, on rising to return thanks, was again loudly cheered. In a forcible speech, his lordship thanked the President for the way his past and recent services had been alluded to, and expressed the pleasure that it gave him to be there on that occasion, in an atmosphere pleasantly familiar to him, surrounded as he was entirely by Naval officers, amongst whom he was glad to see so many who had recently served with him in Egypt. He proceeded to refer to the cordial relations maintained between the numerous men-of-war representing the different nations at Alexandria, and in graceful terms to the personal friendship that existed between himself and Admiral Conrad, the Admiral commanding the French squadron, especially mentioning the valuable services rendered by Admiral Nicholson, commanding the Squadron of the United States Navy in European waters. In this case, "blood was truly thicker than water," and the manner in which our American cousins came to our assistance will never be forgotten. His lordship then referred to the great assistance he had received from all under his command, particularly from Admirals Dowell, Hewett, Sullivan, and Hoskins. In alluding to the services of the Royal Marines, he mentioned that when operations were first undertaken, he was determined that, whatever had taken place upon former occasions, on this one, so far as lay in his power, they should not be put in the background, and mentioned as an instance, upon a battalion of Marines being sent out for his disposal by the Admiralty, that although they were urgently needed for services connected with the squadron, and might also have been well employed in guarding the canal and line of communications, where Sir A. Hoskins would have been extremely glad to have had them, still, he decided to push them to the front, and so had placed them at the disposal of Sir G. Wolseley. Lord Wolseley had since frequently testified to their splendid services, and they were enabled to be among the first and foremost of the British line at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. Again thanking Admiral Luard for the way he had spoken of him, his lordship concluded with a piece of advice to young Naval officers. If in the future any of them should find themselves in a position of doubt when two courses appeared open to them, and they might well hesitate as to the right one to pursue, he recommended them always to choose the manly British one,—to fight. The public would always bear them out and see them through, and, where British officers and men were concerned, the result could never be doubtful. Lord Alcester then resumed his seat, amidst loud and continuous cheering. Sir Charles Adair, in a vigorous speech, returned thanks for the allusions that had been made to the services of the Royal Marines; and Sir A. C. Key proposed "The Health of the President," in words which found a ready response in the rounds of applause that greeted them. It is much to be regretted that the speeches were not fully reported, as they were all admirably to the point and suited to the occasion, and would have been extremely interesting to the public, and particularly so to Naval officers in all parts of the world.

H.M.S. CLIVE.

The new Indian troopship Clive, built by the Messrs. Laird, of Birkenhead, left the Alfred Dock on Wednesday last for a series of trials, commencing with full-power trials over the measured mile, in which the performance of ship and engines considerably exceeded the contract requirements, showing a speed of nearly 13½ knots, instead of 12 knots, with 2,300 indicated horse-power, against 2,000 indicated horse-power. The exact time taken on the four runs was as follows:—

	Time—Min.	Sec.	Speed.
First run	5	10	11·613 knots.
Second run	3	53	15·451 ,,
Third run	5	18	11·321 ,,
Fourth run	3	48	15·789 ,,

True mean speed, 13·491 knots.

After this, several trials were made to test the handiness of the vessel, so important for the special service of going from port to port round the sea-board of India, both in steering and in stopping and starting the engines practically at a moment's notice. There were on board Mr. Abercrombie Jopp, director-general of stores, India Office; Com. Walter Powell, who commands the Clive, and Lieut. J. Rocastle Finny; Mr. Lamborne, chief engineer, and other officers of the Indian marine; Mr. T. Dodd, inspector of ship-building by contract, and Mr. Butler, of the Engineers' Department, Admiralty; Messrs. Barnes, William Laird, Henry Laird, R. R. Bevis, and others. On Thursday the trial consisted of steaming for six hours at full-boiler power, and this was accomplished most satisfactorily at a speed of over 13 knots, the engines working throughout at 72 to 74 revolutions and developing about 2,200 horse-power, the boilers giving abundant supply of steam with easy firing, the coal used being Nixon's navigation steam coal. On this occasion, besides those officially present on Wednesday, the Earl of Sefton and three sons and others interested in the Clive joined the party, who embarked about nine o'clock, and returned to the moorings about seven in the evening. The Clive is now practically ready for service, and will shortly leave Birkenhead, and may be expected to be a most successful and useful addition to our means of transporting troops. We may remind our readers that the Clive has been constructed from designs prepared by Messrs. Laird Brothers, on the invitation of the Viceregal Government in India, and submitted to the approval of the authorities there and at the India Office, who, in conjunction with the Admiralty, gave them very careful consideration. The Clive has accommodation for 640 officers and men, 137 ladies, servants, soldiers' wives and children, and 140 followers, in addition to a crew of 166 officers and men, all told, or a total complement of 1,083 persons; or, when occasion requires, she will carry 130 horses, for which special fittings are provided. The ventilation—so important a matter in vessels carrying large numbers of passengers, especially in tropical climates—is obtained by means of large side ports and scuttles, and trunk ways from the upper deck above the level of the poop and forecastle to each space below deck, with tube ventilators and cowls for carrying off the heated air, and also by an arrangement of tubes through which the foul air will be drawn by means of fans worked by steam, or by the current induced by the heat passing up the funnel, which is double. The dimensions of the vessel are—length, 300 ft.; breadth, 45 ft. 8 in.; depth in hold to upper deck, 25 ft. 6 in.; tonnage (builders' measurement), 3,003 tons; gross measurement, 2,730 tons. The mean load draught is 16 ft. 6 in. The engines are a pair of direct-acting inverted-cylinder compound engines, to indicate 2,000 horse-power. The cylinders are 48 and 84 inches in diameter, and have a stroke of four feet. The boilers are cylindrical, four in number, to work at 75 lb. pressure, and proved to 150 lb. The Clive is constructed partly of iron and partly of steel. She has three decks, with poop and forecastle connected by sidehouses, which give uninterrupted communication from stem to stern for working the ship, and afford convenient stowage for boats and other necessary fittings, and is not unlike the five large Indian troopers, one of which, the Euphrates, was built and engined by Messrs. Laird. There is an inner watertight skin, forming a double bottom, and there are numerous watertight bulkheads, five of which are carried to the upper deck, and the remainder to the main deck, and all carefully fitted, where necessary, with watertight doors. Water ballast can be carried in the compartments of the double bottom to trim the ship, as coals or stores are consumed. She has a straight stem and elliptic stern, with show galleries, is rigged as a barque, and has one funnel.

THE HONOURABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY AND THE YEOMANRY.

Sir,—The question raised as to the rank and precedence of the above-named forces being a matter of considerable interest to the Auxiliary Forces, and as the position and organisation of the Hon. Artillery Company does not appear to be clearly understood, I trust you will allow me a small space to state the case of our ancient and distinguished regiment. A letter recently appeared in a contemporary (the Times) from a well-known Yeomanry officer, which is calculated to create a very erroneous impression, as most of his assertions regarding the Hon. Artillery Company are incorrect; and while, on the one hand, he states that our antiquity is not clearly established—which it is, beyond all doubt—he claims that the Yeomanry existed from a very early period, and were "merely reorganised in 1793." As a matter of fact, the Yeomanry Force was not raised until 1794, whilst the Honourable Artillery Company was incorporated on Aug. 25, 1537, more than a century before any regiment in the service. The Honourable Artillery Company has not always been placed junior to the Yeomanry in the Army List, as stated by Major Edwards, but until 1860 was inserted before them; nor is the Company subject to the Regulations for the Volunteer Force or to the Volunteer Acts, but is specially exempted by Clause 52 of the 26 and 27 Vict. cap. 65. The Yeomanry, on the contrary, are very closely connected with the Volunteers, and not with the Militia, as Major Edwards leads his readers to suppose. In the earlier Acts of Parliament, the Yeomanry and Volunteers are treated as one force; for example, the 34 George III., cap. 31, which was passed in 1794, authorised the formation of Volunteer Corps of Cavalry and Infantry, and a few troops or corps raised under this Act subsequently became or were styled Yeomanry, the first Yeomanry Act passed being the 38 George III., cap. 51, in 1798, in the body of which Act the Yeomanry are called Volunteers. These Acts were followed in 1802 and 1803 by the 42 George III., cap. 66, and the 43 George III., cap. 121, both of which Acts were consolidated and amended in 1804 by the 44 George III., cap. 54; and according to "Clode's Statutes relating to the War Office and the Army," p. 83, this Act is the only Parliamentary consent yet obtained as to the Yeomanry, and under which they still continue to serve. The Honourable Artillery Company, strictly speaking, belongs neither to the Militia, Yeomanry, nor Volunteers, nor yet to the more ancient "Trained Bands," with whom they are often confounded. It is a distinct force in itself, and can only be described as the Honourable Artillery Company. It is the only military body over which Parliament has no control, but exists during the pleasure and under the direct control of the Crown, and for this reason may be considered more as a personal bodyguard to the Sovereign (like the Royal Archers of Scotland) than any other corps. The so-called revival of the Company is rather misleading, as it refers to a resumption of the more active duties of the Company in musters for drill, &c., as, owing to the jealousy with which any armed force was formerly looked upon, the numbers were strictly limited by Order in Council at various periods, being at one time reduced to 250. The Honourable Artillery Company boast of a unique position in the Military Forces of the country; for centuries they have been commanded either by the King or Prince of Wales, and the officers hold commissions from the Queen, under which, when on service, they take rank in the Army as the youngest of their rank, and not after the Militia, like the Yeomanry and Volunteers. The rank or precedence of the Honourable Artillery Company has never been fixed officially by the Horse Guards, probably because until now their seniority has rarely or never been questioned. In 1814, when the Volunteer Force was ordered to be disbanded, the Secretary of State wrote to say that the order did not extend to the Honourable Artillery Company. At the coronation of George IV. and William IV., the Company was on duty, and on each occasion placed next to the Foot Guards. At the coronation of her Majesty in 1838, the Honourable Artillery Company was the only corps not belonging to the Regular Army allowed to parade, and they were placed between the 1st Batn. and the 3rd Batn. of the Grenadier Guards. It does not seem a fair or reasonable claim that a corps which has existed for over three centuries, and from which the officers of the Trained Bands were, in olden times, selected on account of their efficiency, should be superseded by a branch of the Auxiliary Forces which is of comparatively recent origin. It is not necessary to enter here into a discussion as to the rank or position of the Militia, as the question has been definitely settled by Section 1, Queen's Regulations, 1881. All regiments naturally pride themselves on their seniority and other distinctions and badges, which may appear trivial to an outsider, but such feeling maintains that esprit de corps which carries a regiment successfully through many difficulties; and when a question like the present one arises, it is well worth careful consideration. From the Honourable Artillery Company the oldest military body in America has sprung, in the Ancient and Honourable Artillery Company of Massachusetts, formed in 1638 by members of the London Company who had emigrated to the New World, and our American cousins to this day are proud to claim relationship with their parent Company. The Honourable Artillery Company do not wish to lay claim to any honour to which they are not fairly entitled, but their right to rank as the senior corps of all Yeomanry and Volunteers is undoubted, and cannot be questioned; but, at the same time, it is to be hoped that it may soon be authoritatively settled.—I am, &c., Rumours current fixing "five years" and other dates for the further occupancy of Egypt by British troops are, the Daily News of Tuesday understands, without foundation. The period of the withdrawal of the troops will be determined by circumstances that have yet to develop themselves.

H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge on Saturday morning presented Afghan and Egyptian war medals and Khedive stars to such men of the Portsmouth Garrison as took part in those campaigns. The scene of the ceremony was the Officers' Recreation Ground.

The Queen has approved the appointment of Col. R. W. Harley, C.B., C.M.G., late 3rd West India Regiment, to be Lieut.-Governor of British Honduras.

Lewis's 2s Tea.—Send Postal Orders for 2s, and you will immediately receive, carriage free, delivered at your own house, 1 lb. of Lewis's 2s Tea, neatly packed in a box; or, if you have tried Lewis's wonderful Tea, and you know its merits, you can order 6 lbs., 12 lbs., 20 lbs., 60 lbs., or 100 lbs. Lewis's have these quantities packed in boxes ready to send, carriage paid, to any part of the United Kingdom. All remittances must be made payable to Lewis and Co., Ranelagh Street, Liverpool.

A COMPLAINT FROM EGYPT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I wish to bring to the notice of the public a grievance at present existing amongst some of the troops engaged with the Egyptian Expeditionary Force. The authorities have granted a sum of money to all ranks serving in this country between the dates of June 16, 1882, and Sept. 14, 1882, irrespective of their length of stay here; whilst those men who were sent in the month of August, 1882, to what was at first the base of operations,—viz., Cyprus, the climate of which is equally as bad as that of Egypt, from which it is only a few hours' sail, and from whence they were transferred, after about a couple of months' stay, to this country, receive no reward whatever. These men were, to all intents and purposes, a portion of the Egyptian expeditionary force, and were equipped and embarked from England as such. I think it scarcely right that the men who landed in the country between the stated dates, but whose stay, in a great many instances, did not exceed three days, they having been sent home (not from the effect of wounds, be it understood, the men I am referring to having never seen a shot fired in the country), should receive a medal from the Queen, a star from the Khedive, and a sum of money from the Government; whilst those who were engaged in the same work at a few miles distance, and who rendered equally as good service to their country, and who were afterwards transferred here—to remain, in all probability, until the whole of the troops are cleared out of Egypt—receive no recognition whatever. Surely, the Government have made a mistake in this matter. I think that some notice might be taken of the party I have referred to. I should be glad if you would insert this letter. By so doing you would greatly oblige ONE OF THE UNFORTUNATES.

THE LATE MILITARY TRAIN.

SIR,—With the chance of no officer senior to myself in the late Military Train writing to contradict the following, which appeared in your last issue, viz., "How is the new corps to be officered? Not, it is to be hoped, like the Military Train, by outcasts from the Line!" I request, as a matter of justice, you will insert this letter without delay. If reference be made to Gazettes, Army Lists, &c., it will be seen that the late corps was officered not only from the Line, but from Cavalry, Militia, and first appointments. The reflection of being "an outcast" is one under which I am not willing to remain. I therefore take the first opportunity of denying the assertion, and requesting its withdrawal. To disprove the statement (as far as I am personally concerned), I sign myself, &c.,

GEO. E. BRACE, late Captain, Military Train.

Rue Castiglione 6, Paris, April 11.

[We certainly did not intend to disparage the old Military Train, the officers of which were a body of high-minded and most deserving soldiers.—ED. A. & N. G.]

SOLDIERS' RAILWAY FARES.

SIR,—Among the small favours proposed to be granted by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in introducing his Budget is the following:—"That soldiers and sailors should be carried at two-thirds of the regular fare when in small numbers, but for half the regular fare when travelling in large numbers, such as battalions or regiments." Having long advocated that some concession, such as travelling for half-fares when at their own expense and in uniform should be granted, may I point out that the former proposal of a two-thirds fare will be a little or no boon at all to that which is already generally conceded by the railway companies, while the latter will only benefit the Government in the movement of troops, &c.? One of our leading companies (the Great Western) have for many years allowed marines and seamen of H.M.'s ships stationed at ports in the United Kingdom, on leave, the privilege of obtaining return tickets at a single fare. Why should not this concession, a very considerable one, and much valued, be granted on all railways to men of either service?—I am, &c.,

The Admiralty, it is reported, have decided not to form a flying squadron for training and evolutionary purposes during the current financial year.

The Thunderbolt, floating battery, the first iron vessel of the kind constructed at Chatham for operations in the Black Sea during the Crimean war, and since stationed in Chatham Harbour, is ordered to undergo a thorough repair, and has been removed for that purpose into one of the vacant docks.

SPECTACLES v. BLINDNESS.—"Spectacles can only be perfectly adjusted by those having a thorough knowledge of the anatomy of the eye, combined with optical experience."—We have the highest medical authorities confirmed by daily experience, that imperfect glasses, together with the haphazard plan of selection generally employed by the mere vendor, is the cause of most cases of blindness and defective vision. Sir Julius Benedict writes:—"I have tried the principal opticians in London without success, but the spectacles you have adapted suit admirably. The clearness of your glasses as compared with others is really surprising." The Rev. Professor W. A. Hales, M.A. Cantab., 2 Minford Gardens, West Kensington Park, writes:—"The spectacles are perfect, and a most decided boon. I had occasion on Monday to write to Lord ——, and took the opportunity to mention your name and the wonderful power of your spectacles." Dr. Bird, Chelmsford, writes:—"I could not have believed it possible that my sight could have been so much improved and relieved at my age (82). I can now read the smallest type, although suffering from cataract on the right eye." Testimonials from Earl and Countess Lindsay; F. D. Dixon Hartland, Esq., M.P.; the Venerable Archdeacon Palmer, Clifton; Rev. Mother Abbess, St. Mary's Abbey, Mill Hill, Hendon; C. J. Alford, Esq., Gas Light and Coke Company, Horseferry Road, Westminster, &c. Mr. HENRY LAURANCE, F.S.S., Oculist Optician, 39 OLD BOND STREET, W. (late 3 Endsleigh Gardens, Euston Square), personally adapts his Improved Spectacles daily (Saturdays excepted), from 10 to 5. Special arrangements are made for invalids and others unable to wait on Mr. Laurance. Pamphlet, "Spectacles: their Use and Abuse," post free. City Branch, 6 Poultry, Cheapside.

Obituary.

Lieut.-Gen. G. Dean Pitt, C.B., the Keeper of the Crown Jewels, who was only appointed to the office last year, died at his residence in the Tower, on the 4th inst., at the age of 59. Gen. Dean Pitt entered the Army, Oct. 11, 1839; became lieut., Jan. 19, 1844; capt., May 4, 1849; major, March 9, 1861; lieut.-col., March 21, 1865; col., March 21, 1870; major-gen., June 7, 1880. The deceased raised and trained the Victorian Volunteer Force, for which he received the thanks of the Government. In 1863, he was commissioned by the Colonial Government, on Sir D. Cameron's recommendation, to raise local corps to aid the troops, and in a short time assembled 2,000 men. For this service, he received an unattached majority. In December, 1863, he was appointed assist.-military secretary to Sir Duncan Cameron; served in the Waikato Campaign, including the attacks on Orakou and Gate Pah; also in the Wanganui Campaign of 1864-5, including the action at Nukumaru, and Kakoramia (mentioned in despatches, and brevet lieut.-col.). On the departure of Sir D. Cameron, he was appointed assist.-military secretary to Major-Gen. Chute, and served through the Wanganui and Taranaki Campaign of 1865-6, including the assaults at Okotuku, Pataki, and Waikato, and the march through the Taranaki Forest (mentioned in despatch, C.B., and medal).

The death is announced as having recently taken place in Dublin of Lieut.-Gen. A. Browne, C.B., of Mount Hazel, Galway. Gen. Browne served in the Crimean War with the 44th Regt., and, while in the trenches on Oct. 20, he was severely wounded by a shell, which occasioned the amputation of his right arm and part of the left hand. He was commended in despatches, and created a Companion of the Order of the Bath for his services during the China War of 1860. The gallant officer, who was a member of an old Galway family, was, at the time of his death, in his 63rd year. He attained the rank of Lieut.-Gen. on July 1, 1881.

Lieut.-Gen. J. G. R. Aplin, on the Retired List, died at 10 Edith Road, West Kensington, on the 10th inst., aged 63 years. The deceased, who was eldest son of Vice-Admiral J. G. Aplin, and grandson of Vice-Admiral P. Aplin, joined the Army Oct. 7, 1837; became lieut., April 23, 1841; capt., Nov. 20, 1845; major, July 17, 1855; lieut.-col., Nov. 23, 1860; col., Nov. 23, 1865; major-gen., July 25, 1870: and lieut.-gen., July 1, 1881. He served with the 28th Regt. throughout the Crimean Campaign of 1854-55, including the battles of Alma and Inkerman, siege and fall of Sebastopol, and affair in the cemetery. Wounded while in command of the sharpshooters (medal with three clasps, brevet of major, Knight of the Legion of Honour, 5th Class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal). Commanded 48th Foot 1865-70, and 29th Brigade Depôt 1873-77. Retired 1881.

Major-Gen. the Hon. Sir H. H. Clifford, V.C., C.B., K.C.M.G., died on Thursday at Ugbrook, near Chudleigh. He was a son of the seventh Baron Clifford, of Chudleigh, by Mary Lucy, daughter of Thomas Weld, of Lulworth. He was born in 1826; entered the Rifle Brigade in 1846; became capt. in 1854; major in 1855; lieut.-col. in 1858; col. in 1864; and major-gen. in 1877. He served in the Kaffir War, in the Crimea, and in China; and, besides the Victoria Cross (which he gained in the Crimea), he had the Orders of the Legion of Honour and Medjidie.

Col. A. G. Bell-Martin, who was accidentally killed at Bishopstoke on March 23, was the eldest and only surviving son of the late Edward de Tour Gonne-Bell, of Brookhill and Streamstown, co. Mayo. He entered the Army on Aug. 27, 1852, as an ensign in the Cape Mounted Rifles, and became a lieutenant in the 9th Queen's Royal Lancers in the year 1856, and served with that distinguished corps during the Indian Mutiny of 1857-59. He was engaged in the action of Budlikeserai and the siege and capture of Delhi, having a horse shot under him on Sept. 14. He served on the Cavalry Staff with Greathed's column in the action of Bolandshuhur and Allyghur, and in the battle of Agra. He was also engaged in the relief of Lucknow by Lord Clyde, the battle of Cawnpore and pursuit of the Gwalior Contingent on Dec. 6; actions of Serai Ghat and Khuda Gunge, capture of Meean Gunge (as brigade-major of cavalry), action of Kalu Nuddee, and occupation of Futtehghur, the siege and capture of Lucknow, the summer campaign in Oude and Rohilcund, actions at Rhodamow and Allyghur, the capture of Bareilly, the action at Shahjehanpore, and the pursuit to Mahomdee. He was four times mentioned in despatches, and received the Indian Mutiny medal, with three clasps. On account of the above services, he was promoted to a captaincy, unattached, on Feb. 8, 1861, and afterwards served in the 92nd Gordon Highlanders, and subsequently in the 7th Dragoon Guards. In the latter regiment he was promoted major April 17, 1869, and lieut.-col., April 22, 1871. He retired from the service June 28, 1871, but was appointed to the command of the Royal Cork City Artillery Militia March 10, 1875, and was in command of that corps at the time of his death.

We regret to have to announce the death of Col. Second Comdt. Joseph Hamilton Maskery, R.M.L.I., of the Walmer Depôt, which took place suddenly yesterday morning. Col. Maskery was born in Aug., 1831, and entered the service as second lieut. in Nov., 1848; was promoted to first lieut. in 1852, capt. in 1860, major in 1872, lieut.-col. in 1877, brevet col. in 1881, and was appointed col. second com. in Dec. of the same year. He served in the Black Sea during the latter part of 1855; was adjt. of the 2nd Batn. during the China Expedition, 1857-59, including the blockade of the Canton River, and the operations before and capture of the city (medal and clasp).

The Victoria and Albert will probably be superseded by a steel yacht, the Admiralty having directed that no further expense is to be incurred on that yacht.

Rear-Admiral Lethbridge hoisted his flag on Tuesday, and exchanged salutes with the Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, on appointment as senior officer on the Irish coast.

Amusements.

The production of a four-act grand opera, called "Colomba," written by Mr. Francis Hueffer, and composed by Mr. A. Campbell Mackenzie, has been the notable event this week at DRURY LANE THEATRE, and Mr. Carl Rosa may be congratulated on the successful issue of his enterprise. Colomba's determination to revenge the death of her father, who has been cruelly murdered, is the leading motive of the story, which is derived from Prosper Mérimée's well-known novel. Some of the songs are very effective, and the composer has displayed throughout his refined taste as a writer of vocal melodies and his skill in instrumentation. The heroine, Colomba, is acted with much dramatic power by Madame Valleria, who also distinguished herself as a vocal executant. Madame Baldi, who possesses a well-trained soprano voice, made a favourable first appearance as Lydia. Mr. Barton McGuckin won the warmest applause by his rendering of the tenor part of Orso, and Mr. Ludwig rendered valuable assistance as the detected murdered, Barracini. On Monday night the composer, the librettist, and the principal vocalists were, at the end of the opera, enthusiastically called before the curtain, to receive their respective congratulations.

On Wednesday evening, Mr. R. Buchanan's new drama, entitled "Lady Clare," was produced at the GLOBE THEATRE, with favourable result. The dialogue is poetically written, and some of the situations dramatically effective. The Casino at Dieppe forms one of the prominent scenes. The cast includes Miss Ada Cavendish as Lady Clara Brookfield, Miss Harriett Jay as the Hon. Cecil Brookfield, and Miss Carlotta Leclerq, Mr. Philip Beck, and Mr. Horace Wigan in the other conspicuous characters.

"The Rector" is this week withdrawn from the COURT THEATRE, and "All for Her," by Messrs. Merivale and Palgrave Simpson, has been revived in its place. Mr. John Clayton resumes his original character of Hugh Trevor, Mr. Gilbert Farquhar is now the representative of Captain Damer, and Miss Marion Terry, Miss Kate Rorke, and Mr. Mackintosh are included in the present cast.

At TOOLE'S THEATRE has been reproduced Mr. F. C. Burnand's clever adaptation of "Artful Cards," originally produced at the Gaiety in February, 1877, about one month after the original piece, called "La Clé," by MM. Labiche and Duru, had been brought out at the Palais Royal. In the earlier cast appeared Mr. Bishop, Mr. De Belleville, Mr. Robinson, Miss Hazleton, Miss Henderson, and Mrs. Leigh. There places are now well supplied by Mr. E. D. Ward, Mr. Louis Waller, Mr. E. W. Garden, Miss Marie Linden, Miss Ely Kempster, and Miss Eliza Johnstone. Mr. J. L. Toole and Mr. H. Westland resume their original positions, as Robert Spicer Romford, and his nephew, the volatile barrister, Fred Flutter. In this lively farcical comedy, the spontaneous humour of Mr. Toole finds unrestrained employment, and the revival piece, carefully transferred to its present quarters, excites continued merriment through its performance.

The Royal Italian Opera season at COVENT GARDEN will be commenced on Tuesday, May 1, and will be continued twelve weeks. Madame Adelina Patti and Madame Pauline Lucca are prominent members of the company. An engagement also has been formed with Madame Christine Nilsson, but it is cautiously intimated her appearance is not guaranteed. Mr. Maas will be among the vocalists making their first appearance at the Royal Italian Opera. The orchestra and chorus will remain nearly the same as during last season, and special concerts, under the direction of Sir Julius Benedict, will be given, both at the Floral Hall and the Albert Hall.

Mr. Edward Rose's dramatised version of Mr. Anstey's whimsical story of "Vice Versa" has been tentatively performed at a GAIETY morning performance, but it is not likely to secure a permanent place on the metropolitan stage.

With this week, Mr. Maskelyne has commenced at the EGYPTIAN HALL his promised series of explanations of so-called spirit mediums. The once famous cabinet mysteries of the Davenport Brothers, which, when first exhibited at the Hanover Square Rooms, fifteen years ago, puzzled and perplexed some of the shrewdest folk in London, are here unreservedly revealed, and the simplicity of the process, when explained, is even more astonishing than the apparently miraculous feats so readily accomplished. Mr. Maskelyne's mental telegraphy, by which he transmits, without the aid of confederacy or visible mechanical contrivance, to his writing automaton Zoe words and numbers whispered in his ear by any one of the audience, is also a new feature of a remarkable programme.

Mr. Collette, late 3rd Dragoon Guards, has now been on an uninterrupted tour with the "The Colonel" for 20 months, and has represented the piece over 550 times. He has played in 84 different towns, not including numerous return visits. Great Britain has been traversed by him north, south, east, and west; he is known from Aberdeen to Jersey, and from Scarborough to the Isle of Man.

The Channel Squadron, under the command of Vice-Admiral Sir W. M. Dowell, K.C.B., arrived at St. Vincent, Cape Verd, on Tuesday last, and will sail on the 19th inst.

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS.—The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks, avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies, are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda water, will be found the least objectionable. ENO'S FRUIT SALT is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the powers of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use ENO'S FRUIT SALT, therefore no family should ever be without it. CAUTION.—Legal Rights are protected in every Civilised Country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it, you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d. Directions, in Sixteen Languages, how to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at ENO'S Fruit Salt Works, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. ENO'S Patent.

LANCE RANK.

SIR,—I cannot accept the statement of "Master-Gunner," in your last number, as anything but purely conjectural, and unless he can prove it by any authority of weight, I fear he will not shake my faith in Mr. MacDonnell's derivation of the word "lance," as applied to non-commissioned officers. To begin with, "lancinant" is an adjective, and would not have a final "e," if applied to a non-commissioned officer, unless in the army of the Amazons. The word itself is seldom met with. I cannot find it in my dictionary, but in Schuster and Regnier's French-German Dictionary it is thus defined:—"Lancinant," adj., e, f. (Lat., "lancinans") (se, me, io, l.), "stechend," "lanzenstich ähnlich," "lanzinirend" (er schmerz); and in the German part of the same work, I find among the definitions of the word "stich," "douleur poignante ou lancinante." It is, therefore, impossible to admit "Master-Gunner's" definition of "lancinante" as "shooting," except as applied metaphorically,—the cantiniere might cast "un regard lancinant," which would not, however, ignite powder. The French word "lance" is certainly not derived from "lancinante," nor does it mean a port-fire stick, except in the form of lance-à-feu. "Master-Gunner" need not have gone so far as France to find out that companies of infantry in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries consisted of pikemen and musketeers. The same formation and constituent parts were to be found in our service at the time; but it may have been peculiar to the French service for the serjeants in charge of the pikemen to carry a short pike, to serve as a port-fire for the musketeers. It certainly was not the case in our service, if the old drill books are to be believed. The Musketeers in the English service carried lighted matches in pipes, and among the words of command in the exercises of the seventeenth century were, "Draw forth your match," "Blow your coal," "Cock your match," "Fit your match," "Uncock and return your match," &c. In a list of ammunition and warlike necessaries carried by the Prince of Orange (not William III.), written by Capt. Thomas Rudd, chief engineer to King Charles I., I find enumerated, "Pipes to hide light matches in, 3,000; half-pikes, 300." This, I think, disposes of "Master-Gunner's" theory of the antiquity and origin of the rank of lance-serjeant, but I shall be glad to know if he can quote any authority in support of it, as my object is to obtain information, not to provoke controversy. He introduces linstocks into his letter upon lance-serjeants, why, I know not, except, perhaps, that, like "Monmouth" and "Macedon," they have a common initial, and leads one to infer that the linstock was always a fixed instrument. It was originally the lance-à-feu, pure and simple. Capt. Rudd gives the following sensible advice:—"Before you load your Piece, take care to cleanse the touch-hole; then (observing the Winde) set your powder-barrel to weather your piece, and your linstock on the contrary." And further, "In firing of any Piece, take your linstock in your right hand, and coming to the side of your Piece, set forward one Leg, keep your Body upright, and your arm extended at full length; the cole of your Match being cleared, give 'fire' to the Powder; so shall you perform your work both safely and gracefully." The linstock gunner was simply the present No. 5 at the gun.—I am, &c.,

THROAT IRRITATION.—Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use Epps's Glycerine Jujubes. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the Glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing. Sold only in boxes, 7½d, tins, 1s 1½d, labelled "JAMES EPPS and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London." A letter received:—"Gentlemen,—It may, perhaps, interest you to know that, after an extended trial, I have found your Glycerine Jujubes of considerable benefit (with or without medical treatment) in almost all forms of throat disease. They soften and clear the voice.—Yours faithfully, GORDON HOLMES, M.D., Senior Physician to the Municipal Throat and Ear Infirmary."

ATTENTION was called in the House of Commons, on Monday, to the case of Mr. Lynall Thomas, by a question put to the Secretary of State for War by Mr. Macfarlane. Mr. Macfarlane asked that the House might be placed in possession of the correspondence which has passed between Mr. Thomas and the War Office since July, 1882, having reference to a claim for repayment of expenses in connection with heavy rifled ordnance. It may be well to place before our readers the full facts of Mr. Thomas's case against the War Office, the details of which have, doubtless, been forgotten by the majority of persons not actually interested in gunnery matters. It must be known that the subject of rifled ordnance was, when first introduced some 25 years ago, an entirely novel one, on which there was absolutely no acknowledged authority, and to which the then received theories, in accordance with which the old-fashioned Artillery had been designed and constructed, were totally inapplicable. Consequently, when attempts were first made to introduce rifled ordnance into our service, much money and time was expended, without the attainment of corresponding beneficial results. The protracted litigation Mr. Thomas had with the War Department resulted in the establishment of the fact that it was to him the country was indebted for first showing the enormous power attainable with rifled cannon, when designed on a more correct and scientific principle than that which till then had obtained. The principle he proposed was new; one which he had worked up to in a long course of experiments, and submitted to public criticism in a paper read before the Royal Society in 1858. For the purpose of practically illustrating the correctness of his views, Mr. Thomas designed and produced, with the consent of the Minister of War, the first heavy 7-inch and 9-inch rifled guns; though, owing to the difficulty which at that time existed in manufacturing guns of so large a size, he had to leave the question of metal and construction to others better qualified than himself to solve the problem. Various reasons being alleged against the Thomas guns, such as their heavy charges, weight, &c., there was a most determined opposition to their introduction into the service. Finally, however, in 1866-7, these powerful plate-piercing guns were adopted, and the first-named 7-inch 7-ton gun became the acknowledged standard gun of the service. But though no one ever urged any counter-claim to the origination of these guns, which effected a complete revolution in heavy artillery, being diametrically opposed in every respect to the guns they superseded, the inventor was denied, on the most trivial grounds, the repayment of the expenses he had incurred in their production. Hence arose the long litigation which resulted in the complete establishment of Mr. Thomas's claims. Mr. Thomas's argument is that, in common justice, the expenses incidental to the experiments carried out by him for the good of the public service ought to be repaid. After repeated efforts to recover the amount due to him, and which sum he had disbursed in faith of a contract with the War Office for his reimbursement, Mr. Thomas was compelled in July, 1872, to have recourse to litigation, and commenced proceedings against the War Office by "Petition of Right." In defence, the Crown disputed, by way of demurrer, whether a "Petition of Right" would lie for a breach of contract resulting in unliquidated damages. This was argued at great length before three Judges, who, after taking four months to consider their verdict, gave, on November 20, 1874, a unanimous judgment against the Crown. Mr. Thomas then applied to the Court for discovery and production of documents and correspondence, which the Crown resisted. The Court on November 24, 1874, decided that the Act which enables a plaintiff in an action to obtain such discovery as between subject and subject, does not extend to a suppliant in a Petition of Right. The Crown then relied for their defence on the "Statute of Limitations," to which Mr. Thomas demurred, on the ground that the statute did not apply to "Petitions of Right;" whereupon, on August 9, 1876, the Crown abandoned that defence. The action was at last tried at the Guildhall, before a special jury. It commenced on February 19, 1877, and was not concluded till March 10 following, having occupied fifteen days. It resulted in a verdict against the Crown, damages £8,790 11s. 6d., and costs. In June, 1877, the Crown moved the Court to set aside the verdict, and the Court exercised—it is believed for the first time in the case of a "Petition of Right"—the power given to them by the Judicature Act of determining the law upon the materials before them, holding that, in their opinion, no contract existed between the Crown and Mr. Thomas, and suggesting that Mr. Thomas could appeal on that point; and if the Court above decided against the Crown, he would then have the advantage, in the event of a new trial, of having that point in his favour. Now, it is evident that Mr. Thomas has a very strong case. The Crown having succeeded in preventing the inspection by the plaintiff and his solicitors of the documents relating to the case, he went to trial under the most serious disadvantages, being quite unable to ascertain the nature of the defence, except during the progress of the trial. This, in itself, was a most high-handed proceeding. The late Lord Chief Baron, who tried the case, declined to stop it on the objection raised by the Counsel for the Crown, that there was no valid agreement, and said there was sufficient evidence for him to leave the question to the decision of the jury. Whatever may be the technical objection to the existence of a contract, there can be little doubt that the Judge and jury who tried the case, having the advantage of hearing the evidenc as it was given, and seeing the demeanour of the witnesses, were a competent tribunal for determining that question. The late Lord Chief Baron, in summing up, remarked that "without uttering a reproach against the witnesses on either side, yet over and over again he could get no answer from any of the Crown witnesses to various plain questions which bore on the most essential points of the case." The case is an unpleasant one, showing, as it does, the length to which the War Office will go, in order to resist the legitimate claims of inventors. It should, however, act as a warning to others not to follow Mr. Thomas's example, and labour in the interests of the State without first having bound the responsible Ministers down hand and foot, and given them no loophole through which they can escape from their liabilities, for it is only too evident that they will stop at nothing in order to repudiate responsibility. It is not a pleasing reflection to know that such is the case. But there it is, and Mr. Thomas has found to his cost how little value is to be attached to the words, or even the bonds, of those in office, when once their turn has been served. It is a lamentable state of affairs, truly; and we regret to say that Mr. Thomas is not the only man who is labouring at the present moment under a sense of most serious personal injury, owing to the dishonesty of those who represent the authority of the State. Inventors lead the van of progress and reform. They add by their inventions to the wealth of the nation. And yet the Government of this country attempts, in its blindness, not only to dispense with and crush them, but to rob them of the fruits of their labour, after having been handsomely paid to protect their interests.

WE have drawn attention, on several occasions since the publication of the "Honours" Gazette for the Campaign in Egypt, to the unmerited slight passed on the officers of the Army Pay Department, owing to the absence of all Staff Paymasters and Paymasters from the list of rewards. The replies of the Financial Secretary to two questions in the House of Commons have been so unsatisfactory and contradictory that we deem it necessary to expose this flagrant injustice more in detail. Now, the duties of Paymasters are more analogous to those of officers in the Commissariat and Ordnance than other Departments. We shall therefore compare the numbers decorated and promoted in these two Departments with the rewards conferred upon officers of the Pay Department, as shown by the official Army List and the London Gazette, remarking en passant that all receive the medal for the campaign and the Khedive's star:—Of the Commissariat, 63 in number, 13 officers (21 per cent.) were rewarded as follows:—Commissary-General Morris, K.C.B. and Medjidie; Deputy-Commissary-General Robinson, C.B. and Osmanieh; Deputy-Commissary-General Randall, C.B. and Medjidie; Assistant-Commissaries-General Saunders, Medjidie and promoted; Hughes, Medjidie and promoted; Reeves, Medjidie and promoted; Ronald-Taylor, Medjidie; and Grattan, Osmanieh; Deputy-Assistant-Commissaries-General Nugent, Medjidie; Hamilton, Medjidie; Lea, Medjidie; Johnson, Medjidie; and Fryer, Medjidie. Of the Ordnance, 12 in number, 6 officers were rewarded (50 per cent.):—Deputy-Commissary-General Russell, C.B. and Medjidie; Assistant-Commissaries-General Mills, Medjidie; and Morgan, promoted; Deputy-Assistant-Commissaries-General Campbell, promoted and Medjidie; Steevens, promoted and Medjidie; and Skinner, Medjidie. Of the Pay Department, 31 in number, only one officer, was rewarded—Chief Paymaster Colonel W. R. Olivey, who received a Civil C.B. and the Osmanieh—the Orders of Knighthood conferred on officers of the Commissariat and Ordnance being military, not civil. Parliament being prorogued a few days after the appearance of the Honours Gazette in November last, no opportunity presented itself of interrogating the Secretary of State for War as to the extraordinary treatment of the officers of the Department, until the Session reopened, when on March 12, Mr. Whitley asked, "Whether it was true that of the Army Pay Department in the Egyptian Campaign, numbering over 30 officers, only one had received any acknowledgment of his services, whereas other Departments had been widely recognised; and if so, what reason there was for passing over a department which had been officially acknowledged to have well performed its responsible duties." To which Sir A. Hayter replied, "The duties of the officers of the Pay Department are rarely such as to call for the display of those qualities which are rewarded by honorary distinctions in time of active service. They do not as a rule, necessitate officers going under fire. As a matter of fact, Lord Wolseley recommended only Colonel Olivey, the Chief Paymaster, for a distinction, whose services were specially arduous, and he received a Companionship of the Bath; but he expressed his satisfaction in despatches at the way in which the officers of the Department performed their duties in Egypt, and they will all receive the war medal and the Egyptian star." The principle, therefore, enunciated by the Financial Secretary's reply appears to be that, having been granted the medal and star which every one serving in the campaign received, and having had the head of their Department honoured by a Civil C.B., the Paymasters are to rest content, and see half the officers of the Ordnance Store Department, and one-fifth of the Commissariat, the majority of whom were necessarily never under fire, honoured with decorations and promotions which are denied to them. After such an answer, it was but natural that the Member for Liverpool should again return to the charge last week, and inquire, to put it briefly, "Why, if Departmental officers who had never been under fire had been decorated and promoted, should not Paymasters also, under similar circumstances?" As Sir A. Hayter's reply was given in extenso in our last issue, we need not repeat it. Finding, however, like an Old Bailey attorney, that he could not sustain the "under fire" argument advanced in the March reply, he added that decorations were given "also to those performing duties of exceptional responsibility," so as to cover the grant to the Commissariat and Ordnance officers in charge respectively at Ismailia and Alexandria. But the Financial Secretary carefully refrained from alluding to those who had been promoted who were included in Mr. Whitley's question. The assertion that the duties of the Chief Paymaster only were of a specially responsible character is most assuredly not borne out by facts, and Colonel Olivey himself would be the first, we believe, to disavow such an idea. There are at least six officers on whom very heavy and responsible duties fell in Egypt. Major Forbes, for instance, was District Paymaster and Treasure-chest Officer at Alexandria, and was assisted by Major Whittington. Major Rouse had financial charge of the whole of the Royal Artillery, including the batteries from India. Major Pyne had a still larger charge, including all the non-commissioned officers and men of the Royal Engineers, Commissariat and Transport, Ordnance Store Department, and Army Hospital Corps out in Egypt. Captain Bateman and Captain Long were associated with the Chief Paymaster at the Head-quarters Treasure-chest Office, first at Ismailia, and after Tel-el-Kebir at Cairo. If the Financial Secretary wishes to know the character of the work which devolved upon the officers above named, he should consult some of the Head-quarters Staff now in England; they, at any rate, would give an unprejudiced testimony. But why should the recommendations of the Chief Paymaster have been ignored, when those of other heads of Departments were not? Sir A. Hayter's reply indicated a doubt as to the accuracy of the particulars furnished by us of Departmental officers not under fire who were promoted or decorated —or both. We should certainly have expected an official occupying the position of financial secretary to an important Department to have taken the trouble to have posted himself as to facts, before giving such a painful exhibition of ignorance. Far from our having over-estimated the injury done to the Pay Department, we understated the case, for it has come to our knowledge that another officer of the Commissariat got the C.B. and Osmanieh for duty performed not in presence of the enemy; and we find that of the officers of the Ordnance Store Department, two, at the utmost, were ever under fire. The truth is that, considering the lavish distribution of honours to some even who were only a few days in Egypt, the treatment of the officers of the Pay Department is more than mere neglect, and the authorities may rest assured that unless something is done to recognise, though late in the day, the responsible work performed by the Department in the late campaign, duty may in future be performed, but nothing more. We have no desire to underrate the value of the work performed by the Commissariat and Ordnance Departments in Egypt. Our duty is to watch the interests of all branches of her Majesty's service, and we consider that the Pay Department has been so cruelly treated, that we willingly espouse the cause of a body of officers who had great responsibilities, and ought to have been fittingly rewarded, as others were.

UNDER the head of "Machine-Guns and Home Defence," a correspondent in another column draws attention to the want which exists of a properly-defined system by which the large force of Volunteer Artillery could be utilised in case of invasion, for the protection of our shores. Our correspondent, being an artillery officer of considerable experience, cannot be accused of being prejudiced in favour of the machine-gun, and yet he recognises its value, and endeavours to show in what manner it could be utilised with advantage. There is no disputing the soundness of his arguments. Recent events have proved conclusively that, under certain conditions, the machine-gun could be of immense practical value. In Egypt, the new arm may be said to have been tested for the first time, and the reports of those who were called upon to work it in face of an enemy demonstrate that occasions may arise when the presence of a number of machine-guns with an army operating in the field may be of the greatest benefit. There was a disposition lately to decry all machine-guns. The French, it was contended, tried the gun in their campaign against Germany, and it failed; but the fact is lost sight of that in 1870 the machine-gun was in its infancy. Since then the arm has been vastly improved. Our Admiralty has experimented with it, and successive trials at Shoeburyness and elsewhere have served to show that it possesses undoubted merits. The only question now to be considered is how it can best be used. It seems to us that our correspondent, "Experience," has made out a strong case in support of the gun. There may exist doubts as to the advisability of employing machine-guns with bodies of troops in the field, but there can be no two opinions as to the good which would result from its adoption for coast defence and for the protection of fortified posts. It is foolish in the extreme for us to close our eyes to the march of events. All the nations of Europe are up and doing. We, too, should make an endeavour to keep pace with the times. We certainly are not doing this now. Either from feelings of false economy or other reasons less commendable, our War Office has hitherto refused to countenance the machine-gun. But is it promoting the interests of the State by such a course of action? Only the other day, when the Commanding Officer of a Metropolitan Volunteer regiment added, at his own and his officers' expense, a couple of machine-guns to the equipment of his regiment for purposes of experiment, the War Office was so wanting in foresight as to forbid the use of the guns, because, as it was contended, "it would never do to allow the Volunteers to take the lead in such matters." It happens, however, that of recent years the Volunteers have taken the lead in almost every movement which has been for the good of the Army. The War Office has only led in a wrong direction by instituting reforms which have in almost all cases broken down completely when brought into actual operation. When any subject of real importance has had to be considered, it has been due principally to the enthusiasm of the Volunteers that the question has been forced upon the powers that be. And so, we believe, it will be with machine-guns. The Volunteers have led the way, and eventually the gun will undoubtedly be adopted; but at present, the responsible authorities look on in a lukewarm manner, and do not care to commit themselves to any definite course of action. They spend their time in discussing minor details, such as the colour of a soldier's facings, whilst the broad questions of organisation and equipment they leave "to be gone into at a future date." We should be glad to see steps taken to consider the proposals put forward by "Experience," for we feel convinced that our correspondent will have every thoughtful soldier with him in the views he expresses. The arm of the service to which the machine-gun should be attached is simply a matter of detail. The questions to be decided are,—Could the guns be made available for service on land? and if so, how could they best be employed? A committee of experienced officers ought to be assembled without delay to report on these two points. Depend upon it, the time spent in such a discussion would be far more profitably employed than in formulating plans for the sweeping-away of esprit de corps, and the establishment on a so-called territorial basis of an Army which, from the very nature of its service, never can be territorialised. There would be something to be gained by the deliberations of a committee on a pressing question of armament. Unfortunately, those who have the interests of the country in their keeping, cannot rise beyond buttons and pipeclay. They can only follow, they fear to lead; and until Germany shows its hand in any matter, they cannot move for themselves. And yet they complain if their policy is not supported, and seek to make out that the Army is too Conservative. The Army may be Conservative when its traditions are being assailed, but in any matters where real progress is made, the service, we feel certain, will be found to give willing support to those who may inaugurate change.

IN the House of Lords on Tuesday, Lord Truro drew attention to the case of Surgeon-Major Thorburn, whose treatment by the Military authorities has already been made the subject of an article in our columns. In commenting on the matter in our issue of March 3, we pronounced the case an extraordinary one. The effect of the discussion raised by Lord Truro on Tuesday must be to render the action of the Military authorities more unaccountable than it at first sight appeared. Lord Morley was able to offer no defence. Lord Truro contended that it was "a case of the clearest injustice," and pointed out that Surgeon-Major Thorburn had "made repeated but ineffectual efforts to have it reopened." To this Lord Morley replied that his lordship was "making an ex parte statement." But, with all due deference, we fail to see how Lord Morley can justify the action of the Military authorities in India. Some will doubtless contend that in a matter of this kind, a personal question, affecting one individual only, the interests of the public services demand that the hands of the authorities should be strengthened. It seems to us, however, that the public has a right to demand that officers should at least have a chance of defending themselves when their integrity is impugned. "The case arose," to quote Lord Truro's words, "out of some steeple-chases at Lucknow, where a horse belonging to the Surgeon-Major had lost a race by clearing a fence on the wrong side; and on the occasion of a subsequent race, believing from the condition of his own horse that he could not win, he stood to win a larger stake by the victory of another competitor. His jockey had twice stated in examination that his orders were to win if he could, and there appeared to be no ground whatever for the reflection which had been cast upon his character. It was due to the ill-will of two gentlemen who were disappointed at the result, and whose evidence in the first instance, when he had no opportunity of being heard, had been allowed to govern the case throughout." Now, it appears to us that much of the evil in the case has arisen from the eminently unsatisfactory manner in which the Stewards of the Lucknow Race Meeting arrived at their decision. Dr. Thorburn was not present during their inquiry, and he was, therefore, allowed no opportunity of justifying his conduct. In a letter dated November 3, 1881, on which, be it remarked, the Principal Medical Officer acted in bringing the matter to the notice of the Adjutant-General in India, Dr. Thorburn was accused of having pulled his pony. This letter was signed by W. Dickson, Honorary Secretary, Calcutta Turf Club, and in it the Stewards of the Calcutta Turf Club are said, "on careful consideration" of the evidence that has been brought before them, to confirm the Lucknow Stewards, and, in the interests of the Turf, to "debar Dr. Thorburn, for a period of three years, from running or training at any race meeting where the Calcutta Turf Club Rules are in force." But in a letter dated May 16, 1882, addressed to Dr. Thorburn, Mr. Dickson, as Honorary Secretary of the Calcutta Turf Club, declares that "no report or summing-up at any time emanated from the Calcutta Turf Club, nor have we collectively or individually had any communication with the Principal Medical Officer in India, on the subject." Now, in face of this letter from the Honorary Secretary of the Calcutta Turf Club, it may well be asked on what grounds did the Principal Medical Officer in India base his decision? There are clearly some extraordinary discrepancies. The Honorary Secretary of the Calcutta Turf Club denies that the body he represents ever, either collectively or individually, had any communication with the Principal Medical Officer in India. How, then, was the matter made official? Is the letter upon which Dr. Crawford acted a forgery? If so, the Court of Inquiry was clearly assembled on a forged document. A Court of Inquiry, though it gives no decision, is supposed to write a report. What was the purport of such report in the present instance? Dr. Thorburn contends that the members of the Court of Inquiry exonerated him, in proof of which it is alleged that they shook hands with him, and offered to write to Calcutta on his behalf. Is it true, therefore, that the Court of Inquiry never took the trouble to write a report? If so, there is only one conclusion to be drawn, and that is in favour

A correspondent writes from Cairo :—" Hope, expectancy, and anticipation are the factors that frequently buoys and encourage mankind to bear up with a light heart against the manifold jarring vicissitudes of life. Without them, it would be but a weary existence. The British officer now in Egypt is no exception to this; he is but human in his feelings, aspirations, and longings. In this country, those of the force who have borne the brunt of the late campaign without missing a day's duty since, and who have struggled to bear up against sickness and hardships, enfeebling thereby, more or less, their constitutions, certainly did anticipate leave to revisit home, wives, little ones, and friends. Alas! however, their hopes are blighted, an order having arrived to the effect that no leave is to be granted except in individual cases of great emergency. If this ungenerous order be not rescinded, we forecast a lengthy list of passages granted home on medical certificate at Government expense."

We wonder if the authorities intend taking any steps towards making the localisation of the Artillery less of a sham than it is at present. The Inspector-General of Recruiting in his annual report says :—"The Militia Brigades in most cases are detached, and there are only two depôts of the Artillery, at Dover and Gosport, at which Militia brigades are also located, and where the process of amalgamation can be to any extent satisfactorily carried out. Until each depôt is located in good barracks, with one or more brigades of Militia Artillery at the same station and in the same quarters, the full benefit of this localisation cannot be obtained; and until this depôt centre is complete in all its arrangements, it will be impossible to ensure to that branch of the service the popularity which will be the means of securing it the number of recruits required." We imagine, therefore, a chronic state of deficiency of Artillerymen is likely to exist in the future. Of the 880 recruits obtained in the last nine months of 1882, 162 came from the South-Eastern District, 143 Northern, 126 Southern, 95 Eastern, 83 Lancashire, 73 South Irish, 63 North Irish, 55 Welsh, 46 Western, and 34 Scottish.

It is surprising how little attention some officers give to the Warrants which emanate from time to time from the War Office, affecting them and their prospects in the service. Were the present Warrant for regulating pay, promotion, and retirement more generally understood, we feel convinced that it would be taken advantage of to a far greater extent than it is at present, by those who are only looking forward to the time when they will be able to qualify for pension and leave the service. By the terms of the Warrant as it now stands, a General Officer of any grade may retire two years or less before the termination of his period of unemployment (five years), with a reduction of his pension of £10 a year for each complete year of age under the retiring age of his rank. Again, until the active establishment is reduced to its normal proportion—there are still some twenty officers to be disposed of—a General or Lieutenant-General can retire at or after the age of 62, the former on not less than £950 a year, the latter on not less than £800 a year; and a Major-General can retire at the age of 57, on £650 a year. Now, there are several General officers who are never likely to be employed again, and it is rather surprising that some of these officers do not quit the service voluntarily, instead of waiting to be turned out under hard-and-fast rules.

Our special correspondent at Cairo writes :—" A general impression seems to be gaining ground that the British occupation of Egypt 'may be for years, and may be for ever.' Whatever the decision of her Majesty's Government may be, the necessity for a positive statement on the subject cannot be too strongly urged. It is necessary on political grounds, because until such a declaration is made recent administrative reforms will not begin to take root; on financial grounds, because without it there will exist no confidence, therefore no credit, therefore no development of commercial enterprise, in a country which is purely agricultural and commercial. It is further necessary, in order that both officers and men may be relieved from the discomfort and the expense attendant upon a state of absolute uncertainty as to their future. The force required need not exceed a brigade of Infantry in Cairo, and another in Alexandria, with two batteries of Artillery at the capital, and one at the seaport,—say, some four thousand men in all. With a reduction to this number, and a convention that it should remain for five years, arrangements could be made which would greatly conduce to the health and comfort of the troops. Accommodation might be found to enable non-commissioned officers to have out their families, and thereby we should not only do away with a general feeling of discontent which prevails among the 'backbone of the Army,' but do much to improve their general health."

M. Barthelemy, late Professor of Military History at St. Cyr, contributes this month an article to the Fortnightly Review on the French Army, explaining its mechanism and enumerating its strength. The Professor makes no secret of his political proclivities, and this rather mars the value of his observations. He is a Republican, and in favour of Republican theories applied to the Army, such as universal service and short service. The fact that M. Thiers opposed three years' service, and would hear of nothing less than five years, is set down to a love of routine. Now, the opposition of M. Thiers arose from the simple motive that he considered a small, well-trained Government force preferable to a large, unwieldy, ill-trained national Army. Compulsory short service, M. Thiers conceived, would give France nothing better than a National Guard, and that M. Thiers was wrong has yet to be proved. Although a Republican and a lover of equality, M. Barthelemy, when he comes to deal with non-commissioned officers, is forced to admit that the upper classes who now escape five years' service by volunteering are those from which the best serjeants and corporals might be drawn. The Professor, of course, regrets the fact that nothing will induce the French non-commissioned officers to remain in the service once their time is up. This tells heavily on the Army with five years' service; but how will it be possible to form serjeants, when the time of service is reduced to three years? The Professor also refers to another great blot in the present system,—to wit, the paucity of officers. There are, in fact, too many and too few,—too many for the peace, too few for the war establishment. He writes on the subject of the Reserves :—" There would be only 5,000 officers for 600,000 untrained and undisciplined men. The temper of this mass, in case the Army in the field suffered defeat, would certainly show itself in manifestations or in open rebellion. Such a danger is no less great in the Territorial Army, where there are only 16,000 officers for 1,400,000 men; that is, there is scarcely one officer for every hundred soldiers. This situation is full of danger, and must be at once attended to." This seems to be an argument in favour of the theories of M. Thiers, and one cannot help thinking that the French, as our trans-Atlantic cousins express it, have bitten off more than they can chew. What is the case at present with the officers of the Active Army? The captains, with their subs, command companies about 20 strong. During the autumn manœuvres these companies, with the aid of the Reserves, are to be raised to 180 men, and in time of war their proper strength is 250 men. It is hardly necessary to point out the defects of this system, and what a difficult task the company officers will have to play when suddenly called upon to command, say 200 new men, with whom they are totally unacquainted, and to lick them into shape. In recapitulating the divisions of the French Army, the Professor talks of the permanent Army being 500,000 strong. Now the permanent portion of the Army not affected by the conscription, consists of the officers, regimental staffs, &c., and is about 100,000 strong. What the Professor means is that the active Army is 500,000 strong. We also object to the term of "active reserve" being applied to the Reserve of the Active Army. The Professor gives us a list of the 19 Army Corps, and the divisions and brigades into which they are divided, but he says nothing of the Army of Paris, nor the independent cavalry divisions and the independent battalions of chasseurs, or rifles. He might also have mentioned that the wood rangers in the State forests, and the Custom-house officers, have received a military organisation, and such facts as these, that every horse and cart in the country are registered, and could consequently be requisitioned at a moment's notice. We should certainly recommend this article to the professional reader, and our politicians would do well to study it, and see what an immense force has grown up on the other side of the Channel. Before the Franco-German War, M. Barthelemy's friends were indulging in a crusade against a standing Army, and were cutting down the estimates. Now, our Professor boasts that the Parliament has refused the Army nothing, has voted it immense sums, and has thoroughly replenished the magazines. "Let danger," he concludes, "threaten the country, and forthwith a simple telegraphic message will call 3,000,000 of armed, disciplined, and trained men around the banner of the French Republic."

Great satisfaction is expressed throughout Canada at the appointment of Lieutenant-General Lord Alexander Russell, C.B., to succeed Sir Patrick M'Dougall in command of the troops in British North America. Lord Alexander Russell served in Canada for several years with the 1st Battalion Rifle Brigade, and made himself much liked wherever he went. As a Canadian paper says :—" It is a great thing to have at the head of the Military Establishments at the present time one who knows the Dominion and its people, and the fact of an experienced officer such as Lord A. Russell being in command at Halifax, cannot but produce its effect on the feeling of the Dominion, should complications arise."

We find some interesting particulars in Marshal Bazaine's work on the subject of General Boyer's mission. After a second audience with Prince Bismarck at Versailles, the General returned to Metz, where a Council of War was called to hear the result.

> "He gave an account of the conditions upon which the army would be allowed to march out of Metz with arms and baggage. Those conditions made the advantages to be granted to the Army of the Rhine to depend upon a political question (the words printed in italics are in the handwriting of Napoleon III., who revised the report made by Bazaine). He gave a description of the internal state of France such as it had been described to him; the impossibility of treating with the Government of National Defence before a constituent assembly which could alone guarantee a treaty-convocation, adjourned by the Government de facto, which Prussia had not recognised; the power emanating from the Constitution of 1870 voted in May (before the war broke out, and which confirmed the Empire) still represented the legal Government."
>
> "It was decided by a majority of seven to two that General Boyer should return to Versailles, and should thence go to England in hopes that the intervention of the Empress Regent might obtain better terms for the Army of Metz. It was unanimously decided that the Marshal commanding-in-chief could not accept any delegation to sign the bases of a treaty implying questions foreign to the army. These were to remain apart from all political negotiation."
>
> "The mission of General Boyer, therefore, had no other object beyond trying to deliver the army of the Rhine from its painful situation, and to preserve it for France."
>
> "I received no further direct news of General Boyer's mission, but I learned later that his loyal efforts had been unsuccessful, the guarantees demanded by the German military authorities appearing excessive, and their acceptance in no way depending upon the chiefs of the army."
>
> "On the 24th October only, I received, through Prince Frederick Charles, notice that at Royal head-quarters there seemed no chance of arriving at a result by means of political negotiations." (These last lines are scratched out in the report, but whether by Napoleon III. is not said.)

Then comes :—

> "? Explain here that while the negotiations were going on, the state of the Army had become so bad that it was no longer possible to attempt a sortie? Give details with regard to the exhaustion of the men?"
>
> "On the 24th, a new council was called to take the above into consideration. Wishing to be completely and definitively acquainted with the intentions of the Germans, the Council asked General Changarnier, the glorious veteran of our African wars, to seek an interview with Prince Frederick Charles, and to try and obtain from him not a capitulation, but an armistice, with permission to revictual, or that the Army should retire to Africa. . . . . . Through devotion, the illustrious General accepted this mission, which met with no better success than the preceding ones. It became necessary to resign ourselves, because an attempt to force our way out, which had already been considered as only a last act of despair, would, under the actual circumstances, have been a veritable suicide, by offering to the enemy an easy victory over an army which had never been conquered; and it would have been a crime to have sacrificed thousands of lives confided by the country to the experience of its military chiefs, uselessly. . . . . . . A council of war was again called upon the morning of Oct. 26, to hear the result of General Changarnier's mission, and to come to some final decision. It was unanimously agreed that the General of Division, Jarras, should be sent to the head-quarters of Prince Frederick Charles, on behalf of the Council, and furnished with full powers to draw up and sign a military convention, by which the French Army, vanquished by hunger, considered itself prisoners of war.—Bon-Saint-Martin, Oct. 28, 1870."

Napoleon III. added these lines :—

> "Such is the succinct and faithful story of the conduct of the Army of the Rhine. . . . . . I hope that history will render it justice, and that the powerful voice of public opinion will say,—It deserved well of the country.
>
> "Cassel, November 16, 1870."

If the above report be true, it shows that Bazaine, if alone condemned for the capitulation of Metz, always took counsel before acting.

Within the last few years, the British Army has been subjected to many sweeping alterations, introduced and carried into effect under the specious name of "Army Reform." In making these changes, the same course has generally been followed. First, the scheme is announced, in more or less official language, in some of the daily papers. Next, a carefully selected committee is convened, comprising some of the originators or prominent advocates of the change, but rigidly excluding any known opponents of what is called reform. The committee look at the question from the one point from which they were directed to view it, and send in just the report they were expected to furnish. The papers and magazines then teem with remonstrances and objections; but the remonstrances are unnoticed, the objections are simply ignored, and the obnoxious change is effected. We must not omit to notice an important feature in these proceedings. While the scheme is apparently only tentative, rumours are widely circulated that the question is settled—that it is too late to prevent the change—that we must now make the best of it, &c. In this way the amount of opposition is greatly lessened. The proposed change in the colours of the uniforms of the Army has been introduced in the way we have described. In order to support the views of those who proposed the change, the "Colour Committee" made a series of utterly unpractical experiments, the result of which any one could have predicted. These experiments taught us nothing about the appearance of soldiers under any possible circumstances, but they confirmed, as they were intended and expected to do, the views plainly indicated in the instructions as to the comparative visibility of certain colours, when not worn as part of soldiers' uniforms. No one has fairly answered the evident objections to the abolition of scarlet uniforms; but, on the contrary, letters deprecating the change continue to reach us from various quarters. Yet, judging by the course of other reforms, many people consider the question settled, notwithstanding the plainly-expressed disapproval of the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief.

The Army.

6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers). Capt. Sprot has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Jumna. Lieut. Garratt, granted leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate, has arrived in the Jumna.

5th Lancers. Capt. Spicer has taken over his duties as adjt. of the North Somerset Yeomanry.

9th Lancers. The inter-regimental polo tournament at Umballa has been won by the regiment, the Rifle Brigade being beaten in the final tie by six goals to three. Lieut.-Col. Abadie has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on urgent private affairs. Capt. Fife completed his period of service as adjt. of the North Somerset Yeomanry Cavalry on Tuesday.

11th Hussars. Major-Gen. Cameron, C.B., commanding the Northern District, accompanied by Col. Wilkie, the Assist.-Adjt.-Gen., made his annual inspection of the regiment at Leeds on Saturday last. The General also presented the detachment of the regiment which had served in Egypt with the medal and bronze star for that campaign, remarking as he did so, "that it afforded him much pleasure in making the presentation, and that he was always happy to do anything which would tend to foster that military spirit which he was glad to say was increasing in this country." He spoke also of the good conduct of the men during the campaign, not a single instance of misconduct having occurred with the detachment. The General then visited the schools, hospitals, offices, stables, &c., and inspected the books, expressing himself much pleased with the discipline and efficiency of the regiment. Major Swaine receives the medal and star for the recent campaign, having served as aide-de-camp to Major-Gen. Sir Drury-Lowe, C.B. The regiment has commenced its annual course of musketry under the new regulations.

12th Lancers. Major Mansel-Pleydell has leave from India to sea for three months from March 23, on private affairs.

13th Hussars. Lieut.-Col. Gifford has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Jumna.

15th Hussars. It is stated, says the Bombay Gazette, "that Lieut.-Col. G. Luck, 15th Hussars, is coming out to join the Head-quarters' Staff in India. Col. Luck is well known in the Bombay Presidency, having been garrison instructor at Poona, and afterwards Commandant at Purundhur. He is spoken of as being one of our smartest cavalry commanders. He led the regiment with distinction in Afghanistan and commanded the corps under most trying circumstances in South Africa, when the men had to take the field on untrained horses. Col. Luck formerly belonged to the Inniskilling Dragoons, which regiment he joined by purchase in April, 1858; he became capt. in Nov. 1867, major in March, 1878, and lieut.-col. in April, 1879."

17th Lancers. Capt. and Qrmr. Shawe has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Lieut.-Col. J. B. Richardson, Capts. W. Aitken C. H. Rickards, and W. Tylden, and Lieuts. G. T. Kelaart, C. H. Crofton, R. M. Crofton, G. G. Simpson, H. M. Sandback, and G. Osborne have arrived home from India in H.M.S. Jumna.

The Irish Times has the following:—"Lord Hartington has deferred the question of Artillery reorganisation until a more convenient season. Notwithstanding reports to the contrary, there was a scheme drawn up for the reorganisation of the regiment, but the new Secretary of State for War desires to feel his feet firmly before committing himself to any sweeping reforms. In this he is, no doubt, acting wisely, but the Artillery, as at present constituted, is so overgrown as to demand that something should be done to render its administration rather less complicated, and any steps taken to place the organisation of the Royal Regiment on a more satisfactory basis would have met with the hearty approval of the service at large."

"Lieut.-Col., late Indian Artillery," writes:—"Your article in last Saturday's paper regarding the application of the five-years' Warrant, &c., to the officers of the late Indian Artillery, is quite 'to the point.' Unless something is done to limit our tenures of command in the different ranks, the hopes of sufficiently quick promotion for the captains to escape compulsory retirement are small. Even in my rank, what with major-generals being allowed to reside in the Hills in India unemployed for three years after promotion to that rank, drawing more than 'off-reckonings,' and consequently having no inducement to retire, and colonels holding command for indefinite periods, I see little hope, under present conditions, of holding the position of 'colonel on the Staff' before the age clause of the Royal Warrant retires me."

Major A. D. Anderson completed his five years' service as brigade-major, R.A., in India on the 18th inst.

"An Old R.A. Man" writes:—"In your leading article of Saturday last, regarding the anomaly of allowing the colonels, lieutenant-colonels, and majors of the late Indian Artillery to serve on for an indefinite period, although officers holding corresponding grades on the old Royal Artillery list are being compulsorily retired, you suggest the application of some pressure to the Indian officers to induce them to retire voluntarily, and you mention one or two ways in which such pressure might be applied. Allow me to suggest another form of pressure, viz., the moving out of India to Europe or the Colonies of each officer as he completes his five or seven years' service in colonel's or major's rank respectively. A transfer of domicile, to which no officer who has elected general service could object, and such service has been chosen by almost every one of them. The result of this would be that all officers so moved would be put to very considerable expense in moving; and, above all, they would find their full pay—even including command pay—much less than the pensions now offered to them, and so it would be to their interest to take those large pensions, which they will, however, never accept so long as they are allowed to retain the loaves and fishes attached to Artillery commands in India, where lieutenant-colonels in command receive some £1,450 a year and colonels as much as £1,650 or £1,700 per annum, and where they have, in addition, very great hopes of succeeding to brigade commands in the Army,—expectations which now stand higher than ever, owing to the fact that all other lieutenant-colonels are sent home on half-pay on completion of four or five years in command, according to their original dates of appointment. Should these officers be allowed to serve on, an additional hardship and injustice will be inflicted on their brethren of the old Royal List, for the latter must necessarily be always junior to the Indians, and so can never obtain any of the very lucrative regimental commands in India, which are necessarily held by the regimental seniors; nor can the old Royals hope for even an Army Brigade command, as they also, except in very exceptional circumstances, are given away by seniority. Hence, there seems to be nothing for it but the sending out of India of the Indians, and that would, without doubt, be a most effective and speedy remedy indeed, and it is one in bar of which the Henley clause could never be pleaded, as the officers concerned have accepted freely, and almost universally, 'General service,' and there can be no scruple as to applying such a pressure to them, for they have now for over 20 years enjoyed their share—ay, and more than their share—of all the good things of the service, such as home service, field service, commands, and Staff appointments; they now hold five out of the seven regimental adjutant-generalships, and so cannot object to be called on to accept a share of the 'bads'—after enjoying so many of the 'sweets'—of the service. Indeed, I know as a fact, that some of themselves fully expected to be retired on Oct. 1 last, and were much surprised when they heard they were to be allowed to serve on; and I never heard them, even when they thought retirement was imminent, express any opinion that such a compulsory retirement would be at all unfair to them."

Capt. J. C. Dalton has been appointed Deputy-Assist-Adjt. and Qrmr.-Gen. at Gibraltar. Capt. Dalton was awarded the medal for services in the Afghan war of 1880, in which he took part with the force with Major-Gen. Phayre in Southern Afghanistan.

A correspondent writes:—"I was glad to see your remarks on the anomalous position of Imperial Colonels. The Royal Warrant of 1882 does not provide for the seven senior colonels on the Indian Lists vacating until attaining the age of 58 years (Arts. 102-3 and 1), and the senior of these seven (Col. Harward) will by that time have held a colonel's position for eight and a half years, viz., from Dec., 1878, to June, 1887. What chance is there for the brevet colonels under these circumstances getting commands? The four junior colonels on the Indian Lists come under Article 79, having attained the rank after July 1, 1881. Now for the Lieutenant-Colonels and Majors. As officers of each rank who are candidates for the Horse Artillery are placed on one rôle, no matter what List they belong to, it follows that if Lieutenant-Colonels and Majors of the Indian Lists can remain in these ranks longer than those on the old List can, their tenure of Horse Artillery will be longer than that of those on the old List. It so happens that at the present time, the officers on the Indian Lists hold a large proportion of Horse-Artillery appointments. It is very evident that things cannot go on as they are, but things that are difficult to deal with are often shunted by weak officials—as I take some of those at the India Office to be."

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The health of the sappers at Alexandria and Cairo presents a marvellous contrast to the state of the other corps. It is almost incredible. The average sickness is less than 2 per cent. on the strength, as compared with five times as much in the healthiest of other corps.

See 79th Regiment.

Capt. W. T. Shore and Lieuts. G. H. W. O'Sullivan, T. Digby, A. H. Kenney, and C. Maxwell have arrived home from India in H.M.S. Jumna.

Major-Gen. H. Z. D. Scott, C.B., on the Retired List, died on Monday at his residence, Silverdale, Sydenham, aged 61. He was educated at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and entered the Royal Engineers in 1840. He acted as Instructor in Surveying and Practical Astronomy, and also as Examiner of Military Topography for the Military Education Department at the War Office. He retired from the Army in 1871 as Major-Gen., and became Director of Buildings at South Kensington, acting as architect to the Royal Albert Hall and Science Schools. He was Secretary to the Royal Commissioners of the 1851 Exhibition. He had just finished superintending the construction of the Great International Fisheries Exhibition. He leaves a widow and 15 children.

Capt. H. J. Harman died at Villino Regnoli, Florence, on the 14th inst., from tubercular pneumonia, contracted by exposure and hardship during his service on the great Trigonometrical Survey of India. He joined the Army July 7, 1869, and became capt., July 7, 1881.

Grenadier Guards. Lieut.-Col. Sir Charles Russell, Bart., V.C., late of the regiment, died on Saturday at Swallowfield, near Reading, in his 57th year. He was the eldest surviving son of Sir Henry Russell, the second baronet. Sir Charles was educated at Eton, and entered the Army in 1843, when he was appointed to the 35th Regt., with which he served in the Mauritius. Transferred to the Grenadier Guards in 1847, he served with distinction throughout the whole of the Crimean campaign, having been present at the battles of the Alma, Balaclava, Inkerman, and the siege of Sebastopol (Victoria Cross, Crimean medal with four clasps, Turkish medal, Order of the Medjidie, and Knight of the Legion of Honour). He succeeded his father as third baronet in 1852. He had been a Deputy-Lieutenant for Berkshire since 1855, and sat for that county in Parliament in the Conservative interest from July, 1865, to Nov., 1868, when he retired from the representation under the minority clause of the Reform Act of 1867. He was returned for Westminster as the colleague of Mr. W. H. Smith in 1874, and was re-elected in 1880, but retired in 1882, in consequence of ill-health. He is succeeded in the baronetcy by his brother, Mr. G. Russell, County Court Judge.

8th King's (Liverpool Regiment). Capt. Grattan, 2nd Batn., has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Jumna.

9th Norfolk Regiment. Capt. and Adjt. Shuckburgh, 2nd Batn., has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Jumna. Lieut. Morton, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate.

11th Devonshire Regiment. Lieut. Davies, 2nd Batn., has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Jumna.

12th, the Suffolk Regiment. Major Baker, 2nd Batn., has been selected for duty at the depot for two years.

13th Somersetshire Light Infantry. Capt. Townshend, 2nd Batn., has been granted an extension of leave to the 6th prox., pending his retirement from the service. Capt. Palmer, 1st Batn., has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Jumna.

16th Bedfordshire Regiment. Lieut. Staveley is a candidate for the S.C., and has been appointed to the 16th Bombay N.I.

17th Leicestershire Regiment. Lieut. and Adjt. Scott, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on private affairs.

21st Royal Scots Fusiliers. Lieuts. D'Aeth and Johnston, 2nd Batn., have arrived home from India in H.M.S. Jumna.

24th South Wales Borderers. Lieut. Phipps, 2nd Batn., has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Jumna.

25th King's Own Borderers. The 1st Batn. marched from Umballa on the 12th ult. for Dugshai. Lieuts. Keene and Johnston, 1st Batn., have arrived home from India in H.M.S. Jumna. Lieut. Cox, a probationer for the S.C., has passed the higher-standard examination in Hindostanee. Capt. H. Bland, late of the regiment, died suddenly at St. Cloud on the 16th inst., aged 45 years.

29th Worcestershire Regiment. Capt. and Pymr. Fleury has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Jumna.

30th East Lancashire Regiment. Lieut. Scott has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Jumna. Capt. Robinson has been detailed for duty at the Convalescent Depôt, Dalhousie, during the summer.

34th Border Regiment. At a general court-martial, assembled at Agra on Feb. 19, Lieut. H. Macdonald was arraigned on the charge of being drunk at the mess-house at Dum Dum, on the night of Nov. 8, 1882. The court, of which Col. Sir Baker Russell, 13th Hussars, was president, found the prisoner guilty, and sentenced him to be severely reprimanded. The Commander-in-Chief (Sir Donald Stewart) writes:—"Confirmed, but not approved. I consider the sentence to be wholly inadequate, and ill-calculated to uphold the character and discipline of the Army." Lieut.-Col. Dyson-Laurie has been granted leave from India to England for 12 months, on private affairs.

38th South Staffordshire Regiment. A correspondent writes:—"An inaccurate account having appeared in a Lichfield paper of what has taken place about the old colours of the 38th Regiment, I send you word of the true facts of the case. The old colours of the 38th Regiment were sent to Patshull, near Wolverhampton, in consequence of the colonel of the regiment at that time being Gen. Sir George Pigot, and the Pigot family being then the owners of Patshull. The Earl of Dartmouth, the present owner of Patshull, thought that Lichfield Cathedral was a more suitable resting place for them, and accordingly sent them to the officer commanding the Regimental District, with a view to their being placed there. The Dean's sanction has been procured, and Gen. Elmhirst, C.B., the colonel of the regiment, has been asked whether it will meet with the approval of the officers of the regiment. In the meantime, the old colours, escorted by the Depôt, have been taken to the officers' mess at Whittington Barracks, until arrangements are made for their removal to the Cathedral."

39th Dorsetshire Regiment. Major T. H. Gee, late of the regiment, died at his residence in the Lower Ward, Windsor Castle, recently, at the advanced age of 84 years. The deceased had seen a great deal of service in the Peninsular War in 1813-14, and was present at the battles of Vittoria, Pyrenees, Nivelle, Nive, Bayonne, Garres, Orthes, and Toulouse, for which he received the medal with six clasps. He also served in the Gwalior Campaign in 1843, and was at the battle of Maharajpore, for which he received the bronze star. Lieut. Simpson is a candidate for the S.C., and has been appointed to the 43rd Bengal N.I., on probation.

41st, the Welsh Regiment. Col. J. Simmons, C.B., late of the regiment, died at 41 Elgin Crescent, Notting Hill, W., on the 16th inst., aged 92 years. Lieut.-Col. Simmons, C.B., served in the Peninsula, as a volunteer, with the 34th Regt., afterwards as an officer in the 23rd and in the Rifle Brigade, from Sept., 1811, to the end of that war, in 1814; including the storming of the forts at Almaraz, affairs at San Munos and San Milan, battle of Vittoria, actions at Yanzi Bridge and Echalar, storming of Vera Heights, crossing the Bidassoa, battle of Nivelle, and battles of the Nive, Dec. 10, 11, and 12, 1813 (war medal with three clasps). Served with the 41st Regt. throughout the Burmese War; and was present at the storming of Rangoon and the Syrian Pagoda; led the head of the left column storming the trenches in front of the Dagon Pagoda; storming a strong stockade in front of the Dagon Pagoda (medal). Commanded the left wing of the 41st Regt., in the field, against the Kolapore Rajah. Served with the regiment during the Campaign of 1842 in Afghanistan, and commanded a column of attack in the action of April 28, in the Pisheen Valley; present also in the actions near Candahar, at Goaine, and before Ghuznee, occupation and destruction of that fortress, and of Cabul. Expedition into Kohistan, storm, capture, and destruction of Istaliff, and in the various minor affairs in and between the Bolan and the Khyber Pass. He was a fine old soldier, and one who would necessarily have been highly distinguished, had he not retired from the Army on his return from India, owing to his health at that period. He was one of three brothers, all of whom served in the Peninsular War, the eldest of whom was that brave officer, Major George Simmons, Rifle Brigade, whose deeds are well known in that corps.

ROYAL MARINES.

Lieut. J. H. Bor, R.M.A., Commandant of the Cyprus Military Police, has been selected for special service in the Bombay Presidency in connection with the efforts now being made to ensure the destruction of locusts.

51st King's Own Light Infantry. Lieut. Strachey has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Jumna.

60th King's Royal Rifle Corps. Lieut. Russell, 4th Batn., has been detailed for duty at the Convalescent Depôt, Dalhousie, during the summer. Qrmr. Crane, 4th Batn., has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Jumna.

63rd Manchester Regiment. The distribution of the Khedive's star was made to the regiment on Saturday. The regiment was paraded at the Tower. An inspection having been made by Major-Gen. Higginson, C.B., commanding the Home District, some 320 stars were given to the regiment. The General congratulated the men, not only on their being decorated, but on their appointment to the Tower of London for duty, which he regarded as a distinction.

65th York and Lancaster Regiment. The Bombay Gazette says:—"No British regiment in the Bengal Presidency has yet beaten the magnificent shooting of the York and Lancaster Regt., at Aden, which, it may be remembered, has achieved the remarkable figure of merit of 141·44, its best shooting company having made 152·47. The regiment in Bengal that heads the list, up to date, is the 1st Batn. Suffolk Regt., with 140·01, the next being the 4th Batn. King's Royal Rifle Corps, with 137·40, and the third the 1st Batn. West Riding Regiment, with 135·57. But though the regiment at Aden carries off the palm as usual, it must be owned that the scores above noted are very good indeed, and show that whatever fault may be found with our musketry system from a practical point of view, it turns out wonderfully accurate shooting on the range."

68th Durham Light Infantry. Lieut. Robb has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Jumna.

78th Seaforth Highlanders. Lieut. Lund has been granted leave from India to England for fifteen months, on private affairs.

79th Regiment. Lieut. Ewart has been in charge of the party engaged in the distressing duty of disinterring our dead at Tel-el-Kebir, and burying the remains in the new Cemetery, near the railway station, which promises to be a creditable piece of work. The ground is enclosed with a wall, and there is a tank to irrigate the trees and flowers which are to be planted presently. In the centre is a space for a monument, to be erected by a grateful country, and there are smaller spaces for similar erections to commemorate Tel-el-Mahuta and Kassassin. The bodies of Lieut. Gribble and some others have never been found, and the number of those interred in the new Cemetery falls considerably short of the total of those who fell in action. The Royal Engineers are also engaged in completing a cemetery near Old Cairo for the many English soldiers who have died during the occupation.

81st Loyal North Lancashire. Capt. and Adjt. Davidson has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Jumna.

88th Connaught Rangers. Major Curran remains in England on leave until September. Lieut. Clough Taylor has been granted leave from India to England for nine months on private affairs, and has arrived home in the Jumna.

89th Royal Irish Fusiliers. Capt. Brown has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Jumna.

94th Connaught Rangers. Major Bunbury completes seven years as instructor in military surveying at the Royal Military College on the 26th inst. Capt. Wood has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Jumna.

95th Sherwood Foresters (Derbyshire Regiment). Major Bowles is ordered home from India to join the depôt for two years.

98th North Staffordshire Regiment. Lieut. Dyson is a candidate for the S.C., and has been appointed to the 9th Bombay N.I., on probation.

104th Royal Munster Fusiliers. Lieut. Bennett is a candidate for the S.C.

Rifle Brigade. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Lane, who served as aide-de-camp to Major-Gen. the Duke of Connaught during the campaign in Egypt, has been appointed Assistant Military Secretary to Lieut.-Gen. Lord A. Russell, C.B., who takes over the command of the troops in Canada on the 24th prox.

Pay Department. "Fusile" writes:—"What are the poor unfortunate members of the Army Pay Department to think, when it is found that no mention is made in the Army Circulars for April of any attention to their grievances? From the War Secretary's speech, when introducing the Estimates, we gather that it was his intention to grant us certain concessions (small enough, goodness knows), and some alteration in the sums voted, such as the amount for servants' allowance, confirmed our expectations. You can imagine then the knock-down blow we received upon reading the circulars for the current month. It is certainly most surprising to see more combatant captains making such arrant fools of themselves, by resigning their commissions to join a department that the authorities have so grossly broken faith with, and to the members of which, it appears, they will concede nothing. Do please, Mr. Editor, continue the telling paragraphs that have appeared in your paper, and that have shown the authorities that our grievances are just, and not imaginary." Capt. W. L. Henry, paymaster, 29th Regiment, has arrived in England, on leave from India. Capt. A. Gleig, paymaster 53rd Shropshire Light Infantry, on sick-leave from Malta, has arrived in England. Two officers have been seconded for service as probationers for the Department, Capt. T. G. Lumsden, 1st Batn., 6th Warwickshire Regiment, and Capt. O. H. B. St. John, 95th Regiment, an Adjutant of Militia.

Medical Department. Brig.-Surg. W. Collis, Surgs.-Major T. Bennett and J. Ambrose, and Surgs. R. Murphy and W. J. Mitchell have arrived home from India in H.M.S. Jumna.

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

The under-mentioned regiments are ordered te assemble for their annual training on Monday:—2nd Brig. Eastern Division (Norfolk Artillery), at Great Yarmouth; 3rd Brig. Welsh Division (Royal Carmarthen Artillery), at Carmarthen; 4th Brig. Welsh Division (Royal Pembroke Artillery), at Haverfordwest; 3rd and 4th Batns. East Kent Regt., at Shorncliffe Camp; 3rd Batn. Oxfordshire L.I., at High Wycombe; 4th Batn. South Wales Borderers, at Welshpool; and 4th Batn. Leinster Regt., at Maryborough.

The following regiments will be called out next Friday:—5th Brig. Welsh Division (Royal Cardigan Artillery), at Aberystwith; 3rd Brig. North Irish Division (Donegal Artillery), at Letterkenny.

The recruits of the following regiments assemble:—April 23: 2nd Brig. Northern Division (Durham Artillery), at Hartlepool; 4th Brig. Northern Division (Yorkshire Artillery), at Scarborough. April 27: 2nd Batn. Cameron Highlanders (Highland L.I.), for 35 days, at Muir of Ord, Inverness. April 30: 3rd Batn. Durham L.I. (Durham Militia), at Barnard Castle.

VOLUNTEERS.

2nd (South) Middlesex Rifles. A most successful assault-at-arms was given by the Kensington Company at the Kensington Town Hall on Friday evening last, in aid of the funds of the School of Arms. The hall was crowded with friends of the regiment, to all of whom it was a great convenience that the entertainment was held in a central position, instead of at head-quarters, at Walham Green, which are literally out of the world. The members of the Kensington Company may well be proud of the honours they have won, and to Lieut. White a special word of praise is due for the care he took to make everybody at home. Lord Ranelagh, Col. Wylde, and most of the officers evinced their interest in the regiment by attending.

18th Middlesex (Paddington) Rifles. We regret to learn that there is a probability of Lieut.-Col. Ives retiring from the command of the regiment, which has been raised to its present high position principally by his great zeal and liberality. Col. Ives will be a distinct loss to the Volunteer service, for he has done much to promote its interests by the thoroughness with which he has thrown himself into the duties of command. He has not been a commanding officer in name only, but has proved that he has had the good of his regiment at heart.

22nd Middlesex (Central London Rangers). For the first time since its formation, the regiment is now recruited up to its full strength. Over 500 men have offered themselves for enrolment since Nov. 1, of whom some 180 have been accepted; and Col. Alt has been enabled to pick and choose, which has allowed the regiment to enlist the services of a number of most eligible recruits. The officers and men have formed themselves into a machine-gun and magazine-rifle club, to perfect themselves in the use of these new weapons of modern warfare, and thus add to their value for purposes of defence. Lieut.-Col. Alt has invented a new limber machine-gun carriage, carrying the gun and 5,000 rounds of ammunition in a most practicable and portable manner, on two wheels, the whole being easily worked by eight men. Then it is proposed to arm a certain number of men with magazine rifles for experimental purposes. A grand concert is being got up by the officers, and will take place about the middle of July, at the Holborn Town Hall, Madame Marie Roze-Mapleson having generously volunteered her services on the occasion.

23rd Middlesex (London and Westminster) Rifles. This regiment has suffered a great loss by the death of its hon. colonel, Sir Charles Russell, Bart., V.C. The following regimental order has been issued:—"The commanding officer announces with very great regret the death of Sir Charles Russell, Bart., V.C., the hon. colonel of the 23rd Middlesex Volunteer Batn., which occurred on the 14th inst. Lieut.-Col. Routledge is sure that this information will be received with respectful sorrow by all ranks. The funeral will take place at Swallowfield, Reading, on Friday, the 20th, at 12 o'clock. Sir Charles Russell took the greatest interest in the affairs of the regiment, and was always glad to take any trouble which would benefit it, or any officer, non-commissioned officer, or man serving in it. Officers, when in uniform, will wear mourning for a month from the 18th inst.—By order, Ellis Lee, major, Y. and L. Regt., Adjt., 23rd Middlesex V.B., 31 Great Smith Street, April 16." Sir Charles was buried on Friday; Lieut.-Col. Routledge was amongst those who attended the funeral.

THE TRANSVAAL AND EGYPT.

Sir,—There is a small group of soldiers, dwindling fast as time runs on, that has read with interest of their brothers' deeds in Egypt; the telling of them recalled to them other days and other deeds, in which they were the actors. Part of this group are far away in India, a small remnant are still in the land where their dead comrades lie, a few are at home, the rest have conveniently been put out of the way in Ireland; the whole are forgotten, as it was intended they should be. I allude to the men who held the garrisons in the Transvaal for three months against a cruel foe and overwhelming numbers during the late Boer rebellion. For three months those brave men fought and died, a night's rest unknown; not a day passed without attacks from an enemy as deadly to an infantry soldier as an Egyptian is innocuous. All of a sudden they found themselves shut out from the world, the few yards of ground they stood upon the only bit of English soil for many miles, the food scanty and but ill-adapted to keep up life and spirits,—they were as men forgotten in a strange land. Yet not one of all these small garrisons ever lost heart, all fought on to the bitter end; and it was only at the bidding of an English General that they lowered the flag which had floated victorious over those far-distant specks of theirs, which they had held so earnestly for their Queen and country. We used to say in those long, dull days, that when we got back again, England would be proud of us, as she always has been of those sons of hers who do their duty, and the thought gave us fresh courage, and caused us to make light of those deadly, ever-falling bullets, of the sleepless nights, and rotten biscuit. But when at last we did get away, we found ourselves sent off here and there as men to be got rid of; to be kept out of sight and forgotten. No hand was held out to welcome us; if we mentioned the fact of our late defence, we were met with silence; a mistake had been made somewhere, not by us, but by some one who is paid to know better, and we must suffer. As to any rewards, the few that were doled out to us occupied as many lines in the Times as those for Egypt did columns. But our General had been killed, and we had no one to stand up and say a word for us; and so we must go to the wall. True, we were recommended for a cross or a star,—that at least we had deserved; and there was not one amongst us but felt that he could wear such names as Potchefstroom or Standerton on his breast with pride. Our General thought so, and sent home to England that it was our due; the defence of those posts which held a great province for England till she thought fit to quit it was a deed fitting to be held in remembrance. Where is the star our General counted us worthy to wear? As I walk down the streets of the garrison town where I am quartered, I pass many soldiers. Some are decorated with medals and scraps of ribbon, and walk past me as the British soldier should do,—square and erect, so as to show to the best effect the glittering things they are proud of. These men are from Egypt, where, after a month of discomfort, they finished the war in twenty minutes. But more that I pass are men who fought with me through three dreary months, when every day one or more would fall out and join that silent company on the hillside where the tell-tale crosses stand; and on these men's breasts no bit of silver glitters, and they pass me by, mutely reproachful. Is this justice? Is this the way to encourage our soldiers to fight next time? Why should we, because we are too weak to defend ourselves, be so treated?—I am, &c., A Soldier.

Admiral Sir Cooper Key on Thursday inspected the new steel corvette Canada (which went her trial trip on Wednesday), with the view of carrying out certain alterations, to fit her for a cruise on which the eldest son of the Prince of Wales will shortly proceed. The vessel is said to be a fast and good sea-going craft, on which account she has been selected for the Prince's voyage. It is rumoured the Canada will be placed under the command of Capt. Durrant.

The Rupert made a trial of an experimental torpedo tube in the repairing basin at Portsmouth on Tuesday morning. It is intended to fit her with four above-water discharging ports, two on the bow and two on the counter, having a fall of about 8 ft., and admitting of the torpedoes being trained up to 20 degrees of the middle line. The firing will be accomplished by means of air guns, worked by a socket joint, so that the use of pistons will be dispensed with. As the trial proved satisfactory, the fitting of the three tubes to complete the Rupert's torpedo armament will be expedited.

SPECTACLES v. BLINDNESS.—"Spectacles can only be perfectly adjusted by those having a thorough knowledge of the anatomy of the eye, combined with optical experience."—We have the highest medical authorities confirmed by daily experience, that imperfect glasses, together with the haphazard plan of selection generally employed by the mere vendor, is the cause of most cases of blindness and defective vision. Sir Julius Benedict writes:—"I have tried the principal opticians in London without success, but the spectacles you have adapted suit admirably. The clearness of your glasses as compared with others is really surprising." The Rev. Professor W. A. Hales, M.A. Cantab., 2 Minford Gardens, West Kensington Park, writes:—"The spectacles are perfect, and a most decided boon. I had occasion on Monday to write to Lord ——, and took the opportunity to mention your name and the wonderful power of your spectacles." Dr. Bird, Chelmsford, writes:—"I could not have believed it possible that my sight could have been so much improved and relieved at my age (82). I can now read the smallest type, although suffering from cataract on the right eye." Testimonials from Earl and Countess Lindsay; F. D. Dixon Hartland, Esq., M.P.; the Venerable Archdeacon Palmer, Clifton; Rev. Mother Abbess, St. Mary's Abbey, Mill Hill, Hendon; C. J. Alford, Esq., Gas Light and Coke Company, Horseferry Road, Westminster, &c. Mr. HENRY LAURANCE, F.S.S., Oculist Optician, 39 OLD BOND STREET, W. (late 3 Endsleigh Gardens, Euston Square), personally adapts his Improved Spectacles daily (Saturdays excepted), from 10 to 5. NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

PENSIONER.—The matter is under consideration, and the Treasury, as usual, stops the way.

VOLUNTEER.—The badges of rank for officers in green are bronze.

R.N.—Complaints reach us from several quarters that we do not insert sufficient Fleet news. At the same time, our correspondents admit that our columns contain more Naval news than do those of our contemporaries. This complaint we consider rather unfair, as those who make it forget to take into consideration the actual dread of Naval officers on active service of writing to a newspaper. We receive hundreds of letters each week from officers of the Army, to the tens which reach us from Naval men. We are at all times ready and willing to publish Fleet news, when sent.

The ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE this week contains eight pages extra.

The NAVAL AND MILITARY STATIONS are published by the ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE on the first Saturday in each month.

The ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE exchanges with or receives the following Service papers abroad:—L'Avenir Militaire; Bulletin de la Réunion des Officiers; L'Armée Française; L'Italia Militare; Rivista Europea; Rivista Militare; Memorial de Ingenieros; La France Militaire; Moniteur de la Flotte; Le Progrès Militaire; Der Veteran; Streffleur's Oesterreichische Militärische Zeitschrift; Jahrbücher für die Deutsche Armee und Marine; Militär Wochenblatt; Giornale d'Artiglieria e Genio; Organ der Militär-Wissenchaftlichen Vereine; Vedette; Deutsche Heeres Zeitung; Militärische Zeitschrift; Armeeblatt, Wien; Army and Navy Journal of New York; The American, Philadelphia; Revista Maritima Brazileira; in addition to all the home and colonial professional periodicals and journals.

Army & Navy Gazette.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1883.

THE reply of the First Lord of the Admiralty to Lord Belmore, when questioned as to the pay Naval officers, was singularly infelicitous. We can assure his Lordship that if he will reduce the present insufficient pay of the Lieutenants by fifty per cent., there will be no lack of candidates; but it does not follow as logical sequence that the country will secure the services of a class who, to use his own expression, serve in a very great measure from a sheer love of profession, and an undefined hope of something turning up in a remote future. Similar arguments may with stronger reasons be applied to the gentlemen who pen curt replies to the petititions of old officers, for we are slow to believe that members of the Board would knowingly sanction the issue of such documents. It may be fearlessly stated that the clerks of the Second-class branch of the Civil Service will gladly perform all the duties of Admiralty clerks, and perform them equally well, for a moiety of their income, for it is no secret that some of their number were, before they entered on their present employment, rejected for the Executive of the Navy; consequent on this, with the true spirit of renegades, no opportunity is missed of showing their hostility to it. For reasons which are incomprehensible to all who are not within the periphery of the charmed circle, Whitehall appears to entirely alter the disposition of those who enter its precincts,—men who heretofore entertained broad Liberal views on all questions of Naval policy, immediately they take their seat at the Board, drift with the official stream, regardless of the mental resolutions they had made when the position was apparently unattainable. On one point they cannot be accused of neglect,—the care of their own special department. It is true that the ordinary pay of Lieutenants has remained stationary for the best part of half a century, but that of "My Lords" has practically doubled within the last few years. It is true that in the last decades the Greys, the Martins, and the Fanshawes filled all the principal offices of the Navy, from youth to extreme old age, and a glance at what is now going on indicates that, although the cards have been shuffled, a similar game is played. Not long since, a gallant officer, who is most deservingly popular, but who had held lucrative employments on shore for twenty years, wished to hoist his flag again, and an Order in Council, regardless of all precedent, was at once procured to enable him to gratify the wish. We defy any one to point to a single instance where such a favour has been conferred on an officer of any other branch of the Military division of the service. We maintain that it is the bounden duty of the heads of a great Department, at stated intervals, to carefully examine the condition of every branch of its officers and servants, in order that any changes which the advance of the times demand may be carried out, for in many instances money would not be necessary to ameliorate the condition of many deserving officers. All the improvements of recent years in the pay and position of officers other than the one favoured branch are due to outside pressure, and it is a matter of history that the majority were resisted with an asperity highly discreditable to those in authority; indeed, not one would have been conceded, had not the market value of medical science and engineering increased so much that concession became an act of necessity. On the other hand, if an Order in Council is necessary before their own favoured class can receive an addition of rank or emolument on the Active or Retired List, it is procured without a moment's delay. The result is precisely what may be expected, under such circumstances; officers, in lieu of looking up to the Admiralty as the legitimate expounders of their rights and the guardians of their interests, regard them as a body—whether justly or unjustly, we will not say—whose only aim is self-aggrandisement and the maintenance of the status quo of their predecessors. That a half-pay commander or lieutenant should, with his family, eke out a precarious livelihood, is no business of theirs. The amount of their pittance was fixed long since, and the increased price of living and education is no concern of "My Lords," so long as the pressure does not intrude within the limits of their own homes. Of course, if it should, the infallible remedy of an Order in Council can be procured to set things right, without any unnecessary delay. We maintain, however, that it is perilous for the Navy to feel that a very large number of its Executive officers, whether rightly or wrongly, labour under the impression that their grievances are slighted simply because those in authority believe that active means will not be taken to insure redress. No one who is responsible for the well-being of the service should neglect the ominous signs already above the horizon; the cloud that is no bigger than a man's hand occasionally spreads and obscures the heavens, and it is at all times advisable to speculate on the contingency. The Marquis of Salisbury's summing-up upon the most unsatisfactory debate which followed the motion of the Earl of Belmore, was far more to the point than the evasive and incorrect reply of the Earl of Northbrook. The noble Marquis said truly "that it was in the power of both Houses of Parliament to make a discontented class," and the discontent that already exists is not likely to be removed by the erroneous excuse made by the First Lord of the Admiralty, "that the Naval candidate's education at the cost of his father was cheaper and shorter than that of the candidate for a commission in the Army." The Naval candidate, before he arrives at the position of equality with the passed Military one, must have attained the same age of 19, and have passed his final examination at Greenwich Hospital as a Sub-Lieutenant, having for six years previously been an expense to his father of between six and seven hundred pounds since joining the Britannia, besides the expense of a "crammer" for two years previously, quite as essential as for the Military candidate. A correspondent writes:—"I have two sons in the Army and one in the Navy, and the expense of maintaining the latter has far exceeded that of either of the former, upon giving them their first starts; besides, the sailor has no less than 12 examinations to pass, with the chance of his being turned out or 'warned' after each of them. I regret extremely that I did such a foolish thing as to place him in the Navy, when the Army is so much easier and less expensive to enter." The Admiralty are evidently killing "the goose with the golden eggs."

The greatest surprise is expressed all through the service that, notwithstanding the services rendered by the present Assistant-Under-Secretary of State for War, he should be still plain Colonel Deedes. There is perhaps no man connected with the War Office who is more respected, and that he should have been overlooked on all occasions when Bath honours have had to be distributed, is one of those things which "no fellah can understand."

A vacancy will occur shortly among the Aides-de-Camp to H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief by the promotion of Colonel R. Bateson, half-pay, late 1st Life Guards.

Matters are gradually drifting into a pretty state in the Indian Staff Corps. It appears that by the end of of 1883, the numbers of the several grades in the Madras Staff Corps will be as follows:—Lieutenant-Colonels, 221; Majors, 74; Captains, 37; i.e., two Majors to every Captain, and three Lieutenant-Colonels to every Major. By the end of the year 1884, the condition of affairs will be even worse, viz., Lieutenant-Colonels, 257; Majors, 38; Captains, 38; or as many Majors as there are Captains, and 6¾ Lieutenant-Colonels for every Major. It is fully time that the matter was taken up, and steps adopted to remove a difficulty which will gradually increase as time goes on.

Major-General H. A. Smyth, C.B., the new Commander of the Woolwich District, seems likely to spend the full period of five years in his appointment. His predecessor was particularly unfortunate in getting only 18 months of command.

With reference to G.O. 51, specially issued on the 29th ult., it has been ordered that when a troop or company has concluded the first part of the annual course, it will return to duty, and will be succeeded, as heretofore, by another troop or company. The troop or company is not to be struck off duty for the second part of the annual course, but the men thereof will complete the second part at odd times during the year as they become available, and will occupy the regimental range at such times in the mornings or afternoons as the range may not be required for the company engaged in the first part. No suspension of target practice on account of bad weather (rain or fog excepted) will be permitted, without the express sanction of the general officers commanding brigades.

It is hoped at Aldershot that the rumour may prove true which assigns the Divisional command to Lieutenant-General Sir Archibald Alison, when Sir Daniel Lysons retires in the autumn. General Alison has all the experience which is necessary, and he is so popular that he could not fail to prove a success at Aldershot.

On Thursday last, a serjeant of an infantry regiment was seen strolling down Whitehall in seeming innocence. Yet his appearance might cause as much dismay to an Army reformer as the apparition of the murdered Banquo did to Macbeth; for he wore the old uniform of a regiment which has lost its number and identity, and has had its facings and title changed. No strange device, with microscopic inscription, adorned his cap, no county title graced his shoulder-strap, but a plain number gleamed on both in shining brass. The tortures of the rack would not compel us to divulge that number, or the proscribed colour of the facings; lest we should draw down some heavy if indirect punishment on that unconscious offender, or blight the prospects of the real culprit, his commanding officer.

Deputy-Commissary-General Russell, C.B., senior ordnance store officer at Aldershot, has been appointed a member of the Permanent Committee on Equipment, Dress, &c., vice Deputy-Assistant-Commissary-General Jeans. This Committee has been busily employed during the week. It may well be called a "permanent" one, as the matters being brought before it are so numerous and diverse, that the present year will not, possibly, see a conclusion of its labours.

We understand that the University of Glasgow has resolved to confer the degree of LL.D. on Inspecting Veterinary-Surgeon G. Fleming, Army Veterinary Department, in recognition of the great service rendered by him to veterinary science.

Reference has been made by a correspondent in our columns to the good-fortune of Captain Barrington Foote, R.A., who got the Medjidie for service in Egypt. Our correspondent has unintentionally done an act of injustice, in inferring that Captain Foote did nothing to earn the distinction. Instead of going out at a late period, the officer arrived at Alexandria early in August with the Head-quarters Staff. He was employed as Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General, and had a great deal of work in embarking all the regiments, horses, and stores which proceeded from Alexandria to Ismailia. He was constantly at work until nearly the end of November, having had to superintend the embarkation of the whole of the returning Army for England. We have made every inquiry, and we find that far from being fortunate, Captain Foote is rather unfortunate, for seeing the liberality with which Brevets were granted, he has a right to consider himself aggrieved in not having been given a Brevet Majority, as well as a "decoration."

A valued correspondent writes:—"Of the 175 Gentlemen Cadets whose names appeared in the Royal Military College List for May 1, 1853, I am able to give this brief account:—

(a) Still serving full or half-pay	34
(b) Retired in various ways	88
(c) Deceased	34
(d) Not accounted for	19
	175

(a) 1 Major-General, 16 Colonels, 14 Lieutenant-Colonels, and 3 Majors.

(b) 2 Major-Generals, 6 Colonels, 7 Lieutenant-Colonels, 7 Majors, 49 Captains, and 17 Lieutenants; of these (88), 4 are since deceased.

(c) Killed in action or died of wounds, 7; died in the service, 26; died young, 1; total, 34.

(d) Obtained commissions, but retired or died prior to June, 1857, 10; ditto, in 1857-58, 4; did not get commissions, 5; total, 19.

Thus it would appear that 169 of these 175 Gentlemen Cadets entered the service, and I make out that 8 served in Cavalry, 5 in Foot Guards, 2 in Rifle Brigade, 1 in 60th Rifles, 10 in Highlanders, and the remainder in other Line regiments. These gentlemen have been well represented in all the campaigns and little wars, &c., of the past thirty years. I find 83 served in the Crimea, 41 during the Indian Mutiny, 5 in China, 8 in New Zealand, 1 each Abyssinia, Ashantee, and Afghanistan, 3 in Zululand, 5 on Indian Frontier, and 2 in the late Egyptian War, in which 3 have been wounded twice, and 13 once. There are 6 C.B.'s, 1 C.S.I., 1 V.C., 3 Knights of the Legion of Honour, 2 have the Medjidie (3rd class), and 11 Medjidie (5th class); 3 wear the Sardinian medal, and 2 have been decorated by the Royal Humane Society; 1 is an A.D.C. to the Queen, 7 have passed the Staff College, and several are now holding Staff appointments."

By the death of Sir Hugh Clifford, and the retirement of Major-General C. Tower, the list of Cavalry and Infantry Major-Generals is reduced to 72, the establishment being 65. So that there are only seven officers to be disposed of, but there are some promotions pending, and these will increase the list again. However, the list is being brought down by degrees to its normal proportion.

The Army was sacrificed two years ago, under the Territorial system, in order that the Militia might be levelled up. By this means it was thought that recruiting would undergo a marked improvement. We wonder if the reformers are satisfied with the results. If they are, nobody else is. There has been a gradual falling-off in the number of men obtained ever since the Territorial system came into operation. If the present unsatisfactory state of affairs continues, as a Militia commanding officer tells us he firmly believes it will, what will the reformers say? Our correspondent contends that though popular with the officers, the new system is very unpopular with the men. He has himself visited his recruiting-parties, and finds the classes supplying the bulk of the Militia recruits—at, least, in his district—much preferred the old system. "From all I see," he says, "I am sure a mistake has been made, and that instead of improving, the tendency of the late measure will be, in the long run, to remove the old constitutional force from off the face of the earth."

A General Officer protests, and not without reason, against the proposal to give General Sir Arthur Borton an extension of his term of appointment as Governor of Malta. General Borton's five years expire on June 8, and our correspondent contends that he ought to vacate then, as "by allowing him to hold on, the military authorities would be closing the door to other officers with equally strong claims to employment, who might be hit by the five years' unemployed rule, and forced to leave the service before the time." So long as the five years' rule exists, no officer ought, in our opinion, to be given an extension of service in any appointment, for though it may appear little in itself, it may mean professional ruin to others.

Up to the present time, we have looked in vain for any recognition of the services of Captain Irwin, 20th Bengal N.I., who acted as Provost-Marshal of the Indian Contingent in Egypt. Captain Irwin performed all the duties of the appointment throughout the Campaign, and got nothing, although Major Marsh, 18th Bengal Cavalry, who was to have acted, but did not, was decorated with the 4th Class of the Osmanieh, on the recommendation of Lord Wolseley. As there was evidently a mistake committed, it would be well for it to be rectified at once, as rewards given in this haphazard manner lose all their value.

We are glad to learn that negotiations are pending between the War Office and the India Office as to the present regulations as regards retirement of senior officers of the Imperial and Indian Artillery, and that the anomaly of which the Imperial officers have complained is likely shortly to be removed.

The Navy.

ADMIRALTY, April 13, 1883.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of April 30, 1877, Chief Engineer James Duffield has been placed on the Retired List of his rank from March 19, 1883; Engineer William Childs Archbold has been placed on the Retired List of his rank from the 10th inst.

ADMIRALTY, April 14, 1883.

Staff Commander Thomas Pounds has been promoted to the rank of Staff Captain in her Majesty's Fleet, with seniority of April 13, 1883.

ADMIRALTY, April 16, 1883.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of April 1, 1881, Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets Thomas Colan, M.D., has been placed on the Retired List from the 14th inst.

ADMIRALTY, April 18, 1883.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of July 21, 1876, the under-mentioned Retired Officers, having attained fifteen years' seniority as Commanders, have been authorised to assume the rank and title of Retired Captain from the 16th inst., viz.:—Commanders Robert Hepburn Swinton, John Fitzmaurice Lenon, and Arthur Cowburn.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Orders in Council of February 22, 1870, and April 30, 1877, Chief Engineer Edward Ingledew has this day been placed on the Retired List of his rank.

Navigating Lieutenant—Francis Roberts, to the Satellite.

Staff Surgeon—John C. B. Maclean, to the Satellite.

Chief Engineers—Gustave A. C. Bencke, to the Asia, additional, for service in the Volcano; John Swanson, to the Satellite; Edward T. Read, to the Indus, for Iron Duke.

Paymasters—Russell Osborn, to the Satellite, when commissioned; Thomas Bradbridge, to the Hector, additional, for Coastguard service on shore, vice Horniman, dated May 1, 1883; Charles G. Johnston, to the St. Vincent, vice Osborn.

Assistant-Paymasters—Rice H. Harris, to the Bullfrog, in charge; Joseph Green, to the Excellent, vice Harris; Edward W. Keey, to the Agincourt, as Secretary's Clerk.

Engineers—William Siddorn, to the Penelope, for Cherub, vice Stewart; John T. Dominy, to the Indus, for Tay; George H. Baker, to the Indus, for Prince Albert, vice Ford; Francis Ford, to the Indus, additional, vice Baker; Robert Harding, to the Asia, additional, vice Robins; John J. Robins, to the Hecla, vice Harding.

Gunners—George W. Spry, to the Satellite; James Trehern, to the Excellent, for Kite; Joseph Sanders, to the Excellent, for Mastiff.

Boatswains—Richard Cumner, to the Satellite; Thomas Bresnahan, to the Hercules, vice Bray; William H. Budd, to the Duke of Wellington, vice Chatel; Frank Chatel, to the Jumna, vice Budd; William Stanlake, to the Urgent, for Jamaica Yard, vice Ryan.

COASTGUARD.

Commissioned Boatmen—Henry Wright, St. Alban's Head, to be chief boatman, Cross, for Hallsands detachment; George Thompson, Portland, to be chief boatman, St. Mary's, vice John Bartlett, chief boatman, to be transferred to St. Agnes, in vacancy caused by the invaliding of Robert Thomas; Richard Spilman, Seaview, to be chief boatman, Southsea Castle.

RETIREMENT.

Chief Engineer—Edward Ingledew, at his own request.

ALEXANDRA, Capt. H. H. Rawson. C.B., flagship of Vice-Admiral Lord John Hay, Commander-in-Chief in the Mediterranean, was at Malta up to April 9. The Superb and the Carysfort were to leave on April 9 on a cruise to Syracuse and Corfu, would arrive at Syracuse about April 14, and leave on the 18th, and would be due at Corfu about April 24, returning to Malta by May 2. The Invincible would sail on April 9 for Alexandria, to relieve the Orion, which ship would then come to Malta, to pay off. The Beacon would leave on April 16 for Algiers and Gibraltar. The Decoy would leave Malta on April 11 for Sfax, Susa, Hammamat, and Tunis, remaining at Tunis a week, and then returning to Malta. The Iris left Malta for Port Said on April 7.

ASSISTANCE, Capt. St. Clair, has arrived at Portsmouth from Dover, having completed exchanges of garrison between Queenstown, Devonport, Dover, and the Channel Islands. The Assistance will leave on Monday for Queenstown.

BRITANNIA, Capt. Richard Wells. The petty officers and serjeants, R.M., entertained at dinner, on Saturday last, Mr. W. Ward, master-at-arms, to show their appreciation of him as a shipmate and comrade, on his being pensioned from her Majesty's Navy. The dinner was served in an excellent style at Emmett's Hotel, the proprietor having been formerly ship's steward of the Britannia. In the absence of Mr. Baldwin, master-at-arms (for duty with cadets), through indisposition, the chair was taken by Mr. G. Wills, writer, first-class. Colour-Serjt. A. Cox, commanding the detachment of Marines, occupied the vice-chair. After the cloth was removed, the chairman gave the following toasts, which were all drunk with enthusiasm:—"The Queen," "The Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, and the Rest of the Royal Family," "The Captain and Officers of the Ship," and "The Guest," who, in responding, referred to the hearty reception he had received that evening. As a rule, a master-at-arms had not many friends. His duties at times were irksome and unpleasant, but in his case he had been well supported by his comrades, and all had worked together harmoniously, and had kept within the bounds of discipline. Mr. Ward referred to each department—executive, mechanical, clerical, and medical—and heartily thanked them for their great assistance to him in his duties. After several other remarks, Mr. Ward resumed his seat, amidst applause. Some excellent recitations and songs were given, Colour-Serjt. Cox presiding at the piano.

CHAMPION, Capt. Russell G. S. Pasley, was at Singapore on March 19; was to leave on March 26, and would return by April 2.

COCKCHAFER, Lieut. and Com. Henry W. Hill, arrived at Aden on April 20, and will leave on May 1 for Singapore.

DRAGON, Com. Bolitho, on passage to Madagascar to watch the French, has been detained at Aden by the Political Resident, owing to an Arab insurrection in the neighbourhood. Ships are wanted at Madagascar, and this should be seen to.

ESPOIR, Lieut.-Com. E. H. Gamble, arrived at Jeddah on March 31, and was to leave on April 2 for Aden and the China station.

FLY, Com. John Hope, was to leave Singapore for Johore on March 22, returning about March 26. On return of Champion she would leave for Borneo.

FOXHOUND, Lieut.-Com. J. McQuhae, was under orders to be at Malacca on March 26; was about to leave for Singapore on March 19. She would remain a fortnight at Malacca.

NORTHAMPTON, Capt. Digby, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir John Commerell, V.C., Commander-in-Chief on the North America and West Indies station, was at Bermuda up to March 29; left St. Thomas on March 25; called at Virgin Gorda and Peter Island, and arrived at Bermuda on March 20. The Northampton was about to be docked and refitted. The Tenedos, Garnet, Fantôme, and Griffon were at Bermuda. The Tenedos would proceed to the coast of Newfoundland as senior officer's ship. The Garnet arrived on March 25, and is to be docked. The Fantôme arrived on March 27, and is to pay off and recommission on the arrival of the Humber. The Griffon was in dock, refitting. The Dido was at Barbadoes as senior officer's ship. The Flamingo was on the Jamaica Division. The Foam, on the Jamaica Division, when relieved by the Mallard will proceed to Bermuda, to refit for service on the coast of Newfoundland. The Mallard left Bermuda on March 12 for Jamaica, to relieve the Foam.

TENEDOS, Capt. Charles D. Fane, arrived at Newport, U.S.A., on April 14, having on board H.R.H. the Princess Louise, Marchioness of Lorne, who has derived great benefit from her stay at Bermuda during the winter. Her Royal Highness landed, and travelled by railway to Boston, where the Marquis of Lorne awaited her. The Tenedos sailed for Halifax and the Newfoundland coast.

THALIA, Capt. Brackenbury, C.M.G., arrived at Singapore on April 18; will leave on April 20 for Colombo.

THETIS, Capt. A. C. Curtis, was at Coquimbo on March 4. On being relieved by the Constance was to proceed to England, viâ Valparaiso, Sandy Point, Falkland Islands, Monte Video, St. Vincent, and Madeira, to Plymouth.

VALOROUS, Capt. W. Stewart, bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral Lethbridge, left Plymouth on Friday for Queenstown.

NAVAL NOTES.

The contracts for the machinery of the Mersey and Severn, building at Chatham, and of the Howe and Rodney, the former building at Pembroke, and the latter at Chatham, have been assigned by the Admiralty to Messrs. Humphrys and Tennant, of Deptford. The latter ships will have the forced draught introduced. The whole of the vessels will be propelled by twin-screws.

Orders have been received at Portsmouth for the Dwarf to be commissioned early in June as a training-ship for the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers. She will be attached to the Duke of Wellington.

The funeral of Col. Maskery, late commandant of the Royal Marines, took place at Walmer on Wednesday. The whole of the depôt, some 1,500 officers and men, followed the deceased to the grave, and there were also present Major-Gen. Newdigate, C.B., Col. Knight (A.Q.M.G.), and officers from all regiments in Dover, together with Gen. Adair and several officers from Chatham.

The Admiralty nominated on Saturday an important committee, representing all departments of the Navy, to revise existing regulations applying both to the Fleet and the Royal Dockyards, with respect to articles of an inflammable or explosive nature, the committee being entrusted to define precautionary measures which scientific knowledge and modern experience have rendered desirable. Its members are:—Captain Eardley Wilmot, on behalf of the Director of Naval Ordnance; Paymaster-in-Chief Fagen, barrister-at-law; Chief Engineer M'Intyre, representing the Director of Naval Construction; Mr. Wootton, for the Director of Stores; Mr. Michod, as delegate of the Director of the Victualling Department; and Mr. W. Weston, Admiralty chemist.

A Naval pension of £50 per annum has just fallen vacant, by the death, in his 80th year, of Capt. D. Craigie, C.B., R.N. The deceased veteran had seen much active service, having been engaged in the operations in New Zealand in 1845, and in the Crimean War. He was nominated a Companion of the Bath on June 2, 1869, and was awarded the Naval pension in December of the same year.

The debate on the Naval Estimates was concluded on April 14, in the Italian Chamber of Deputies. A speech was delivered by Signor Depretis, President of the Council, who proclaimed the solidarity of the Cabinet with Admiral Acton, all the Ministers claiming to share responsibility for the acts of his administration. He added that all that was possible would be done to accelerate the preparation of the Fleet, and that the surplus revenue would be devoted to that purpose; but the Government could not accept Signor Finzi's proposal to postpone the promised abolition of the grist tax until 1890. A vote of confidence, moved by Signor del Vecchio, was then adopted by 168 to 53. There were 51 abstentions. Almost all the members of the Right voted with the Cabinet. The Italian journals state that, notwithstanding the vote of confidence, Admiral Acton, the Minister of Marine, will probably tender his resignation, the vote being regarded as exclusively supporting Signor Depretis, the Premier.

The members of the Royal Naval Club of 1765 dined together at Willis's Rooms on Tuesday evening, to commemorate Lord Rodney's action, April 12, 1782. Rear-Admiral Richard Mayne, C.B., was president, and there were present Admiral Sir Edward Sotheby, K.C.B., Vice-Admiral H. Boys, C.B., Vice-Admiral Hon. Francis Egerton, Rear-Admirals J. C. Soady, Dent, Fenwick, Watson, C.B.; Captains Robert Pitman, C. D. Lucas, C. D. Inglis, Henry Crozier, W. England, Horatio Nelson, Bedford Pim, Richard Hammond, Hugh Davis, Fraser Durrant, Fairman, P. Hart Dyke, Richard Bateman, and Hon. R. Hare; Coms. E. Royse, Orme Webb, Stuart Rickman, Eardley Wilmot, Thompson, and Noel C. Hoare; and Mr. H. J. Kelly, R.N., Secretary.

At the Royal United Service Institution on Friday night, Admiral Luard, C.B., in the chair, a paper, by Lieut. R. S. Lowry, R.N., entitled, "Coaling Ships or Squadrons on the Open Sea," was read before an influential meeting. Gen. Lowry read the paper, in the absence of its author (the gallant General's son), who is serving on the Pacific coast. The writer, at the commencement, hoped that other hands would be induced to take up this subject. It was one of vast importance, and demanded full consideration in every detail before the outbreak of a naval war. Few would deny that the mobility of our ships and squadrons, their usefulness, and their "staying powers," would be vastly increased, if some effective plan were found for coaling at sea. The author thought he would be within the mark in stating that, during the blockade of Charleston by the Federal Fleet, nearly one-quarter of that force was always absent from the port employed, in filling their coal-bunkers. In the North Atlantic, this would be impossible. Any satisfactory means of coaling at sea ought apparently, the author of the paper remarked, to satisfy the following conditions as to rapidity and safety:—Nothing short of twenty tons per hour for an ironclad if hoisting overall, or forty tons if she has several ports that can be worked for coaling, or fifteen tons in a small vessel, ought to be considered a satisfactory solution. The coaling must be capable of being carried out in any breeze in which ships' boats not heavily laden could carry working parties to and fro with facility. The boats or "coal-carriers" employed must be safe from sinking, even if accidentally filled or injured in transit. If any form of pneumatic or other tube be used as a coal-shoot between the ships, it must allow of the craft being at least twenty yards apart, if steaming through the water, or 100 yards if both are stopped. The coal must be kept dry, to avoid danger from spontaneous combustion and deterioration while in the bunkers. On the motion of the chairman, a vote of thanks was accorded the author of the paper, and a similar acknowledgment was passed to Gen. Lowry.

The committee, of which Sir Thomas Brassey was chairman, have presented their report to the Admiralty on the reorganisation of the Constructive Department of the Admiralty and of the Royal Dockyards. The report is now under consideration, and many alterations, it is understood, have been made in it. So far as the Constructive Department is concerned, the suggested modifications will secure a material reduction in the annual cost, but it is very doubtful whether increased efficiency will be obtained. Circumstances have played into the hands of the committee. The acceptance by Mr. W. H. White of the management of Sir William Armstrong's engineering and shipbuilding works on the Tyne, and the death of Mr. John Oliver, have placed a chief constructorship and the office of Engineer Inspector at the disposal of the Board. Under the new scheme, it is not proposed to fill up either of the places. It is also proposed to abolish the surveyorship of dockyards, now held by Mr. Barnes, Chief Constructor, and the position of Engineer Assistant to the Surveyor of Dockyards, now held by Mr. J. Bannister, the duties being distributed among the remaining officers of the department. Mr. Barnes will take up his position as senior Chief Constructor, and perform the duties of Mr. White; while Mr. Barnaby, the Director of Naval Construction, and Mr. G. H. Stainer, Constructor, will, in addition to their other duties, execute the periodical surveys of the dockyards. Mr. James Wright, Engineer-in-Chief of the Navy, with the assistance of a subordinate officer (probably Mr. Sennett, of Devonport), will himself undertake the responsibility of inspecting the engineering work of the dockyards, and of superintending the contracts of private firms. To Mr. James Dunn, one of the present assistant-constructors, will be referred the duty of surveying and reporting upon the fitting-out of merchant steamers as ocean cruisers in time of war. It is also contemplated to give the whole of the second and third-class draughtsmen in the constructive department the title of Assistant-Constructors.

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL.—ITS UNEQUALLED EFFICACY IN CASES OF CHRONIC COUGH.—This celebrated Oil has been most extensively and successfully used in the treatment of Chronic Coughs. It effectually corrects the morbid action and deposits of the mucous surfaces of the throat and bronchial tubes, and speedily allays the irritation which produces frequent and prolonged coughing. Dr. Hunter Semple, Physician to the Hospital for Diseases of the Throat and Chest, writes:—"I have long been aware of the great reputation enjoyed by the Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil introduced into medical practice by Dr. de Jongh, and have recommended it with the utmost confidence. I have no hesitation in stating my opinion that it possesses all the qualities of a good and efficient medicine. Its taste is by no means disagreeable, and might even be called pleasant. I can fully believe that, from its richness in chemical principles, it is superior in efficacy to many, or perhaps all, of the pale-coloured Oils. I have found Dr. de Jongh's Oil very useful in cases of Chronic Cough, and especially in Laryngeal Disease complicated with Consumption." Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil is sold only in capsuled imperial half-pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s; with his stamp and signature and the signature of his sole Consignees on the capsule and the label under wrapper, by all Chemists. Sole Consignees, Ansar, Harford, and Co., 77 Strand, London.

SIR,—About twelve months ago, viz., on April 15, 1882, you published a letter of mine on the above burning subject. Since that time events have taken place which have materially helped to expose some of the weak places in our present system. Many letters and papers have also been written, and everything appears to foreshadow alterations of such a nature as will give a death-blow to the feelings of many a worthy soldier. Before, however, our present regimental system is finally doomed, I should like once more to appeal to our noble Secretary of State for War, in order that he may pause awhile, and bring his firm and clear mind to bear upon the subject. His lordship on the 11th inst., at Shorncliffe, alluded to the connection that once existed between his family and the "Black Horse." That reference would have lost its point, if the amalgamation of regiments had been carried out. The deficiencies lately shown both in seasoned men and horses, more especially in the latter, of course render it necessary that something should be done; but I can see no reason whatever why it is imagined matters will be improved by merely joining regiments, so that they would number 14 instead of 28. The logical result to the service in any way is the same, whenever horses are borrowed from one body of men and handed over to another. I would propose that the present regiments, including the Household, should be formed into brigades, with a certain fixed number of depôts (whether five or ten would not be material) and that all men and horses should be trained at such depôts. The main point I should like to insist upon is the absolute necessity of every man and every horse retained at the regimental head-quarters being fit to go anywhere and do anything. To carry this out properly, it will be necessary to give commanding officers much greater powers, so as to enable them to get rid of sick, vicious, and otherwise worthless horses. Considering the annual cost of each animal, it does seem the height of absurdity that so many useless brutes should be retained. The arrangement of a certain number of fixed depôts, besides facilitating the purchase of remounts, would enable the authorities to keep up the training of cavalry reserves, a point that up to the present seems to have been entirely lost sight of. With reference to this matter, I have to suggest that each reserve cavalryman should be called up for a certain number of days annually, and that he should have the option of attending at whatever depôt was most convenient to himself. This would be much more satisfactory than tacking them, as some have proposed, on to the Yeomanry for eight days. As to our Auxiliary Cavalry, we hear it rumoured that it is intended to hold another inquiry, and it is to be presumed that it will have the same result as its predecessor. Within my experience of nearly a quarter of a century, I must decidedly affirm that every alteration hitherto made has resulted in a reduction in numbers. Lord Cardwell, for instance, disbanded all regiments of Yeomanry with less than four troops, without even giving them the option of amalgamation with regiments in adjoining counties. He, at the same time (with one exception), reduced all regiments having more than eight troops. Parliament, forsooth, was told there would be a corresponding improvement in efficiency. There are, at the present time, troops which cover districts of over seventy square miles of ground. In such a case, may I ask what chance of greater efficiency there would be if a troop was reduced and the best men transferred to another? The men would simply be lost altogether. What the War Office have yet to learn is that the unit in the Yeomanry is the troop, and if it should be considered desirable to increase it in number it will be necessary to allow gentlemen with county influence to raise separate troops. Four, six, or eight of such troops could easily be trained together, and formed into an administrative regiment. I believe, however, that jealous feeling on the part of certain Lord-Lieutenants sometimes prevents this being done. At present, the great obstacle to recruiting is expense. The cost per man for quarters, stabling, and forage is about a guinea per diem, whilst the Government pay is 7s. per diem. Members in addition are required to attend three preliminary drills, each of which entails the loss of a day, and for which nothing whatever is paid. It may be said that there must be great extravagance when men pay such sums for two meals, bed, stabling, and forage; but the answer is that the Yeomanry are quite helpless in the matter. Nothing but the granting of billets by the Quartermaster-General's Department will put a stop to the fearful charges of the hotel proprietors. One more small matter, and I have done, and to this subject I beg to call the attention of Mr. Childers. Some of the railway companies, notably the London and North-Western, will only convey Yeomanry troop horses at the ordinary rate. Others, I am thankful to say, charge the same rate (3d. per mile) as for Line cavalry.—I am, &c.,

F. W. T.

A banquet was given on Monday evening by the officers of the Royal Marines to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, to commemorate the appointment of his Royal Highness as Honorary Colonel of the corps. The Prince of Wales, the Duke of Connaught, and the Duke of Cambridge were present. The Earl of Northbrook (the First Lord of the Admiralty) was the only guest invited to meet their Royal Highnesses. Covers were laid for 250. The combined string bands of the several head-quarters of the Royal Marines played during the evening. General George A. Schomberg, C.B., was in the chair, and was supported by all the officers of the Marine Forces who were not prevented from attending owing to their duties at their stations, or who from other unavoidable causes were unable to be present.

"SAPO CARBONIS DETERGENS" is a physician's name for a remedy prescribed for the past quarter of a century for every variety of skin disease. The public have found that as a preventive of small-pox, scarlet fever, and measles, it is unequalled. See that the Latin name described above, and the words "WRIGHT, SOUTHWARK," are on each wrapper, and branded on each tablet, without which none is genuine.

ARMY NOTES.

A correspondent calls attention to his hard case. He says:—"I held the position of a regimental serjt.-major for a period of about six years, viz., from 1873 to 1879. During the first year, I was awarded the good-conduct medal of £5. I became, however, entitled to something more as a sequence to this award, under the provisions of a Horse-Guards order promulgated in the Divisional Orders at Aldershot, on Feb. 7, 1876, from which I quote an extract:—'Serjeants and corporals who have been awarded medals under the old regulations with partial gratuity, or the medal without gratuity, will receive or have the gratuity already awarded made up to £15 and £10, as the case may be, provided that when recommended for the distinction they had qualified for a serjeant or corporal's full gratuity. Privates awarded medals without gratuity will be allowed £5 each. This was, indeed, good news for an old soldier, and whilst I was still serving I had the pleasure of seeing several of my fellow non-commissioned officers leaving the corps, and receiving their additional gratuity money. From the fact of my being in the same category, I anticipated and realised the prospect that when my turn came to leave the service, I would also have the good-luck to be similarly treated. But, alas! I was sadly disappointed. Shortly after my discharge, in the early part of 1879, after 24 years' service at home and abroad, I submitted my claim for the extra-gratuity money to the War Office. I was, however, informed in due course that there were no funds available; and although I have subsequently repeated my application, the reply was always in the negative."

We often hear complaints of the frequent alterations that are made in the dress of the officers of the Army, and of the many new forms and varieties of uniform that are introduced. An officer in India must now keep his red patrol coat and black trousers for cold-weather parades; his blue patrol for duties other than those of parade; his karkee for general wear, and his brown-leather belts to wear with it; his white uniform as a mess dress for hot weather; his shell jacket and waistcoat for mess in the rains and cold; his long black boots and his long brown boots, and his white helmet, and his helmet with a karkee cover.

The London correspondent of the Western Daily Mercury says:—"The War Office has determined to try the experiment of forming a corps of mounted infantry. It is probable that when the autumn manœuvres commence at Aldershot in August, a body of about fifty men, selected from different Line regiments, will be mounted, and brought into the field. At present the prevalent idea is to have a small force attached to each brigade of infantry, but as yet the Military authories have not determined upon any definite plans, beyond the advisability of forming the corps."

The Times says:—"Col. C. J. East, half-pay, late 41st Foot, Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen., and head of the Intelligence Department at the Horse Guards, has been offered and accepted a brigade command in Bengal. Col. East served with distinction in the Crimea and in the Mutiny, where he was severely wounded, in the Looshai expedition (brevet majority), and in the Zulu war (brevet colonelcy)."

It has been proposed to assimilate the system of providing farriers and shoeing-smiths for British Cavalry regiments in India with that which now obtains at home—viz., one of each grade per troop, without increasing the cost of the artificer establishment as at present authorised, and without altogether abolishing the native farriers and nalbunds, who are found to be very useful at times.

The funeral of Major-Gen. Sir H. H. Clifford, V.C., K.C.M.G., C.B., took place on Wednesday at Ugbrooke Roman Catholic Chapel, near Chudleigh. The Bishop of Clifton officiated, assisted by the Rev. Walter Clifford, of Bristol. The coffin was covered with a profusion of wreaths and crosses, including two from the Empress Eugénie and Lord Wolseley, the latter being conveyed by Qrmr.-Gen. Sir Arthur Herbert, K.C.B.

The Indian Daily News says:—"The Times of India places the Government of India under an obligation, when it advocates the claim of Col. Lucie Smith to a recognition of his great services." The News summarises the list of Col. Smith's services, and adds:—"We are glad our contemporary has brought his case forward, and we trust the Government of India will not allow a man to whom India is under such great obligation to remain unacknowledged."

Sir A. Hayter, in reply to Lord E. Cecil, stated on Tuesday that on April 1 last the total number of First-class Army Reserve men, exclusive of those still serving with the colours, was 27,073. There were 978 Reserve men with the colours, but they were practically all on furlough.

It has been notified that, except in the very exceptional case of an officer required to fill a special appointment, 25 years shall be the maximum age for candidates for the Indian S.C. from regiments serving in India. This rule will not be applied to officers now in the country, until the expiration of a period of two years from the date of the order.

The Times correspondent writes from Paris:—"People seem to have been puzzled at the German Emperor's presentation to the Prince of Wales of regimental epaulets bearing the insignia of a Prussian Field-Marshal. A letter from Berlin which has been communicated to me says:—'It is customary in the Prussian Army that the insignia on the epaulets of a foreign Prince nominated chief of a Prussian regiment should be those of the rank which he holds in the army of his own country. The Prince has not, however, been named a Prussian Field-Marshal, and has therefore the right to wear only the uniform of the regiment of Hussars of which he is chief, but not the regular uniform of a Prussian General, with the insignia of a Field-Marshal. In the Army List he is not mentioned among the Field-Marshals, but only at the head of the list of the officers of his regiment, as its chief. There is no analogy between his case and that of the Duke of Wellington, who was appointed a regular Prussian field-marshal. The Prussian princes and other general officers who are chiefs of regiments wear also, as a rule, when they put on the uniforms of their regiments, the epaulets of a Prussian general officer, with the insignia of their respective rank, from that of field-marshal or colonel-general of horse to that of simple general.'"

The Allahabad Pioneer learns that "the Government of India have under consideration a proposal to establish a school of musketry like that of Hythe, in some central station in India."

Another illustration has been afforded of the rapidity with which Governments do their work. The 2nd Belooch Regiment has just received the bronze star for the Cabul-Kandahar march. It is only two years since the rolls were submitted.

Sir H. Fletcher asked the Secretary of State for War on Monday whether the Committee appointed to inquire into matters connected with the Royal Hospitals of Chelsea and Kilmainham had sent in their report; and, if so, whether it would be laid upon the table of the House. The Marquis of Hartington, in reply, said:—"I have received the Committee's report, but I have not yet had time to consider its recommendations and the representations made to me by the governing bodies of the various institutions affected. I hope shortly to do so, and then the report will be presented to Parliament."

The experiments in embarking batteries of artillery on the railway, which were ably carried out at Meean Meer some years ago, are to be resumed next cold season, at Rawul Pindee.

"A Starved Gosling" writes:—"May I trespass on your valuable space to ask one question? If the Government can afford to grant Lord Wolseley and Lord Alcester £2,000 a year, why do they plead 'want of funds' when asked to give just compensation to Purchase officers, by returning their regulation money? There is a good old proverb,—'What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.' How is it, that in this case a superabundant supply of sauce is poured upon the already fat goose, whilst the poor gander is compelled not only to go 'sauceless,' but is deprived of his own rightful gravy?"

We (Lahore paper) hear from London that the case of a colonel who entered the Staff Corps from a Line regiment in 1868 has been referred to the India Office by the Indian Government, in view of his being retired on colonel's allowances—with other officers similarly situated—after 38 years' service. The officer in question had 38 years' service last month; but though our correspondent informs us that orders were sent out for his retirement, his name has not yet appeared in the Gazette. It appears that a list of officers who joined the Staff Corps from the Line, between Sept. 13, 1866, and June 30, 1881, is to be prepared; and that colonel's allowances will be given to one in 30, this proportion being preserved, no more than 20 of these colonels, that is, being given the pension at one time. Under existing rules, these colonels are entitled to £750 a year after 38 years' service; and are only liable to compulsory retirement after 55, 58, or 59 years of age, according to the date of entering Staff Corps and the date of lieutenant-colonelcy. One of this class of officers, therefore, can be well over 38 years' service, as in the case of the above colonel, before being compulsorily retired. It was, indeed, time that such an undesirable arrangement should be changed.

Serjt.-Major J. Power, 1st-class staff clerk in the District Office, Chatham, has been awarded an annuity of £15. This non-commissioned officer (who is now employed as garrison librarian, and superintendent of the Soldiers' Institute, Chatham) served with the 15th Regt. from Jan. 1845, and embarked that year with the regiment for Ceylon. He took part in the suppression of the Kandian rebellion of 1848-49, when the pretended King was captured. In 1855 he returned with the head-quarters of his regiment to Ireland, where the 15th and 96th were the only infantry regiments stationed during that year and the early part of 1856. Serjt.-Major Power rendered much valuable service in the various staff offices of the districts in which his regiment was stationed during that period. He again embarked for Gibraltar with the head-quarters in 1856, and on his arrival was appointed military clerk to the 1st Brigade, under the late Sir R. Garrett, then commanding. On the amalgamation of the infantry brigades at that station, he was ordered to perform the duties of staff clerk to the consolidated force of seven regiments, then commanded by the present Gen. Rumley, which post he held for upwards of nine years, to the entire satisfaction of the General and other Staff officers under whom he served. Subsequently, the late Major-Gen. Sir R. Walpole had him transferred to the District Office at Chatham as chief clerk, which post he creditably held for nearly 17 years. He retired in 1881, in consequence of failing health. In September of last year, Major-Gen. the Hon. R. Monck, commanding at Chatham, in recognition of his past services appointed him to his present post.

The following decision by the Secretary of State for India has been published in General Orders for the information of those concerned:—British officers on the Indian Establishment, who proceeded from India to Egypt, and who, while in India, were not in receipt of horse allowance, shall, if required to perform mounted duty in Egypt, be permitted to receive the allowance of £50 sanctioned by the Royal Warrant of July 28, 1882; and British officers who were in receipt of horse allowance in India, and took their horses to Egypt, shall continue to receive that allowance while in Egyt, less the value of any forage, &c., supplied them."

The directors of the New York Life Insurance Company have issued their report, which will be found in full in our advertisement columns. From this it appears that 12,178 new policies have been issued, insuring £8,503,193. The accumulated fund on Jan. 1, 1883, was £10,414,281, having increased £724,376 during the year. The income for the year was £2,365,050; the interest received was £568,574, being £166,251 in excess of the amount paid for death claims; the cash bonuses paid to policy-holders amounted to £501,417; the surplus over all liabilities to £2,072,817.

Obituary.

Rear-Admiral H. W. Hire, C.B., died at Maidenhead on April 13. He entered the Royal Navy in 1830, and had seen much active service; was mentioned in despatches, promoted, and awarded the Crimean and Turkish medals. Subsequently he served with distinction in the China War of 1860. He attained the rank of rear-admiral on the Retired List on March 9, 1878.

Lieut.-Gen. A. Browne, C.B., who died last week in Dublin, was the son of the late Mr. A. Browne, of Moyville, county Galway, and was born in 1820. In 1841, he entered the Army as an ensign in the 28th Foot, in which corps he attained the rank of capt. in 1846, and served with it for some years in the Bombay Presidency. In Oct., 1846, he was transferred to the 44th, being attached to the reserve battalion, then doing duty at Malta. From Malta, he was despatched with his regiment to the East, and took part in the Crimean Campaign of 1854-5, being present at the battle of the Alma and siege of Sebastopol. While on duty in the trenches at Sebastopol, he was so severely wounded by a shell from a Russian fort, that it became necessary to amputate his right arm and part of his left hand. The medical officer who dressed his wounds in the Crimea, Surg.-Gen. Gilborne, was one of the pall-bearers at his funeral. For his services, Capt. Browne received the Crimean medal with two clasps, the Legion of Honour, the 5th Class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal, besides being promoted to a brevet majority. He attained the rank of major in 1855, and was gazetted to a brevet colonelcy in 1856, in which year the 44th Foot returned from the Crimea. In 1857 the regiment embarked for India, and in 1860 formed part of the expeditionary force to China, the deceased being present at the action of Sinho, the taking of Tangku, and the capture of the Taku forts (mentioned in despatches, medal and clasp). He was gazetted to a Companionship of the Bath in 1861. In 1863 he became brevet col. in the Army, and was placed on half-pay in 1871. In Oct., 1877, he was promoted to the rank of major-gen.

Major F. H. P. Gordon Cumming, Bombay S.C., of the 1st Bombay N.I. (Grenadiers), died at Lippert's Hotel, Madras, last month. The deceased had obtained leave, preparatory to retiring from the service. He had only recently returned to military duty, having been for over twenty years in the Mysore Commission. In him the Bombay Army loses a good soldier, and one of the best and most daring sportsmen that ever came to India.

of Dr. Thorburn, who, it is plain, has been most cruelly treated, and ought to be set right. We feel sure that his Royal' Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief will cause this case to be looked into, for after the reply of Lord Morley on Tuesday, the impression will largely prevail that there has been a miscarriage of justice. The noble Lord's explanation is so palpably weak that it shows at once that the home authorities have acted with a want of judgment in their desire, may be, to screen the Indian officials. Lord Truro deserves the thanks of the service for having espoused the cause of one who, but for his advocacy, would have laboured for the rest of his days under a stigma which might have entirely ruined him in his future professional career. In the interests of the service, we would strongly recommend that Dr. Thorburn should be granted the court-martial which he has repeatedly demanded, for it cannot be well to allow matters to stand as they do at present. For ourselves, we simply take up the case on broad grounds. So long as the authorities refuse to accede to the Doctor's request, they will naturally have the weight of public opinion against them.

REPORTS of experiments on armour-plates, which took place near Copenhagen in the middle of last month, have appeared in most of our foreign contemporaries, and as these appeared to us to be highly coloured in favour of steel plates supplied by the Creusot Works, we deemed it advisable to make inquiries, before in any way commenting on the experiments, and now find that our surmises were correct. A correspondent in Copenhagen, who witnessed the results of the firing, and saw the plates after the conclusion of the trials, supplies the following authentic details, of great interest at this moment, when, from the reports published abroad, most people have been led to infer that after the last shot had been fired, the French steel plates not only kept out the projectiles, but that these plates had remained intact on the target; while the other competing plates, viz., the compound plates delivered by Messrs. Cammell and Co., of Sheffield, and the iron plates from the French firm, Marrell, had been destroyed, being pierced through and through and crumbled by the armour-piercing projectiles used at these trials. To our surprise, our correspondent states that when he saw the target directly after the conclusion of the firing, he found that part of the shield which represented the Creusot solid-steel plates 4-in. thick to be a complete wreck, not a piece remaining on the backing large enough to offer another mark for the gun; but that the plates manufactured by the other firms, and especially the compound plates of English make, remained in their places, and still offered protection to the ship. On the same structure, but above the 4-in. plates, were a series of thinner plates about 2 in. thick, three from each of the competing firms. Those sent by Messrs. Cammell were of iron, and not compound. These plates were all fixed at a very low angle to the normal fire of the guns, and the projectiles on striking simply grazed the plates, making indents of about 1 in. to 1½ in. In this case, again, the plates from the Marrell and Cammell Works had undoubtedly the preference over the Creusot plates, showing after the firing no cracks, and comparatively very little buckling; whilst one of the Creusot plates showed buckling in a most extraordinary manner, and another had been cracked through from nearly one end to the other. Notwithstanding such results, it is stated that the Danish Government have given the order for the deck armour of the new ship they intend building to Messrs. Schneider, in whose firm the Chief Engineer of the Danish Navy served for a considerable period. The Danish Admiralty must know what suits their purpose best, but, after perusing the report of our Copenhagen correspondent, it strikes us that the Creusot firm owes its success more to powerful influence than to excellence of manufacture. Under these circumstances, we have instituted further inquiries, and hope to lay the results before our readers, at no very distant date.

It is probably not generally known that the shipbuilding programme for each year is prepared by the Admiralty about sixteen months in advance of the close of the financial year to which it relates, and that it proposes to provide only for work known at the time to be necessary. This somewhat extraordinary statement is made by the Accountant-General of the Navy, on the Dockyard Expense Account for 1881-2. Why the Admiralty programme is made up so long in advance is not stated.

Admiral of the Fleet Sir Thomas Symonds persists in writing to the Press that the French are to have twelve 100-ton guns in ships complete in 1885. As his authority for this statement, Sir Thomas Symonds persists in quoting Sir Thomas Brassey. We have several times pointed out that since Sir Thomas Brassey's work on the Navy was published, the French Government have decided not to arm any ships with 100-ton guns, and that the French Minister of Marine has made an official statement to this effect in the French Chambers fully explaining the reasons which have induced the French Government to confine themselves to ordnance of lesser weight, but of as great penetrating power.

Captain C. H. Hullett, late of the Royal Marine Artillery, contributed in no small degree to the conviviality of the evening at the recent banquet to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh by his musical talent. Captain Hullett was set down in the programme to play "The Lost Chord," the piece being repeated by desire of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, who did Captain Hullett the honour of asking him for a voluntary on the organ, in which was very appropriately introduced "Should old acquaintance."

The Earl of Carnarvon will, on Friday, April 27, ask whether her Majesty's Government can give any assurance that they are taking any measures, with a view to carrying into effect, at an early date, the recommendations of the Royal Commission "for the defence of British possessions and commerce abroad." A question of this kind seems necessary, unless Royal Commissions are to be a farce.

We congratulate Captain Theobald on at last securing the command of a ship, after having been so repeatedly and unaccountably passed over by the Admiralty. We hear that this gallant officer is entirely indebted for the command of the Satellite to his own determined perseverance and boldness of character.

The Opal, detained from proceeding to sea, is the same vessel which obtained such notoriety on her first commission from the same cause,—defects in her machinery. Were the contractors directed to make her defects good at their own expense, or has the Admiralty borne the cost?

From the Dockyard Expense Account, lately presented to Parliament, it appears that of the ironclads building, it is proposed to give the Howe and Rodney four guns of 63 tons each, the Collingwood four 43-ton and six 6-inch, the Colossus and Edinburgh four 43-ton and four 6-inch, the Impérieuse and Warspite, armoured cruisers, four 18-tons and six 6-inch. Of those ships now fitting out, the armament of the Conqueror is to be two 43-ton and four 6-inch, and of Ajax and Agamemnon four 38-tons and two 6-inch.

As we anticipated some months ago, the case of Mrs. Wardell, with regard to the amount of pension awarded to her, has not been allowed to rest without an effort being made in the House of Commons on her behalf. On the 12th inst., Captain Price, R.N., M.P. for Devonport, asked the Secretary to the Admiralty what pension and compassionate allowances had been awarded to the widow and children of the late Captain Wardell, who fell at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir, and whether they were the same as in the case of an officer of similar rank in a Line regiment. The reply was, that besides a gratuity of £409, the pension awarded was at the rate of £80 a year for herself, and £16 a year compassionate allowance for each child; that these were the rates allowed under present regulations, and identical with the rates granted in the case of officers of similar rank in the Navy, and also with those of the Army until 1881, when an amended warrant altered the Army scale of pensions. Also, that the attention of the Admiralty has already been directed to this subject, and the question of rearranging the existing scale is under consideration. The bonus referred to is paid in all cases in accordance with the value of pay and allowances drawn by the deceased officer at the time of his death, and has nothing whatever to do with the rate of pension awarded to the widow. It is admitted that although the rates of pension and compassionate allowances for the Marines were identical with those of the Army until 1881, they have not yet been altered to meet the improved Army scale; but that the question is under consideration. It is to be hoped that no time will be lost in making the regulations for the Marines accord with those of the Army in so important a matter; and not only so, but that they will be made retrospective in Mrs. Wardell's case, as it is unseemly that the widow and children of a captain of Marines should be placed in an inferior monetary position to those of a captain in the Army, whose husbands fell, fighting side by side, on the same field of battle.

Owing to the Czar's Coronation, fewer men-of-war will leave Russia on foreign service this year than customary. Up to the present moment only five vessels have received orders to proceed abroad,—the frigates General Admiral, Kniaz Minin, and Kniaz Pojarsky, and the clippers Razboinik and Opritchnik. Should the frigate Vladimir Monomarchus, launched last autumn, be completed in time, it will also proceed to the Mediterranean before the close of the navigation season.

We regret to have to announce the death of Mr. G. W. Reay-Mackey, late Assistant-Paymaster, R.N., and formerly secretary's clerk to the Admiral Superintendent of Malta Dockyard. After retiring from the service, Mr. Mackey was for some time connected with this journal, and only vacated the post of Naval Editor last August, to assume the management of the Crystal Palace. The care and anxiety which devolved upon him, consequent on the magnitude of the business he then undertook, appear to have intensified the malady owing to which he was invalided out of the service, as on Saturday last he was seized with a sudden attack of illness, from which he never rallied, expiring on Sunday afternoon. The Crystal Palace Company thus lose the services of a most promising and rising manager.

The Parliamentary Secretary of the Admiralty is really too exacting. The answer vouchsafed to Captain Price in the House of Commons, last week, regarding the survey, rejection, and acceptance of the delivery of cloth and serge for the Navy practically verifies the statement made in these columns some weeks back, and the fact of the name of the contractors having been withheld will most assuredly incline all right-minded men to the belief that there was something not quite right in the transaction. The excuse, too, that 999 yards of condemned cloth were accepted to close a transaction and secure a paltry discount of 2½ per cent. will be received by all business men with the contempt it deserves. We regret also to find that Mr. Campbell-Bannerman directly misrepresented what we said, and gave publicity to a statement which is so absolutely contrary to the facts of the case, as they have been laid before us, that we are reluctantly compelled to ask whether Mr. Campbell-Bannerman ever heard of the American yarn of the miraculous catch of 999 salmon, that he should have hit upon so exact a number of yards for his cloth? For the case, as we are informed on most reliable authority, stands thus. The surveying officers condemned 2,000 yards of cloth and 4,000 yards of serge. The Admiralty then ordered the whole delivery to be unpacked and resurveyed, thus necessitating the employment of workmen for at least a fortnight, on labour from which no one but the contractors could by any possibility derive the slightest benefit. The cloth and serge were then resurveyed, the surveying officers confirming their previous report. Then, and not till then, were the surveying officers informed that, as the contractor had offered to make an allowance of 2½ per cent. on the total cost, delivery of the said cloth and serge was to be accepted. We commend these facts to the notice of honourable Members, as we think the transaction one which should assuredly be inquired into, since it is evident that delivery of these condemned stores was only accepted in the interest of the contractor, whose name has been withheld.

The Admiralty do not intend to make the new regulations altering the terms of enlistment retrospective. Seamen and Marines who have engaged under the existing regulations will only have to serve twenty years for a pension; but men enlisting after the new regulations come into force will have to serve twenty-two years before they can claim a pension. We are well pleased at having been the means of eliciting from the Admiralty so distinct an assurance on the subject as was given by their Parliamentary Secretary in the House of Commons on Tuesday, for, when the Navy Estimates were introduced, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman's statement in reference to these changes was so confused that we, among others, were led to believe that the reform was to be partly retrospective, and at once stigmatised it as a breach of faith with the men. We are now assured that this is a mistake, and are content at having elicited the fact.

"Valuable Additions to the British Navy" will, we believe, soon be the heading of an official communication to the Press, if the reports circulating in German Naval circles concerning the steamers Socrates and Diogenes are true. From Berlin we are informed that the English Admiralty have purchased these twin-screw gun-vessels, which were built at Kiel. So far, the career of these vessels has been a remarkable one. They are neither of them very successful specimens of naval architecture, but as a business speculation the Diogenes and Socrates have already achieved an enormous success. The ex-President of Peru, when in Europe, placed the necessary funds for their construction in the hands of a Hamburg firm, with orders to advance portions of the money as the vessels progressed. In this manner the German firm of shipbuilders secured payment in full for their work, and when the last instalment was paid, the German Government seized the vessels, under the impression that they were intended for the belligerent Government of Peru. Some months back they were released, on the builders depositing £25,000 as security that they would be sent to an English port. The contract with Peru was cancelled, and the ships were sold to a Hamburg firm, no doubt at a low price, the cost of construction having been paid by Peru. Since then they have passed into the hands of an English firm, of which the principals have, we hear, found it possible to so work upon the fears of the Government that, it would seem, they have, or are about to become, "valuable additions to the British Navy."

When H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught was in Germany, we hear that the Prussian Minister of Marine had, on one occasion, a long talk with his Royal Highness on the state of the English and French Navies, remarking that he was at a loss to comprehend the apparent wilful disregard by the British Admiralty of the fact that the French Navy was rapidly becoming not only the most numerous, but also the most powerful in the world.

Lord Alcester can hardly expect to be complimented on his maiden speech in the Upper House. The gallant Admiral was deputed to reply to a question addressed to the First Lord of the Admiralty by the Earl of Sandwich, in regard to the appointment of Gunnery Lieutenants as 1st Lieutenants of ironclads and corvettes, a practice we announced some time ago the Admiralty were about to discontinue. Lord Alcester endeavoured to make it appear that the reason which had led the Admiralty to come to their decision was the scarcity of Gunnery Lieutenants. This statement, however, does not bear the light of investigation, and we strongly recommend Lord Alcester to devote his personal attention to such matters in future, and not to rest satisfied with whatever may be handed him by "the Department" as a sufficient answer to the question. On March 10 we called attention to the case of Gunnery Lieutenants, and now commend the remarks we then made to the consideration of Lord Alcester and all whom they may concern, as we should much like to know how Lord Alcester would employ the senior Gunnery Lieutenants, if the junior non-Gunnery Officers are solely to be appointed First Lieutenants.

The Earl of Northbrook has evidently learnt that it is preferable to appear at least to sympathise with Naval officers in their sufferings, than to attempt to ruthlessly trample their feelings under foot, as he has had the misfortune of apparently desiring to do on more than one occasion, since his accession to the post of First Lord of the Admiralty. We. therefore, note with pleasure the expression of his Lordship's sympathy with the Senior Lieutenants of the Navy, an expression of opinion elicited by the Earl of Belmore only after two attempts to obtain some redress for the hardships under which these officers are suffering, and when the Admiralty seem to have come to the conclusion that the perseverance of Lord Belmore should be checked at all hazards, even at that of acknowledging, it would seem, that a case had at last been made out to the satisfaction of their Lordships, who, nevertheless, have not the most remote idea of taking action in the matter. We are glad, therefore, to learn that the Earl of Belmore has no intention of letting the matter rest, and that the case of the Lieutenants of the Navy will not be allowed to drop. Lord Northbrook has been good enough to supply the official arguments against doing justice to a very hardly-used body of officers, and these arguments will be refuted in the Commons.

A careful study of the Navy Estimates issued since the year 1873 shows that Parliament has ordered 88,471 tons (weight of hull) of armour-clads to be constructed, but that the Admiralty, notwithstanding that the money voted for this purpose has been drawn from the Treasury and spent, have built only 66,806 tons, thus leaving a nett deficiency of 21,665 tons weight of hull. What has the Admiralty done with the money? Surely the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into the whole of the administration of the Navy has become a paramount necessity, and we sincerely hope that the House of Commons will support Lord Henry Lennox in his appeal for inquiry by means of such a Commission.

Mr. Campbell-Bannerman should avoid endeavouring to "conjecture," when replying to questions in the House of Commons, as it has long been apparent that the brain of the Parliamentary Secretary of the Admiralty is far too heavily taxed by the work of his department to stand such a mental strain. It is, consequently, quite impossible for men to place any reliance on conjectures hatched under such distressing circumstances. For example, on Thursday evening, when declining to issue the Report of the Naval Pensions Committee to Members of Parliament, on the ground that the said report is a confidential paper submitted by a departmental Committee for the information and assistance of the Admiralty, and therefore not intended for publication, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman could only account for the publicity given to the said report in these columns by the "conjecture that a copy has been improperly obtained by the Army and Navy Gazette." We beg to inform the Admiralty, and also their Parliamentary Secretary, so as to save him the labour of conjecturing in the future, that we neither begged, bought, borrowed, bribed, nor stole the said report, but that it reached us in the same manner as do all Admiralty circulars, reports, and documents whatsoever sent to us by the Secretary of the Admiralty for publication. It is no part of our duty to run to Whitehall with every such parcel, and ask whether it is really meant for publication or sent by accident, and our custom is to publish only what we consider will interest our readers, without injury, but with benefit, to the service.

The Admiralty appear to have realised a sum of £750 from the sale of the Conflict, schooner, on the Australian station. The remaining schooners will also, we believe, be sold.

A correspondent in the Channel Squadron writing from St. Vincent, Cape de Verde Islands, on April 4, says:—"We weighed from Madeira on Wednesday forenoon, March 28, and made sail to a light, fair wind. This only lasted for a few hours, and the next two days found us steaming, with a smooth sea and light head winds, with steam tactics and spar drill to vary the monotony. On Friday Palma and Ferro Islands, in the Canaries, were sighted and passed, and in the evening, in about 27° N. lat., we picked up the north-east trades, very light at first, but freshening gradually to their usual steady force; and next day were bowling along with studding sails both sides. On Sunday morning, the signal was made to stop engines and remain under the same sail. The Sultan proved herself to be the clipper of the Squadron, as she drew away from the others; the Achilles and Minotaur doing next best, then the Northumberland, the Agincourt bringing up the rear. In the afternoon, for the first time in the history of the Channel Squadron for many years, the ships entered the Tropics. During the night the Sultan remained under sail, the others using steam to come up with her. The following day was devoted to a sailing trial, for which purpose all the ships but the Sultan disconnected their screws. The Sultan, again, went ahead, although the Minotaur held her own, and even gained a little on her for a few hours; the Achilles was a good third, followed by the Northumberland, the Agincourt hopelessly last. In the afternoon a steamer was observed in distress, when the flagship communicated with her. She was found to be the German steamer Rio, of Hamburg, belonging to the Hamburg South American Steamship Company, outward bound for Monte Video, with fourteen passengers and a general cargo. She had broken down with a disabled screw-shaft on March 11. It had been the intention of the Admiral to send the Sultan into St. Vincent for mails, while the rest of the Squadron went on to Port Praya; so he ordered her to go to the steamer's assistance. The Squadron shortened sail and hove to, and the Sultan furled sails and went round to collect letters, after which she took the Rio in tow and proceeded with her to St. Vincent, while the rest of the Squadron resumed their course for Port Praya."

We were enabled, in a recent issue, to comment favourably on an appeal printed and circulated on behalf of the Warrant Officers of the Navy, praying for the removal of certain anomalies under which they labour, for an increase of their widows' pension and the grant of compassionate allowances to their orphans, and for a more distinctive uniform. Referring to this circular appeal, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, in replying to Sir H. Drummond Wolff in the House of Commons, on Monday, said, "I have no means of knowing how far it really represents the views of the Warrant Officers, as it is published anonymously." As a correspondent points out, in a letter which appears in another portion of our columns, it is difficult for any body of officers to collectively approach their Lordships with their grievances. In the present instance, however, we are in a position to assure the Secretary of the Admiralty that the appeal of the Warrant Officers is unanimous, and not anonymous, representing as it does the feeling of the whole class.

The Government inquiry into the condition of the Moscow Volunteer Fleet is still progressing, and seems certain to end in the placing of the vessels under State control. The Fleet was founded with donations, amounting to half a million sterling, subscribed by the Russian people at the close of the Turkish war. Several vessels were purchased, converted into cruisers, and others, when peace supervened, were transformed again into merchantmen, to ply between Odessa and the East. It is easy to understand that the attempt to combine the two functions of cruisers and merchantmen in one and the same vessel, was not likely to end in pecuniary success. Hence, after a while, when the lucrative government contracts for transporting troops from Bulgaria came to a close, the society had to apply to the State for assistance. In the meanwhile, the Committee had passed under the control of a self-seeking clique, thanks to which its expenditure increased in proportion as the revenue diminished. The climax was not reached, however, until a few weeks ago, when the purchase was made at Glasgow of a vessel, the Kostroma, to replace the Moscow, which foundered last autumn off the East-African coast, and reports got into circulation that the officials of the society had netted several thousand pounds by the transaction. The purchase of this vessel running the society into debt, it made a fresh appeal to the Government for funds, and this led to an investigation being set on foot by Prince Alexis, which is expected to result in the dissolution of the organisation. The Russia, Petersburg, and Kostroma, the three ocean liners belonging to the society, will in all probability be added to the Black Sea Fleet, as transports to convey troops and stores and State-aided emigrants to the Amoor; and the smaller cruiser Nijni Novgorod will be kept in the Pacific altogether to run between the local ports.

After having patched the Engineering Branch of the Navy for some years, to render the status of Engineer officers more in accord with the march of events, the Russian Admiralty have at length decided upon a thorough reorganisation, so as to put engineer officers on a satisfactory footing. With this end in view, a Commission has been appointed to go into the whole matter, and it is expected that its report will lead to engineer officers in the Russian Navy occupying a higher position in the service than in any other European fleet. The Commission is presided over by the Chief Engineer of the Russian Navy, who, by the way, received his training at Woolwich Dockyard some thirty years ago.

How strong the dissatisfaction is in Russia at the last purchase of the Moscow Volunteer Committee may be gathered from the circumstance that the semi-official Cronstadt Vestnik, which has all along warmly espoused the movement, and defended the Committee from detractors, demands this week fuller particulars about the Kostroma, although it publishes at the same time a long article in defence of the purchase of the vessel from Commodore Valitsky, who bought the Kostroma at Glasgow a short time ago. The main point at issue, the Vestnik declares, is whether a vessel having the extreme proportions of 371 feet in length to 37 in breadth is adapted to carry heavy artillery on its upper deck. Before any trial has been made, the Kostroma has earned a bad reputation for itself by the manner it pitched and rolled in proceeding from Glasgow to Odessa. Some of the officers on board of it affirm that it is altogether unfit to serve as a cruiser. According to an expert, quoted by the Odessa Vestnik, the price paid for the vessel, £60,000, was £14,000 in excess of the proper value. The Cronstadt Vestnik states that before publishing Commodore Valitsky's defence, it placed his article before one of the leading experts of the Baltic Fleet, who reported that he did not consider that the Commodore had made out his case as regards the stability of the vessel. The Commodore says that he examined 22 vessels in England before making his purchase, but it would appear that his choice of the Kostroma was hardly a happy one; and it is already reported that no attempt will ever be made to utilise it as a cruiser.

"A Probable Pensioner" writes:—"As nothing is laid down on the subject in any of the Royal Warrants, or indeed anywhere else, an answer to the following question is most urgently required, as it is one of vital moment to an immense number of officers, and one regarding which much uncertainty and misconception exist. Can an officer retired under present regulations draw his pension (irrespective of age) in any of her Majesty's colonies, or must he reside within the United Kingdom?" This subject is one of so much importance to the officers of the Army generally, that official information should be published forthwith.

The Rivista Militare states once more that the Spanish commission of national defence has at present under consideration a complete project for the fortification and defence of the Pyrenees. It is curious that the same statement should be made year after year, and it has therefore probably no more foundation than the alleged Spanish demand for Gibraltar. Spain knows very well that France has not the least hostile intention upon the Iberian Peninsula.

In accordance with the Spanish law of military organisation, the Army of Spain has an effective of 134,000 men, of which 94,000 men are stationed in the Peninsula, 30,000 in Cuba and Puerto Rico, and 10,000 in the Philippine Islands. According to the data supplied by General Jovellar, in the Spanish Senate, the French Army numbers, on a peace footing, 470,000 men, with 300 generals; that of Germany, 427,000 men, with 282 generals; that of England, 315,000 men, with 179 generals; that of Italy, 220,000 men, with 130 generals; and that of Spain, 134,742 men, with 260 generals. Those figures show that in England there is one general to every 1,759 men; in France, to every 1,566 men: in Germany, to every 1,451 men; in Italy, to every 1,407 men; and in Spain, to every 518 men. Spain, consequently, has in proportion three times as many active generals as the other European countries named.

Important changes are contemplated with regard to the dress of the French troops employed in Africa. The great mortality amongst them is partly to be attributed to the physical condition to the men, but is said to be principally due to the impractical dress and abnormal system of rationing, entirely unsuited to the climate. In the first place, it is proposed to improve the personnel of the colonial army by enlisting old soldiers as volunteers. Next, provision is to be made for properly feeding the men, and adopting the needful sanitary precautions; alcoholic drinks to be entirely dispensed with.

The following information with regard to the Egyptian War Fund (Lady Jane Taylor's) will be of interest. Relief granted up to April 14:—Widows, £920; invalids, £555; relatives of deceased, £80. Total, £1,555. The thanks of the service are due to Captain Thomas Tully, the Hon. Secretary, for his indefatigable exertions on behalf of the fund.

Lord Stratheden and Campbell will, on Thursday, April 26, call attention to the state of the Auxiliary Forces. We presume this refers to the gradually diminishing numbers of the Militia, which seems likely to end in its disappearance altogether.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—In cases of chronic indigestion, disordered liver, and general debility, these Pills are wonderfully effective. They are already an established fact, and indeed have so general and powerful an effect on the whole system that thousands of the sick and afflicted in every clime have found them a comfort in the hour of need. They purify the blood, correct the bile, excite a healthy appetite, produce sound sleep, and impart increased energy to both mind and body. The admirable properties of these far-famed Pills are too highly appreciated to require any encomium here, as they are resorted to by rich and poor of every nation. The cures they effect are not merely temporary, but they bring about a wondrous and beneficial change throughout the entire body, and enable it with renovated powers to resist the approach of all future attacks.

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE. CHLORODYNE.

Dear Sir,—We embrace this opportunity of congratulating you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine, Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne, has earned for itself, not only in Hindostan, but all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported into the country, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff), discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of

COUGHS, ASTHMA, COLDS,
BRONCHITIS,
EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC,
PALPITATION, HYSTERIA, and is the true Palliative in
NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER,
TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.
GREAT SPECIFIC for
DIARRHŒA,
CHOLERA, DYSENTERY.

IMPORTANT CAUTION. The immense sale of this remedy has given rise to many unscrupulous imitations.

N.B.—Every bottle of genuine Chlorodyne bears on the Government stamp the name of the inventor,

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE.

(FROM AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The first gun of the season was heard in the Long Valley on Tuesday last, the Royal Artillery having been out for exercise on that day. The Division will probably be inspected by the Commander-in-Chief before the end of the month. The weather is now favourable for military operations, and the various brigades have been exercised under their brigadiers during the week. Major-General Walker, V.C., C.B., had his Brigade (the 1st) out on Tuesday, for the first time. This brigade consists of three battalions, but so attenuated are they that all three would not make a decent regiment. Sixty-two recruits of the 4th Hussars arrived from Hounslow on Wednesday, for a course of instruction in musketry. They will rejoin their regiment on completion of the course. Lieutenant Leonard, 47th Foot, and one serjeant, two corporals, and 120 privates of the 85th Foot, will proceed from Aldershot on Tuesday next to Portsmouth Dockyard, and embark in the Jumna for Malta, to join the 53rd Foot; and L Battery, Second Brigade, and half of M Battery, Fourth Brigade, R.A., have left for Portsmouth, to embark in the Assistance for conveyance to Queenstown, for Limerick and Clonmel respectively. A ball was given by Sir Daniel Lysons, at the new residence of the General Commanding the Division, on Tuesday night. Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchese of Connaught and other distinguished personages were present, also many officers and ladies of the Division, and not a few of the neighbouring gentry. Major-General Walker has been appointed Churchwarden of the Iron Church, South Camp, vice Major-General Spurgin. The general court-martial which assembled on Monday for the trial of Private Richardson, 84th, for fraudulent enlistment, has been adjourned, and the president and members have returned to duty. It is not improbable that the prisoner will be released. The railway companies issued return tickets at single fares to London, and numbers of all ranks attended from the Camp. A concert by London artistes, in aid of the Cambridge Fund for Old and Disabled Soldiers, is announced to take place on Thursday next, at the Royal Engineers' Theatre, under the patronage of the Duke of Cambridge and the General commanding the Division. By War-Office letter, dated 14th inst., the Secretary of State for War has authorised, for the present, an extra payment of 6d., under protest, if demanded, to Justices' clerks at Aldershot, for the duplicate copy of the attestation of a recruit. A meeting was held at the Divisional court-martial room, Head-quarters, on Wednesday (Major-General H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, K.G., presiding), to make arrangements and appoint the days for the Army Rifle Meeting of 1883 at Aldershot. Representatives from each corps and department were present. The loop-holed shield carts (invented by Admiral Cochrane), sent from Woolwich for experimental trial at Aldershot, were inspected on Monday by the Committee appointed to report on them. These carts bear the marks of rough usage at former trials, and although very ugly and uncomfortable-looking machines, might prove useful on service under certain conditions. Private Home, Army Hospital Corps, has received permission to wear a gold medal granted to him by the French Government for gallant conduct in saving life. Sub-Inspector of Schools A. Wolfe has been posted to Aldershot for duty. Surgeon Harris has been ordered to Aldershot. Gunner Payne, Royal Artillery, recently tried by the civil power for stealing Government candles from the Quartermaster's stores, where he was employed as an orderly, has been sentenced to nine months' imprisonment with hard labour; and the tradesman (Sumpster) who received the candles, knowing them to have been stolen, has been awarded 15 months'. From what has transpired at the trial, the authorities consider there should be an investigation into certain matters, and a court of inquiry, consisting of Colonel Dixon, 32th Regiment, president, and two field officers, members, assembled at the court-martial room, Royal Artillery, at 11 a.m. on Thursday, for this purpose. The three soldiers of the 84th Regiment (serjeant, corporal, and private) recently haled through the streets of Aldershot by the civil police, handcuffed, en route to Winchester, there to be tried on a charge of perjury, as mentioned in my "Notes" of the 31st ult., were acquitted on Monday last, and have returned to their regiment. The reprehensible conduct of the police has been the subject of remonstrance by the Military authorities, and it is to be hoped that such a disgraceful spectacle will not again be seen in the streets of Aldershot, or a serious breach of the peace may be occasioned. The civil police here have never yet been popular with the military, and since this occurrence there has been less love than ever lost. It is probable that more may be heard of this business, it being quite evident that perjury lies somewhere in the matter.

BREECH-LOADING GUNS.

One of the objections that we have to the arrangements of the new breech-loading guns is that, unlike the old Armstrong or the Krupp system, the breech-screw sets so fast that a wooden hand-spike has to be employed as a lever for opening it. This is a clumsy method, involving increased trouble and waste of time as a preliminary movement of loading, and when the gun has fired several rounds, we venture to state that it will probably take not only number four, but also two or three other numbers, to overcome the increased friction caused by the expansion of the metal of the male and female breech-screws. When the breech-screw has been loosened, it has to be turned back by hand or by hydraulic power, according to the weight of the gun. One number has then to wash the cup; another has to remove the venthead with the lever, replacing the tube in it; then another number has to place a new invention, called a "loading tray," before the projectile can be entered and the usual operations of loading carried out. All these evolutions contrast most unfavourably either with the old Armstrong breech-loader or Krupp systems. In these there is no loading tray to place and replace; no lever, except what is fixed to and worked easily with the loading apparatus; no cup to wipe or wash, and no inner venthead to further complicate matters. Further than this, should the new gun miss fire, the venthead must be taken out before the tube can be safely extracted, and even then the man who performs this operation is carefully enjoined, in the detail of drill, to use the extractor carefully, "not to attempt to pull the tube out by the wire," but to insert the extractor beyond the collar of the tube. All this may be feasible, though it certainly will be very complicated during drill, but in case of an action, there is such a large margin left for mistakes and misadventure caused by hurry and excitement, that we have grave fears the guns will have to suffer for what is really the stupidity of the people who arranged their loading action and mountings. It would not require the wisdom of a Solomon or the inventive genius of Mr. Edison to do away with the inner venthead altogether, or at least to arrange matters so that the tube could be withdrawn without throwing the gun out of action; but whilst the Woolwich authorities are entrusted with the details of making guns for our sailors and seamen-gunners to work them, one department is always at cross-purposes with the other. It is quite time enough that such an anomaly should cease, and the construction of Naval ordnance entirely placed in the hands of those who best know the requirements and difficulties attending Naval warfare, among whom, those who sit at ease in their armchairs, in the comfortable official residences adjacent to Woolwich Arsenal, cannot by any possibility be classed.

Under the heading, "A Caution to Colonels," the Madras Mail says :—"The commandant of a British infantry regiment in this Presidency having, through a clerical error, indented for 200 yards of scarlet serge, which has been reported as not being required, he has been informed by the Government that they do not see how he can be relieved of the responsibility of paying for the unrequired serge."

The Missions to Seamen's gross income last year was £21,003 13s. 7d. The Society has now been 27 years in existence, and has been increasing its income and agency largely year by year. The net increase of income in 1882 over the previous year was £1,579 14s. 11d. Still, it only has 23 chaplains and 41 readers working afloat in 46 seaports, supplied with mission yachts and boats, and with churches and mission rooms.

The Admiralty have awarded to Capt. W. W. S. Bridges the Commander's Greenwich Hospital Pension of £65 a year, vacant by the death of Capt. J. C. Wells, on the 29th ult.

REPORT OF THE NAVAL PENSIONS COMMITTEE.

THE ROYAL MARINES.

In view of the important saving to be effected by extending the term of service in the Navy, we have thought it desirable to consider whether a similar course might not be adopted in the Royal Marines. We therefore invited the views of the Deputy-Adjutant-General and other officers of the corps on this point, in order to arrive at an opinion as to the practicability of such a proposal. The general opinion thus obtained was that it would be undesirable to retain the men serving in the ranks for a longer term than 21 years, from the age of 18, as their physical fitness for the proper performance of the duties required of them is said to be then impaired. We feel that we should not be justified in any positive dissent from such testimony. We are, however, of opinion that the very large number of non-commissioned officers and others employed on office duties and in the different trades, &c., at the several Divisions might be retained until 50 years of age, and in exceptional cases for a longer period, without detriment to the service. The inducements to these men to remain might be similar to those proposed for the Navy, excepting the rate of re-engagement pay, which might be 6d., 5d., and 4d. a day for serjeants, &c., corporals, and privates respectively, instead of the uniform rate of 6d. granted to seamen. To render it possible for non-commissioned officers to derive any benefit in pension from their additional service, it would be necessary to increase the present limits to the total awards, which are now reached in nearly every case after 21 years. In order to illustrate the financial effect of extended service, a recent award may be quoted. This was the case of a non-commissioned officer of Marines whose total service amounted to the extraordinary period of 54 years. Upon completing 21 years in the corps, he had earned the maximum pension allowed to his rank, namely, £36 10s., but he was induced to continue his service by a promise that he should be recommended to the Treasury on discharge for an additional pension on the civil scale. On this understanding he served for a further period of 33 years, and was ultimately discharged with a civil pension of £71 10s., in addition to his Marine pension of £36 10s., making together a pension of £108 a year. The retention of this man after 21 years, it may be here remarked, so far from being detrimental to the public service, was strongly urged as being exceedingly desirable. Notwithstanding the apparent largeness of his pension, the saving to the Crown resulting from this non-commissioned officer's retention is so remarkable as to be worthy of notice. According to the accepted scales of expectation of life, he will receive pension for 10 years, or about £1,080 in all, but if he had retired after 21 years, and his successors had followed the same course (as is the almost invariable rule), pensions amounting in the aggregate to about £150 would have been incurred, which would have remained in force for about 27 years, the total cost being over £4,000. Through the exceptional means taken to postpone this non-commissioned officer's discharge, therefore, the corps retained the services of a valuable man, and the Crown effected a saving in pension liability of about £3,000. We must not be understood in quoting this case as recommending any such lengthened extension of service for general adoption, but merely as illustrating in a striking way the financial fact that extension of service on the Active List, after allowing for a liberal increase in the amount of pension awarded on retirement, leaves a large margin of saving to the State.

LONG-SERVICE PENSIONS TO ROYAL MARINES.

The initial award for long service in the Royal Marines, exclusive of additions for badges, &c., is at present 8d. a day after 21 years. This term is served in two engagements of 12 and 9 years respectively. We would recommend that the second engagement be for 10 years, making the total term 22 years, as proposed for seamen. Under the existing scale ½d. is added for each year of additional service. This should be slightly increased in order to make it uniform with the seamen's scale, so that a Marine would receive 1s. a day exclusive of badges, &c., after 27 years' service, as compared with 11d. under the present scale. The additions for good-conduct badges, medal, and character should remain the same, but a "Very Good" character throughout should entitle a man to the award, as in the Navy, without regard to a general assessment of exemplary, required under the present regulations. The system under which the additional pension for service as a non-commissioned officer is now granted might, we consider, be amended with advantage. At present, non-commissioned officers are divided into five classes for pension purposes, and these are awarded the following additions for each year of service in the respective classes, the total award, however, being subject to a limitation as hereafter shown:—

		Total pension not to exceed
Class 1.	3d. a day.	3s. 0d. a day.
,, 2.	2d. ,,	2s. 6d. ,,
,, 3.	1½d. ,,	2s. 6d. ,,
,, 4.	1d. ,,	2s. 3d. ,,
,, 5.	½d. ,,	1s. 6d. ,,

The practical effect of this scale is that the pension earned in some classes amounts on an average to £10 or £12 more than the total limit, and the high nominal rate thus becomes in most cases illusory, while in others it enables the men with comparatively short service as non-commissioned officers to earn as much pension as those who have given longer and therefore more valuable service to the State. Such a system is highly unsatisfactory, and should, we consider, be superseded by one under which the men would in all cases receive pensions exactly proportionate to the value of their services. This object would be attained by reducing the nominal rates of additional pension for non-commissioned officers' time and abolishing the limits put upon the total awards. The following are the rates we would recommend for adoption:—

2.	2	0	0	,, ,,

This scale has been tested in a large number of cases, and it has been found that while the men would have received strictly pro-rata pensions which would in many cases have been much in excess of those awarded, in other cases of less meritorious service the awards would have been smaller, but the total cost to the Crown for each class would have been about the same as at present. Another and important advantage of this proposal exists in the inducement it would offer to men to extend their service beyond 21 or 22 years; the financial result of such extended service in a single case being exemplified at page 8 of this Report. The extension of service to 22 years would reduce the liability by about £7,000 a year.

DEFERRED PENSIONS.

Marines who leave with free discharges after 14 years' service are allowed pensions from 4d. to 6d. a day at the age of 50. No such pensions exist in the Navy, and we see no reason for their continuance in the Royal Marines. We would, therefore, recommend that they be discontinued, and that the regulations for short-service pensions proposed for the Navy be adopted. Besides these, another class of deferred pensions exists in the Marines. These are granted at 50 years of age, at rates varying from 4d. to 6d. a day, to all men who are invalided, irrespective of the length of their service, provided they are in receipt of one or more good-conduct badges, and are not in receipt of life-pensions. The following may be taken as a very ordinary illustration of the working of this regulation. A Marine is invalided as unserviceable (though able to contribute materially to his own support) after three years' service, when in receipt of one good-conduct badge. Such a man can scarcely be considered a good bargain to the Crown, since he has cost the expense of his training, &c., and has given little return in the way of service. In accordance with the Disability scale, he is awarded a gratuity of £3 on discharge, this being considered a fair remuneration for the short service rendered by him. (The only grant made in similar cases to seamen.) When he attains the age of 50, however, he becomes entitled to a pension of 4d. a day for life, which (taking the expectation of life at 20 years) amounts to £122, and he actually receives this sum as a supplementary grant to the initial award of £3. We have been unable to trace the origin of these pensions, and it is, we think, impossible to justify their existence. We, therefore, strongly recommend that they be abolished. In this opinion, we may remark, the Deputy-Adjutant-General and other officers entirely concur. These pensions, if not abolished, will ultimately cost about £10,000 a year.

GREENWICH HOSPITAL SCHOOL.

Sir Thomas Brassey has contradicted in the House of Commons the report, which has for some time circulated in Naval circles, to the effect that the Admiralty have under their consideration the abolition of Greenwich Hospital School. The answer given by Sir Thomas Brassey to the question put to him by Sir Massey Lopes does not, to our mind, appear quite lucid. While admitting that the Admiralty had suspended the entry of boys eligible for the School, Sir Thomas Brassey hastened to assure the House that the Admiralty had no intention of permanently reducing the number of boys maintained at the expense of Greenwich Hospital. Sir Thomas Brassey then went on to state that:—"A plan is under consideration for educating boys with strong service claims, but not physically eligible for Greenwich School. It is proposed to maintain 800 boys in Greenwich School, and 200 in institutions similar to those in which the daughters of Seamen and Marines are at present educated. A Bill is in course of preparation giving power to the Admiralty to carry this plan into effect, and on its introduction an opportunity will be given for discussing any changes in the administration of the School." We presume the Admiralty are following, either in whole or in part, the recommendations of the Naval Pensions Committee. In that Committee's report we find it suggested that certain legislation will be necessary, should the several proposals made in the Report be adopted by their Lordships; and amongst others, "An Act of Parliament authorising the proposed appropriations from Greenwich Hospital funds," and an Order in Council sanctioning the "proposed redistribution of Greenwich funds." As these questions are of great interest to all ranks in the Navy, we cannot do better than publish the Report of the Naval Pensions Committee in extenso, in so far as it deals with Greenwich Hospital, its funds, and its School:—

BENEFITS OF GREENWICH HOSPITAL.

The primary objects of the foundation of Greenwich Hospital were the relief and support of old and disabled seamen of the Navy, objects which are now mainly met by the award of pensions from Naval funds, and about £107,000, or about 66 per cent. of the total income of Greenwich Hospital, which is annually spent in age pensions, special pensions, and for defraying the charges of maintaining men in Naval hospitals. Age pensions were established in 1865, upon the recommendation of a Committee presided over by Mr. Childers. In the report of that Committee it is stated:—"Two modes suggested themselves to the Committee for dealing with Greenwich-Hospital pensions, one by an allowance of 6d. a day to Naval and Marine life pensioners on reaching the age of 55 years, the other by an allowance of 5d. a day, or £7 12s. a year, at 55 years of age, and after five years on pension; to be increased at the age of 70 years, and after 10 years on pension, to 9d. a day, or £13 12s. a year. The first plan, which would continue uniform through life, was estimated at £46,000 a year, the latter, assuming the number of pensioners above the age of 70 to be one-third of the whole, at £48,000." The Committee considered that, although much might be said of the single rate of 6d. a day, they thought it desirable to adopt the latter plan, on the grounds that "it afforded to the seaman as their infirmities and wants of age increased some additional means of mitigating the one and meeting the other." It was, as stated, on this report that the age pensions were founded, the committee calculating that 5,000 such pensions would be in force at one time, and be sufficient to provide for all eligible candidates, and this number was fixed as the limit. This calculation, however, proved fallacious. In 1865, 3,000 age pensions were bestowed; in the following year, this number was increased by 1,000. In 1868, the number rose to the maximum of 5,000. In 1869, the limit of 5,000 was abolished. In 1875, the Board decided to give the increased age pension at the age of 65, five years earlier than that contemplated by Mr. Childers' Committee. By her Majesty's Order in Council of June 29, 1878, the number of age pensions was restricted, the maximum number to be in force at one time being assessed at 7,500; no award allowed to pensioners in the receipt of a Naval pension of 2s. 6d. a day, and men were only allowed to receive so much Greenwich age pension as would make up their combined pensions to that limit. Men, however, who have already received the age pension of 5d. a day are awarded the higher rate of 9d. a day at 65 years of age, quite irrespective of this restriction. At the present time, we find that, notwithstanding the various office restrictions, the age-pension list is full, and that there are many eligible candidates waiting for age pensions. This is mainly due to the fact that over 5,000 of the present 7,500 were in force before the adoption of the present restrictions, and these were in most cases granted to men who would not now be eligible. In order that justice should be done to the most deserving cases, as vacancies occur in the age-pension list, a form of recommendation has been adopted, giving full particulars as to each man's means, his family, and his capacity to work. This latter point is tested by medical evidence in every case, and no man is awarded an age pension unless it is conclusively established by medical survey that he is incapable, or only in a small degree capable, of making any exertion towards his own livelihood. The only class of men who are exempted from these regulations are those pensioners who have completed certain drills in the Seamen Pensioner Reserve. In establishing this Reserve, the inducement of an age pension (as a right) was held out, to be awarded at the early age of 50 years, regardless of any restriction. There are about 150 such pensions in existence. The second class of pensions awarded from the funds of Greenwich Hospital are styled special pensions. Special pensions were created in 1869, and formed the last chapter to the closing of Greenwich Hospital. These are granted at rates not exceeding 1s. 6d. a day, inclusive of Naval pension, if any. They were established for old and infirm men who had seen some service under the Crown, and as a means to prevent seamen who had any claim on the State from appealing to public charity or the workhouse. The amount at first thought needful for this purpose was £20,000 a year, but the pensions were granted in so liberal a manner that the expenditure exceeded this limit, and it was found desirable to be more cautious in the awards, and to exact greater claims before the bestowal of these pensions. In April, 1880, an Order in Council was obtained to increase the special pensions to £22,000 a year, and this amount, coupled with the various restrictions now placed on awards, is found amply sufficient to meet every deserving case that comes forward. Greenwich Hospital also grants to the wives or children of inmates a weekly allowance of 3s., and 1s. to the pensioner himself. These grants, and the charge for the maintenance of pensioners and others in Naval hospitals at the expense of Greenwich Hospital, amount to about £8,000 a year. The mode adopted in regard to the latter is to debit Greenwich Hospital funds with the cost of the man's maintenance, fixed at 2s. 6d. a day, and to credit Greenwich Hospital funds with the man's pension, if any. We have carefully considered the objects that were in view when the age pensions were established, and we have given due weight to the many advantages they possess; but we are of opinion that in their present form they should be altogether discontinued, and the money thus set free devoted to other purposes. Pensioners now-a-days have so many opportunities of earning a livelihood, even after the age of 60, that age in itself cannot be considered as a test of a man's capacity to work, and this capacity we consider should be the sole guide for assistance from Greenwich Hospital funds. Greenwich Hospital was an asylum for broken-down seamen and Marines; none were admitted who were supposed to be capable of working, and as age-pensions were given in lieu of this asylum, it may very fairly be argued that neither should these pensions be given to men who are capable of earning a livelihood. The sailor who has devoted the best days of his life in the service should be liberally provided for, and when the time has come that he can no longer battle with the world, the State should provide for him in his declining years; but it can never be contended that hale and hearty men should be recipients of charity. From the manner in which age pensions were at first bestowed, the men have become to regard them as a right, and they argue that the larger the pensions they have, the greater must have been their service, and therefore the greater right do they possess to receive an age pension. No hardship whatever is inflicted upon these men. On joining the Naval service they certainly could look forward to being admitted to Greenwich Hospital as a home when they were disabled or past work, at the same time surrendering their pensions. The value of this home was by the men themselves assessed at 2s. a day, that being the maximum combined pension gladly accepted by the in-pensioners in 1869, which resulted in the closing of Greenwich Hospital. Men with large pensions seldom sought shelter in Greenwich Hospital, and any worn-out pensioner who is infirm and helpless has still an asylum to look to, as he can be admitted into one of the Naval hospitals as a permanent inmate and receive every possible care and kindness. As we have said before, we can see no sufficient reason for maintaining age pensions; they form an enormous charge upon Greenwich funds, being nearly half of the income, and they have been or are for the most part held by men who would never have sought admission into Greenwich. We would propose to abolish age pensions, and extend the award of special pensions, which might be styled "Greenwich Hospital Pensions." Special pensions are most beneficial, and by a judicious enlargement of the system under which they are granted, they can be brought to meet the case of every man, whether pensioner or not, and to satisfy the claims of every man who has any right to the benefits of Greenwich Hospital. These pensions possess the additional advantage of only being awarded from year to year, they are given on medical evidence, and they are bestowed entirely irrespective of age, and serve the same purpose as when Greenwich Hospital was in existence, viz., to afford either pecuniary aid, or treatment in a Naval hospital. It may be remarked, owing to the restrictions that have been placed on the award of age pensions, age and special pensions are now bestowed upon precisely the same basis, viz., the question of health, and are given according to the man's capacity to work, although many would be eligible for an age pension, but not for a special pension, the limit of combined awards in regard to the first being 2s. 6d. a day, and in regard to the last only 1s. 6d. These regulations appear to be well devised, and to require no alteration as regards the eligibility of men for the awards. We would propose to extend the limit to 2s. a day in cases of men with life naval pensions, the computed value of a home in Greenwich Hospital. To men not in receipt of Naval pensions, the limit might be fixed at 1s. 6d., whilst to men who had completed a third engagement we would increase the combined Naval and Greenwich Hospital pension to 2s. 6d. a day. In very exceptional cases, where men have been so severely wounded or injured as to necessitate attendants, their Lordships might take power to make up the Naval and Greenwich Hospital pensions to 3s. 6d. a day. With the scope of the special pensions extended as proposed, the Admiralty would have the assurance that no seaman or marine who had worthily served, and who was incapable of work, need seek shelter in the workhouse or ask for alms; and, on the other hand, that no man was receiving charity to keep him in idleness. With regard to the age pension given to men who join the Seaman Pensioner Reserve, it will be impossible to deny this benefit to the men who have joined the force, on the stipulation that they should, after the completion of certain drills, receive the pension as a matter of right at the age of 50; but this inducement should be withdrawn from all future conditions. With regard to the men who are already in receipt of the 5d. a day, and who are not members of the Seaman Pensioner Reserve, we would recommend that in future the award of the additional 4d. be subject to the restrictions that now govern the original grant of 5d. We are of opinion that from £45,000 to £50,000 a year will be found amply sufficient to meet all charges that may arise for these proposed Greenwich Hospital pensions.

TREATMENT IN NAVAL HOSPITALS.

We cannot refrain from remarking on the charge now made on Greenwich Hospital funds for the maintenance of pensioners and others in hospitals. The charge for maintenance is fixed at 2s. 6d. a day, and we consider this rate excessive. Naval hospitals are kept for national purposes, and unless it can be shown that the staff of the establishments is increased by reason of the maintenance of Greenwich Hospital patients, we think the charge should be based on the actual cost of the man's food, medicine, and clothing. As a comparison with the rate paid by Greenwich Hospital funds, we would point out that an officer when maintained in hospital is charged at the most 3s. 6d. a day, and a warrant officer with a pension of £75 a year is charged only 1s. a day. A charge of 1s. 6d. a day would, we think, be a fair charge for the maintenance of a pensioner, and that in cases where the pension exceeded that amount, the difference should be paid to the pensioner's wife, or any other person he might authorise to receive it. If not so allowed, the balance should be paid to the pensioner on his discharge from hospital. The present system of granting an allowance to the wives or children of men in hospital at the uniform rate of 3s. a week might also be amended with advantage. It is obvious that the suspension of a man's pension is felt by those dependent upon him the most severely in cases where the pension is largest, and as these are necessarily the men who have given the most valuable service to the State, the severity of this penalty is in an inverse ratio to the merits of the case. We would recommend, therefore, that these allowances be made according to the following scale:—

Rate of Man's Pension.	Weekly Allowance to Wife.
" 1s. to 1s. 6d. a day	4s. "

When the pension exceeds 2s. a day the balance should be given to the wife instead of the above allowance, but in such cases the wife should receive a minimum of 5s. a week. As regards Yarmouth Hospital, where the number of pensioner inmates is nearly as great as the number of inmates who are not pensioners, we do not propose any change at present, except those above referred to in regard to the wives' allowances, more especially as we understand from the Accountant-General of the Navy that he is about to bring before their Lordships the whole question of the continuance of Yarmouth, and that any alterations that may be made will tend to reduce the cost now charged to Greenwich funds. The present net income of Greenwich Hospital is about £160,000 a year, and the present normal expenditure may be taken at £148,000 a year, leaving a surplus balance of about £12,000 a year. This will eventually be increased by over £5,000 a year, by deaths of superannuated servants and the falling-in of allowances to men who elected to leave Greenwich Hospital in 1865, and by a further sum of from £45,000 to £50,000 a year, if our proposal in regard to the abolition of the Age Pensions be adopted. An immediate income of about £12,000, which would eventually amount to about £65,000, would thus be available; and this might, we consider, with perfect propriety, and certainly with considerable satisfaction to the service, be devoted to the relief of seamen's widows and orphans—a class whose distresses are often very great, and who have a claim upon Greenwich Hospital that has never been sufficiently recognised. These widows are of two classes, those of men who have met their death by casualties or catastrophes, and those whose husbands have died under the ordinary circumstances of disease. To the first of these classes it is the rule to grant a gratuity equal to the husband's pay for one year, but the latter class have received nothing whatever. It has long been felt that the widows of men who meet their deaths in the presence of the enemy, or through some catastrophe in connection with the service, have a claim upon the country for compensation of a permanent character. At the present time such relief is only occasionally afforded, and then only through the unreliable and often inadequate voluntary subscriptions of the public; but a condition of things under which the extent of the relief depends upon the amount of popular sympathy excited by the more or less sensational character of the catastophe is obviously unsatisfactory, and we are glad, therefore, to be able to submit a scheme to their Lordships under which the widows and orphans of all men whose death is attributable to the service may receive substantial and permanent help. In connection with such a proposal, we have recognised one drawback. It is certain that the large sums subscribed to the Patriotic Fund and other sources of relief have been the result of the non-existence of any other means by which such cases could be dealt with, and when it became known that the Crown had recognised this responsibility, private subscriptions would in a great measure be discontinued. Such a result should be avoided, if possible, and in this view we would recommend that the grants be made at minimum rates. It would be impracticable under any system of grants from the Crown to award the relief in exact proportion to the necessities of the claimant, and we would, therefore, recommend that the following scale be adopted, under which the only distinctions made are in regard to the rank of the deceased seaman or marine, and the number and ages of the orphans:—

	Widows' Allowance per Week.
Rank.	Under 45 Years of Age.	45 and upwards.
(1.) Able Seamen and other persons in the same category, including Marines and Marine Artillery ...	3s. 6d. ...	4s. 6d.

To every child in classes 1 and 2 dependent on the mother, 1s. 6d. per week. To every child in classes 3 and 4 dependent on the mother, 2s. per week. In cases of total orphans, these rates would be increased.

But it is certain that the grant thus made, though sufficient in the least necessitous cases, would be quite inadequate in others where the widows or children were in delicate health or suffering under other disabilities. How such cases should in our view be dealt with we state further on. With the assistance of Mr. Vaughan, the Actuary of the Board of Trade, who has rendered us the greatest possible help throughout this inquiry, we have ascertained that the cost of the above proposal for dealing out of Greenwich funds with all the casualty and catastrophe cases, which would of course be small at first, would eventually be about £18,000 to £20,000 a year. This charge would, however, be met by appropriating a sum of £10,000 a year from the present time, the accumulated capital from this source during the first years being sufficient to realise the sum required. This estimate is, however, based on the casualties of the last 15 years, during which period no Naval war has occurred; and as the additional liability resulting from such a contingency should be provided for, we would recommend that the surplus of £12,000 to which we have referred be annually set aside for this purpose. As regards the second class of widows, the creation of the fund from which their annuities could be granted is dependent on their Lordships' adoption of our proposal to discontinue the award of the Greenwich Age Pensions. This question is not one of extreme urgency, and to determine the steps necessary to be taken for establishing such a fund, which could only be introduced gradually, would necessarily occupy much time, and cause great delay in the presentation of this Report. We have not, therefore, attempted to formulate any detailed scheme of pensions for these widows. We would only state that we are satisfied that with an income of about £50,000 a year from Greenwich funds which the abolition of the age pensions would eventually set free for this purpose, supplemented by contributions from the men, the establishment of a general pension scheme for widows would be quite practicable. The amount of the pensions payable from such a fund would require to be actuarially determined, and in such calculation the amounts and conditions of the contributions received from the men would form an important element. We are strongly of opinion that the establishment of such a fund would, more than any other appropriation of Greenwich moneys, increase the attractions of service in the Navy.

GREENWICH HOSPITAL SCHOOL.

This question was not one of those into which we were originally instructed to inquire, but it has since been referred to us by their Lordships, who have called upon us to report generally on the application of Greenwich Hospital funds to the maintenance of the school, and in educational grants to the daughters of seamen. Greenwich Hospital was first established in 1712, for the purpose of clothing and educating the sons of the pensioners. In that year there were only ten boys. In 1730 there were 60; in 1790 they were increased to 150; and in 1803 the number was 200. In 1821 the Royal Naval Asylum was united to Greenwich Hospital School by his Majesty's warrant of Jan. 31, 1821, and called the "Lower School," Greenwich Hospital School being then styled the "Upper School." At this time the School consisted of:—

Greenwich Hospital School (Upper School)	200 boys.
Royal Naval Asylum (Lower School)	600 "
Royal Naval Asylum (Lower School)	200 girls.
Total	1,000

And these numbers remained the same until 1828, when the Lower School was reduced by 200 boys, and 200 boys added to the Upper School, 100 of whom were to be the sons of distressed commissioned and ward-room officers, in accordance with the suggestions of the Duke of Clarence, then Lord High Admiral. In 1841 that portion of the Lower School consisting of 200 girls was abolished, in consequence of the evils that existed from the propinquity of the sexes; and no provision would appear to have been made for the education of girls until 1870, when a sum of £4,000 a year was appropriated for grants to provide for their education in approved schools. In 1869, in accordance with the recommendations of a committee, Greenwich Hospital School was thoroughly reorganised and established as an industrial school, the boys being taught seamanship and such trades as would lead them to a seafaring life. The boys are now admitted between 10½ and 13 years of age. They remain in the school until 15½ years of age, when, if physically fit, they are drafted into the training ships for continuous service in the Royal Navy. The admissions are limited to sons of warrant officers, petty officers, and seamen of the Royal Navy, non-commissioned officers and privates of the Royal Marines, and men of the Royal Naval Reserve, and the candidates are classed according to the relative services of their fathers, orphans having the first claim. Before admission, they must sign an agreement (together with their parents or guardians), that they will enter for continuous service in the Royal Navy. In 1876, the school was increased from 800 to 1,000 boys, and a standard is now fixed for height and chest measurement on entry. The boys are examined periodically, and especially at 13 years of age. Those not coming up to the standard, or otherwise physically unfit for sea service, are discharged. Greenwich Hospital School may therefore now be considered as essentially a training school for the entry of boys into the Royal Navy, and it has been felt that money spent in its maintenance could scarcely be considered entirely in agreement with the more charitable intentions of the founders of Greenwich Hospital, as the physical test renders the weaker boys ineligible for its benefits, and so debars those most in want of charitable support from participating in it. A Committee appointed to inquire into Greenwich Hospital School has recently recommended that the number of boys admitted, subject to physical tests, should be 600 between 12½ and 14 years of age, and that the remaining 400 between 10½ and 12 years of age should be admitted without any such qualification, the object of this recommendation being to benefit the weaklier children of deceased or impoverished seamen. If it were an essential condition that the school should continue to exist, and that the present number of 1,000 boys should be maintained, we think the proposal of the Committee would be advantageous; but it should be borne in mind that the Greenwich School Committee were restricted to a consideration of the best system under which the school could be carried on, and any question of its partial or complete abolition, and the application of the funds so released to another purpose, would have been beyond the scope of their instructions. We, however, are under no such restrictions, but are required more especially to consider the general question of the school as a Greenwich Hospital endowment, with a view to forming an opinion as to the desirability of continuing to apply Greenwich Hospital funds to such a purpose. In order that their Lordships may the more readily comprehend the conclusions we have arrived at, we have thought it desirable to deal with the proposals of the Greenwich Hospital Committee separately as well as collectively. The junior or non-nautical school proposed for 400 orphan boys would in no way benefit the State, as it is not intended that these boys should be trained for the Navy. This part of the question, therefore, becomes simply one of charity, and resolves itself into a proposal to spend about £9,000 a year on the support and education of 400 boys, or an average for each of about £23 a year. Before the existence of "Board Schools," the maintenance of so excellent an educational institution as Greenwich Hospital School was doubtless a very valuable reward to our seamen, through their children, for services rendered to the country; but bearing in mind the facilities that now exist for educating these boys through the ordinary State agencies, the question arises whether the deceased fathers' services might not be more beneficially rewarded by merging this £9,000 a year in a general fund for the benefit of their widows and children, instead of conferring a costly benefit (the educational part of which could be supplied by other means) upon only a few of these persons, and giving nothing at all to the rest. The recommendation of the Greenwich Hospital Committee respecting the proposed Nautical School for 600 boys, involves some serious issues. If the character of the school is to be altered, and it is no longer to exist as a charity except in so far as a preference of admission is given to the sons of men who have served in the Navy and in the Naval Reserve, the only justification that can be urged for its maintenance out of Greenwich Hospital funds is that among the objects contemplated by the establishment of Greenwich Hospital were the "encouragement of seamen and the improvement of navigation." Admitting for the moment that the cost of such a school could be fairly charged to Greenwich funds, the further question arises whether the boys would have to go through nearly the whole of the training-ship course after leaving Greenwich Hospital School, in which case the advantage of this school as a source of supply would, in a financial sense, be nullified, as any number of boys, not so highly educated, but educated sufficiently for Naval purposes, can be obtained from outside. If the Greenwich schoolboys would not be required to go through the training-ship course, the further question arises, whether the training that they would receive at the school would render them more valuable to the service than that obtained in the ordinary way through training-ships. If it can be shown—(1), That the training at Greenwich School would entirely supersede the training-ship course, and that the boys from the school would be the more desirable; (2), that 150 or 200 of the boys would every year be found qualified to enter the Navy direct; and (3), that one of the training-ships might consequently be put out of commission—then some advantage would accrue from the maintenance of this Nautical School. Under these conditions, however, the school would no longer possess any elements of charity, but would be neither more nor less than a substitute for a training-ship which would be paid for out of Greenwich funds. The Greenwich Hospital Committee in effect, therefore, propose to appropriate $\frac{6}{10}$ of the present cost of the school, or about £14,000 a year, for the benefit of the State, and to devote the remaining $\frac{4}{10}$, or about £9,000 a year, to purposes of charity, this charity to take the form of the maintenance and education of 400 children. These proposals are, we consider, open to the following objections:—1. The appropriation of Greenwich funds for State purposes, such as the training of boys for the Navy, is not, we think, consistent with their charitable character. 2. Less than half of the applicants for admission to the school are orphans, and in order, therefore, to maintain the full number of 1,000 boys, it has been necessary to widen the area of persons qualified, the result being that many are admitted who cannot be placed in the first rank of legitimate recipients of charitable relief. 3. The £9,000 a year which it is proposed to spend on the 400 boys would, we consider, be productive of far more benefit if included in the general fund proposed for pensions to widows and orphans. Such of these 400 boys as had lost their fathers (and were, therefore, legitimate objects of relief) would by this means receive money allowances towards their support, and their education would be dealt with by the Board Schools. We would, therefore, recommend that the money proposed to be spent on these 400 boys should be applied in the manner above described, and we are strongly inclined to the opinion that the cost of the Nautical School should be devoted to the same purpose. The fund for widows and orphans would by this means be augmented in a sufficient degree to permit of more adequate relief being afforded than would otherwise be possible, and the necessities of the class best entitled, after the seamen, to precedence in any charitable grants would thus be met. Before arriving at these conclusions, we have sought advice and information from those well qualified to offer them, one of these witnesses, from whom we have received very valuable evidence, being Mr. Loch, who, as Secretary of the Charity Organisation Society, is familiar with the habits and circumstances of the great class bordering on pauperism, to which the families of deceased seamen may be regarded as belonging. In the event of the abolition of Greenwich School, it would be necessary to provide for the education in approved schools of children in those cases where the character of the mother or guardian rendered it undesirable that they should have charge of the children, and it would further be necessary in special cases to provide for the education of boys who, under existing regulations, are eligible for admission to Greenwich School, but who, under our proposals, would not be eligible for direct grants from the widows' and orphans' fund. Should their Lordships concur in our suggestions in regard to boys, we think it might be desirable to consider whether some similar course should be followed in the cases of girls now educated in schools subsidised from Greenwich funds; but in throwing out this suggestion we are not unmindful of the fact that the salutary control and careful training of an asylum are of far more importance to girls than to boys, and that considerable discrimination would have to be exercised in dealing with these cases. It will be seen that the whole of our recommendations in respect to the appropriation of Greenwich funds have for their object the treatment of those funds strictly as a charity. But the due and proper application of charitable funds necessitates inspection, and we would recommend that, concurrently with the introduction of grants to widows and children, a system of efficient inspection of the habits and circumstances of the widows, and, in the cases of total orphans, of the guardians, should be instituted.

GREENWICH HOSPITAL INVESTMENTS.

Having made recommendations for the appropriation of the present annual surplus income of Greenwich Hospital, we have carefully considered whether the investments of the funds are such as to justify us in reckoning upon an undiminished income for the future. We think that we may rely upon the present income being maintained. Out of a net income of about £160,000 a year, only about £20,000 is derived from landed property. We do not anticipate any serious reduction of income on this head. On the contrary, some increase may arise, if no opportunity is lost of selling the lands, whenever a good price (say not less than 30 years' purchase of the net annual rental) can be obtained, and in investing the amounts so realised in good securities yielding a larger return. No less a sum than £1,600,000 is at present invested in Government Three per Cents., and it might be quite possible to reinvest a portion of this in other first-class securities which would yield a larger return.

HEADACHES AND DISORDERED STOMACH.—"After suffering for nearly two-and-a-half years from severe headache and disordered stomach, and after trying almost everything, and spending much money without finding any benefit, I was recommended to try your Fruit Salt. Before I had finished one bottle, I found it doing me a great deal of good, and now I am restored to my usual health. Others I know that have tried it have not enjoyed such good health for years.—Yours truly, ROBERT HUMPHREYS, Post Office, Barrasford." CAUTION.—Legal rights are protected in every civilised country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it, you have been imposed upon by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d. Reviews.

Morality. By Maurice Charles Hime, LL.D. (Messrs. Churchill.)—This little work, the production of the Head Master of Foyle College, Londonderry, presents considerable difficulty to a reviewer,—the purity of intention which influenced the author in preparing it for publication, and the ability which marks it throughout are abundantly made manifest; while at the same time there must be many persons indeed who would prefer that it had not been published, unless, perhaps, in some form of medical literature. Indeed, it was not until after years of consideration that the author finally resolved on letting it run its course entirely unrestricted. This fact, it must be admitted, shows at least that he has hit the public taste, and that the multitude hold opinions similar to his own. Mr. Hime deserves credit for the novel manner in which he probed public opinion upon the knotty point,—Should he publish, or not? In the spring and winter of 1875, he sent copies to many learned men, some of them guardians of youth, and appealed to them earnestly to give him a frank opinion upon the propriety of publishing. And what were the results of this commendable innovation? "All but about ten of those to whom I wrote promptly replied to me. About 100 of them approved of the essay, thought that it 'supplied a cruel want,' and was calculated to do much good to those for whom it was intended, and advised me to publish it. Ten or twelve liked it equally well, but yet they advised me not to publish it for my own sake. Twenty-three disapproved of it in toto, and twenty-nine were neutral." The author does not enlighten us as to the reasons why the twenty-three gave an uncompromising "No," and the twenty-nine failed to make up their minds. However, Mr. Hime gained what he wished; he fortified himself with an emphatic amount of public approval as to the course he determined on pursuing, and can now point with natural pride to the results of his canvass. As to the little work which has caused this commotion, all we can say is that it urges in expressive language the avoidance of conduct which reason and conscience, the two attributes vouchsafed to mankind, point out to be sinful, and that when doing so he illustrates what he means, with a particularity which surely might have been avoided.

The Line of Communications. By Lieut.-Col. G. A. Furse. (Clowes and Sons, Limited.)—There is nothing connected with modern warfare upon which more depends than the proper discharge of their duties by all those attached in any way to the line of communications. The success of an army in the field, in fact, depends upon the line of communication being kept open and properly protected. Col. Furse, in compiling the volume before us, has been actuated by a desire to show how a proper system of administration can best be secured. There is no greater authority on the subject. As Deputy-Assistant-Quartermaster-General at Head-quarters, Col. Furse has been afforded ample opportunities of acquiring knowledge, and he has brought to bear on the preparation of his work an amount of practical experience which enables him to go into the matter exhaustively, and point out all that is needed to ensure the wants being supplied of the troops operating at the front. The volume should be in the hands of all those who wish to make soldiering a profession, for it is full of valuable hints, data, and information.

A Month at the School of Instruction. By Major C. D. Davies. (T. G. Johnson.)—As every officer of Militia and Volunteers ought to undergo the month's course at a school of instruction, it follows that every officer not yet certificated should be in possession of this little book, which has been compiled with a view of giving those who are looking forward to joining a school of instruction an insight into the work that will be expected of them at Aldershot or Wellington Barracks. Major Davies has been most particular in furnishing all necessary information, and a young officer who goes to school after perusing this vade-mecum, and does not pass, had better resign at once, for he certainly will be no loss to the service. Many officers have gone to school during the past twelve years completely ignorant as to what the school course really meant. There will be no excuse for anybody doing this in future, as Major Davies enlightens them on every point on which the slightest doubt can exist.

The Management and Treatment of the Horse. By a Stud Groom. (The London Literary Society.)—Every day's experience shows the increasing value of horses, as well as the necessity that exists for paying strict attention to their management. The bad treatment to which they are constantly subjected excites a feeling of pity, but few owners of horses used for ordinary purposes are aware of the numerous occult diseases to which they are liable. The little book now published takes a practical grasp of the subject, and if carefully studied may prove of valuable assistance in the management of the stable. It enumerates the diseases from which these animals suffer, and invariably points out a remedy. It also treats the subject of the horse generally, showing how a careful purchaser should be guided, and how very, very cautious a tyro should be. The index to the book, enumerating the ills that horse-flesh is heir to, is a formidable one indeed. Strange enough, its author wholly omits mention of a really important evil habit, which may be truthfully called incurable, and that is, "crib-biting." It may be checked by mechanical contrivances, but in the end the animal's wind will be perfectly broken; in fact, the best thing to do with a determined crib-biter is to shoot him, as the evil habit is a most "catching" one, and may easily infect a stable.

"TIME TRIES ALL THINGS."—Of the numerous preparations announced for promoting the growth of the hair few survive, even in name beyond a limited period, whilst ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, with an unparalleled reputation of more than 80 years, is still considered by the public to be the best and safest preserver and beautifier of the hair ever yet produced. They who prefer it can now have the oil of a golden colour, without in any way losing its beneficial effects. Sold everywhere. Sizes, 3s 6d, 7s, 10s 6d, and 21s.

GRAND MILITARY AND NAVAL ASSAULT-AT-ARMS.

Under the immediate patronage of their R.H. the Prince and Princess of Wales and the other members of the Royal Family, there was held on Monday last, at the Royal Albert Hall, a grand Military and Naval Assault-at-Arms, which attracted to this noble building an assembly which could hardly be excelled either in point of social standing or numbers. The building was literally crammed to repletion. The performance, too, was well worthy of the assembly gathered together to witness it. Lieut.-Col. Gordon Cleather, Inspector of Gymnasia, assisted by Capt. Fox, the newly-appointed assistant-inspector, had, with the express sanction of H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, prepared a most attractive programme, and was rewarded for his pains by selling every available seat in the house, thus netting a very handsome sum in aid of the Egyptian War Fund, in whose interest the performance was held. Long before the doors were thrown open, the rank and fashion of the metropolis had driven up to the Albert Hall, and the long line of private equipages, and the assembled pedestrians in the neighbourhood, promised well for the attendance and patronage of the public. A troop of the Life Guards, wearing their Egyptian decorations, guarded the building, being stationed by files at each door, besides perambulating the galleries and corridors. Inside each of the five doors leading to the arena were posted a file of these stalwart troopers. The combined bands of the Household troops enlivened the scene with their brilliant uniforms. Unfortunately, they did not play well together, the time kept differing in some of the bands. At 2.30 p.m. a squad of Lancers from the Cavalry Depôt at Canterbury entered the arena, and went through the "lance exercise" in good style. They were quickly followed at the parallel bars by the celebrated Gymnastic Staff Instructors of Aldershot who won such golden laurels in Sweden, Staff Serjts. Tobin, Hoad, Capper, and Hawkins again distinguishing themselves in a most marked manner. A squad of the Royal Marine Light Infantry were next put through the "bayonet exercise" with that remarkable precision for which this fine corps is so justly celebrated. Then followed a squad of the Royal Horse Guards, composed of colossal men, at cavalry sword exercise, thus enabling the spectators to realise what the Egyptians had to face. The boxing between Messrs. Croysdill and Vert, of the German Gymnastic Society, and others created much fun, but by far the greatest interest was centred in Professor Horner's boys, these two little fellows reminding one of a couple of bantams, so game were they. By this time the Royal loggias had filled. Strange to say, no notice was taken by either the band or the audience of the arrival of the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and the rest of the Royal Family. The fencing bout with foils, between Monsieur A. Thieriet, Professeur d'Escrime of the London Fencing Club, and his rival, Monsieur Duret, Professeur d'Escrime of the Paris Fencing Club, which had been delayed for the arrival of the Prince of Wales, now came off. It was a splendid exhibition of skill, in which, however, Mons. Thieriet, of the London Club, had by far the best of it. The Nordenfelt anti-torpedo-boat gun was then wheeled into the arena by a party of seamen belonging to H.M.S. Excellent, who worked this valuable invention extremely well, and to the evident satisfaction of the spectators. Capt. Shaw's Fire Brigade detachment went through some interesting exercise, illustrating the mode of saving life by means of the fire-escape, when Capt. Anstruther, of the Royal Artillery, brought Part I. of the performance to an end with some clever and well-executed sword feats. The pipers of the 72nd Duke of Albany's Highlanders now performed in the arena, and subsequently marched round the building, even up into and round the gallery, and back, amid much applause. The cutlass exercise of the seamen gunners of the Excellent did not show to advantage after the splendid sword-exercise of the Royal Horse Guards; but the single-stick exercise of the boys of St. Vincent, especially the loose play in the mêlée, highly amused the spectators. Capt. Fox, assistant-inspector of gymnasia, proved himself to be a perfect swordsman in his encounter with Serjt.-Instr. Field; and the detachment of the Royal Horse Artillery maintained the high reputation of their splendid regiment in dismounting and remounting both gun and carriage (9-pounder) in some 90 sec. Smart work! The squad of the Post-Office Volunteers, two of the men wearing the Egyptian medal, were now put through the bayonet exercise, and went through their work with a precision that led several officers present to actually ask which did the best,—the Marines or the Volunteers. A higher compliment could hardly have been paid to this fine squad of "England's Salvation Army," as the force is now termed among the masses. The horizontal-bar again brought the gymnastic staff to the front. Nothing could well exceed the high training of these men, and their splendid form was the subject of universal comment. We regret that neither Serjt.-Major Clisham nor Qrmr.-Serjt. Adams performed, as the former on the bar, and the latter by his sword tricks, won universal applause in Sweden. This staff also performed on the horse, the double-somersaults of Staff Serjts. Capper and Hawkins receiving the well-deserved applause of the occupants of the Royal boxes. Here excitement reached its highest pitch, when the tug-of-war commenced between the boys of H.M.S. St. Vincent, under Lieut. Fulford, R.N., and the boys of Woolwich Garrison, for the occasion under Lieut.-Col. Gordon Cleather. The military team was at least half a head taller, and seemed composed of bigger-made lads than the Naval. Yet there was no mistake who won. The boys of the St. Vincent, with naked feet and heels together, awaited the command "Pull!" with evident suspense. No sooner given, than they fairly ran away with the Woolwich lads. The excitement among the Royal children was immense, and even the Duke of Edinburgh appeared to think himself once more on board the Euryalus, participating in similar sports, so heartily did he applaud the sailor lads below him. So ended one of the most successful entertainments ever held in the Royal Albert Hall.

TORPEDO EXPLOSIVES AND EXPLOSIONS.

One of the most interesting features of torpedo warfare is that which relates to subaqueous explosions, both in relation to the actual effect and the grand spectacle afforded by the firing of a large quantity of explosive at some distance below the surface of the water. In the beginning of the employment of torpedoes in Naval warfare, only very small charges of gunpowder were used, but in the American Civil War some torpedoes were laid down containing upwards of 2,000 lb. of that explosive; and the terrific effect of the explosion of such a charge beneath the bottom of a wooden ship was practically evidenced on May 24, 1864, when the Commodore Jones (so well known to all torpedo aspirants) was actually blown into fragments. As Lieutenant-Commander Barnes, U.S.N., states, "she absolutely crumbled to pieces, dissolved, as it were, in mid-air, enveloped by the falling spray, mud, water, and smoke." During the last ten years, experiments have been conducted at different periods, in various countries, more especially in America, England, France, Austria, and Sweden, to ascertain the actual effect of the explosion of submarine mines containing explosive charges differing in size and nature, and placed at various depths and distances from the side of targets representing sections of modern ironclads. Many of these experiments will be found described in Lieutenant Sleeman's work on Torpedoes, and now we have the series completed up to the latest date by the publication of General Abbot's (U.S.A.) report on the exhaustive experiments conducted by order of the American Government at the Engineer Torpedo School (Willet's Point), under the direction of that officer. The vast importance of this work will be best estimated by stating the fact that 697 experiments of submarine explosions have been carried out by the U.S. Engineer Torpedo Corps during the last eight years. As our Government have ordered a mixed Committee to be formed, comprising Naval and Military torpedo officers, and civilians especially learned in the study of explosives, who will take in hand the whole question of submarine explosions, more particularly relating to torpedo warfare, it would seem to be a specially à propos time to note how this subject stands at the present moment. Different natures of explosive compounds are used for torpedo work in different countries; for instance, we employ gun-cotton, the Americans prefer dynamite No. 1 (giant powder), the Austrians lithofracteur, &c., and now a new explosive compound has been discovered, which goes by the name of explosive or nitro-gelatine, and which promises to supersede all other explosives for torpedo work. The following figures, taken from General Abbot's report, enables a comparison to be drawn between the relative intensity of action of the following explosives when fired under water:—Explosive gelatine, 117; dynamite No. 1, 100; lithofracteur, 94; gun-cotton, 87. The reason of this difference which exists in the nature of the explosive used in different countries being due in a great measure to its cost, and the ease with which it can be obtained in large quantities when required, for it is not advisable to have large stores of any of these high explosives kept in the forts or arsenals, &c., during peace time, and also to the considerable difference of opinion which still exists as to which is the most suitable of all the numerous explosive compounds that are at present in the market. To determine once for all which is the most suitable explosive compound for torpedo work will probably be one of the principal objects of the newly-appointed Committee on Submarine Explosions. An explosive compound for use in torpedoes must possess, amongst others, the following features:—Safety in handling and in transportation; convenience in loading; greatest intensity of action when exploded in torpedo cases beneath the water; non-deterioration, or danger due to its being subjected to freezing, thawing, or wetting. Nitro-gelatine bids fair to fulfil most of these qualifications for a perfect torpedo explosive, but requires to be subjected to lengthened tests before a final verdict can be accorded. Next comes dynamite No. 1, and then gun-cotton, which is placed last because its intensity of action when fired under water is less than for the other two; but in point of safety it is superior to dynamite, and this and the last feature on the above list are really the two most important ones. It is indisputable that 100 lb. of gun-cotton exploded in contact with the bottom of the strongest built armour-plated vessel would effect her destruction; and as it is not subject to deterioration under the conditions met with on service, and is perfectly safe to handle and easy to manufacture, it seems to us advisable to waive any slight want in intensity of action that it may be charged with, and retain it for our torpedo service, in preference to any other existent explosive compounds, which, however minute, do not possess the element of safety in so high a degree. It is stated in General Abbot's report that dynamite, when handled by inexperienced men, often causes headaches; but we are of opinion that many of those who, by reason of their being non-specialists in the handling of dynamite, have suffered thereby, would be extremely thankful if only a headache had been the actual result, instead of broken limbs and sometimes loss of life. No doubt the General refers only to the effect of the unpleasant fumes which arise from dynamite when not carefully handled. In the war service of torpedoes inexperienced men will often have to be employed. No charge of less than 100 lb. would ever be used for contact mines, and for ground mines it seems far more advisable to have a number of them, containing small charges (150 lb. to 200 lb.), moored in groups and fired simultaneously, in the place of the method hitherto adopted of a few heavily-charged mines, which facts further tend to the retention of gun-cotton as the torpedo service explosive. The superior safety qualities of gun-cotton over other explosive compounds is owing principally to the fact that it can be used when wet, provided a very small charge of the dry material with a fulminate fuse be employed as the detonator. This necessity for a special nature of detonator has been raised as an objection to the use of this explosive, as well as to the form in which it is manufactured, owing to the trouble experienced in packing the torpedo with its charge of gun-cotton and detonator; but all submarine mines and torpedoes generally will be kept ready charged, and the cases can be so constructed that this objection may be treated as a mere matter of detail, and anyhow cannot justify a more easily manipulated, but less safe, explosive being adopted in its place. To proceed with the subject of submarine explosions, the principal object to be achieved by the institution of experiments with submarine mines has been to determine the amount of resistance that is offered by the best class of modern ironclad hulls to the action of different sized charges of the most powerful explosives when fired at varying distances from the hull beneath the water, and at the same time to experimentally analyse the laws governing the transmission of the shock through the fluid. As it has been impossible to use in such experiments an actual ironclad, on account of the costliness of such an undertaking, the targets that have been employed for such purposes have only represented sections of the most powerful ships, and therefore the results, though exceedingly interesting and valuable, lack reality. The English experiments in 1874 were carried out against the Oberon, constructed to represent the Hercules, but she only weighed complete about one-twelfth of the actual weight of the Hercules; the Swedish target used for the same purpose in 1874-5 also represented a section of the side of the Hercules, with the exception of her armour-plating, and a similar target was adopted for the Austrian trials in 1875; while, for the later American experiments, 1875 to 1877, a target 20 feet square, by 3 feet deep, was constructed to accurately represent a section of the Monarch's bottom; its weight was about 26 tons, but to in some measure compensate for this want of weight, and reduce the tendency so comparatively light a construction would have to yield to the shock, and so reduce the effect of the explosion, sixteen large mushroom anchors were connected in pairs by chain cables of $\frac{7}{8}$-inch diameter over the deck of the target, and the cables were hove taut at low-water, and further strained by a tidal rise of some 8 feet. Though all these precautions were taken to supply the deficiency in the actual weight of this target, yet the data obtained in this and other similar trials can only be considered in regard to the effect of the explosion of a submarine mine on the hull itself, but does not represent the actual effect of the same on a ship fully equipped and manned, with full steam up, and at the time of the occurrence most probably steaming ahead. It would appear that the explosion of a mine containing 200 lb. of dynamite or gun-cotton in close proximity to the bottom of a first-class ironclad, representing an energy per square inch on the surface of the hull exposed to the shock of about 10,000 lb., would have infinitely more disastrous effects than is afforded by these incomplete experiments,—for instance, the displacement of a boiler, condenser, or other parts of the machinery, falling of the lower masts, dismounting of a gun or two, &c., and also, last, though not least, the complete demoralisation of the crew; and therefore, in the experiments of a similar nature about to be undertaken in this country, we trust something considerably in advance of what has hitherto been attempted is in contemplation, or otherwise we fail to see the object of an expenditure of the public money to prove what has been already established, that 100 lb. of an explosive compound when fired in contact, or 200 lb. at a distance of 12 to 20 feet, will result in a fatal shock to any existent first-class armour-plated ship. It may, no doubt, be extremely interesting from a commercial point of view to know exactly what amount of explosive is required to obtain certain specific results. But for the torpedo service such is not really necessary, for the charge of a submarine mine will be dependent on whether it is to act as a contact or ground mine, and not on what nature of vessel it will be used against, 100 lb. and 200 lb. being respectively sufficient for each nature of mine for the purpose of effecting, on explosion, serious injury to the most powerfully-constructed ship of war. But if the slightest doubt exists as to the power of such charges, then it is easy to increase them each by one-half. All that is actually required to be known on this point is, the least instantaneous pressure per square inch that will destroy a first-class man-of-war of the present day; and this has been practically and conclusively proved by the United States Engineer Torpedo Corps, under the direction of General Abbot. The iron target previously mentioned, and held down by 16 anchors and cables, was so seriously damaged that it sunk in 30 minutes, and also all but one of the $\frac{7}{8}$-inch chain cables were snapped, by a charge of 200 lb. of dynamite placed 30·8 feet below the centre of the bottom of the target, the observed pressure being in this case 4,596 lb. per square inch. This target having been raised and repaired, was subjected to a final experiment, but was not in this case held down by the 16 anchors and cables, when 200 lb. of dynamite was exploded only 12·1 feet below the centre of the bottom; here, though only 36 per cent. of its developed intensity of action was expended in effecting rupture, the remaining 64 per cent. being expended in effecting motion, yet the target was completely destroyed, and sank in a few seconds, the observed pressure here being 6,523 lb. per square inch. The system of placing the submarine mines ought to be such that they should be exploded only in close proximity to the hostile vessel, that is to say, at a distance not greater than 20 feet horizontally, for a charge of 200 lb. of gun-cotton, and that wherever possible contact mines should always be employed. We often hear it stated that our torpedo service is far behind that of many other Powers, failing principally in the want of constant practice; and most certainly in regard to the practice with torpedo boats, we do fall grievously behind both the Russians and Italians. Then we have been informed that the reason so little is known in regard to the advances made in our torpedo service, is not because there is nothing to record, but on account of the perfect secrecy observed in connection therewith. We sincerely trust that such is the true state of the case, though we can hardly credit this latter statement. In conclusion, we would impress on this newly-appointed Committee the necessity that exists of settling the vexed questions, as to what is the best system to be obtained for the firing and testing of the submarine mines; also, to endeavour to secure a thoroughly efficient mechanical mine; and further, to decide on the best system of mooring the mines, and to come to some definite and satisfactory conclusion as to the value and mode of manipulating the electric light for torpedo warfare.

Art.

"Alexandria," "Kassassin," "Tel-el-Kebir."—The Fine Arts Society have on view at their gallery in New Bond Street three pictures which represent some of the most striking episodes in the history of the recent campaign in Egypt. First, Mr. Wyllie's picture of the bombardment of Alexandria; second, Mr. Woodville's charge of the Household Cavalry at Kassassin; and thirdly, M. de Neuville's splendid painting of the storming of Tel-el-Kebir. Probably the most striking incident connected with the last-named work is the fact that it was painted within a period of thirty days. Altogether, it is one of transcendant merit, and quite equal to any executed by the same master. Mr. Woodville's spirited sketch of the charge at Kassassin may be truly designated a remarkable performance, sufficiently powerful to strike terror into the hearts of ordinary beholders. It is a matter of wonder, as well as of congratulation, that although "the Arab marksmen cowered down upon the sand to avoid the slashing sabres, they were hewn down in rows; and although, when the flood was past, the desert looked like a grim field after a hurricane, whose crop had been armed men, the British loss was, nevertheless, comparatively light, Lord Wolseley's despatch giving a total for all arms of seven killed and about 60 wounded." Mr. Wyllie's pictures of "The Bombardment," though unlikely to awaken so much interest as the others, deserves approbation. The notable features in them are the dashing way in which the dashing little Condor and her dashing captain performed their parts, and the wonderful blue of the Mediterranean." If we mistake not, this exhibition of paintings (which are eloquently commented on by Mr. Lewis Wingfield) will attract many visitors during the season.

A military correspondent writing to an Indian contemporary gives some reasons why the Indian Commissariat is unpopular. He says:—"Ask half the officers who are in it now, and who are nolens volens forced to remain in it, if they would remain if they could return to regimental duty? Look at the system of accounts, made simply for feeding the myrmidons of the examiner and for driving executive officers perfectly frantic! A system by which an enormous and expensive establishment is kept up in order to check 'pice,' and by which Government may save a few hundred rupees per annum in each circle; a system which is so entwined by red-tape, as to be utterly useless, and which in every emergency breaks down! If not, why had lakhs to be wiped off from the Cabul and the Kurum Valley accounts, and also in several frontier expeditions? If Government wants to know why the Commissariat is so unpopular, let them order a committee to investigate the system of check, and they will probably find a means of making the service more popular, by simplifying the accounts, and thus giving officers less worry, and they will curtail the expenditure enormously by reducing the establishments of the examiner and somewhat of the executive officers."

The introduction of a change in the costume of the Madras Cavalry has led to Sir Frederick Roberts urging on Government the advisability of also doing away with the present belts and swords, which, it is considered, would be ridiculous to wear on the Alkalik and Kamarband uniform, and substituting the Mackenzie equipment, as in the Bengal Cavalry. The Government of India have accorded their sanction to the above proposal, and the Cavalry pattern sword and steel scabbard now in use will be displaced by the native shaped sword (tulwar), with wood and leather scabbard, thus, it is hoped, improving the dash of the Madras Cavalry.

OUR CRUISERS:

THEIR INEFFICIENCY AND EXCESSIVE COST.

Nobody with any knowledge of the subject believes that our Navy is what it ought to be, or even what it might be, were the annual ten to twelve millions wisely spent. A wise man has said, "Nothing is so difficult as to alter the policy of individuals or nations who allow themselves to be persuaded that they are the envy of surrounding nations, and the admiration of the world. Time and adversity can alone operate in such cases." We have all pretty correct ideas that we are at the head of maritime nations, but we do not recollect the responsibility that this entails. No matter what party is in power, the head officials on every public occasion deem it their sacred duty to iterate and reiterate what a splendid state the Navy is in. It is certain that, in an average audience, not one person in fifty knows anything of the matter, and so this "windy babblement" floats about till it gets to be believed; and the most melancholy part of it is that the officials, by dint of constant repetition, have got to believe it too. We propose, in the next few weeks, to show our present position as regards cruisers, how bad it is, and that it has been brought about by reckless and unprofitable expenditure; that this has disastrously reacted on our officers, and rendered necessary a compulsory retirement scheme, and long periods of enforced idleness. We propose to illustrate this extravagance by examples and figures from the dockyard Blue-books, to compare the sea speeds, structural strength, coal endurance, weight-carrying capacity, and cost of our best mail steamers, with our cruisers; and to show the inferiority of the latter, and the reason of it. And though we are not of those who believe that the maximum expenditure on our Navy has been reached, still we think the country has a right through Parliament to require that, before it gives more money, it shall be satisfied that the large sums now given are properly expended. And, in conclusion, we propose to trace out the line the remedy should take. We may state at once, that in giving prominence to this subject, we do not think the days of ironclads are over. We think that the best of all teachers on this matter is not theory, but experience; and our experience—limited, it may be—shows that to engage a fort or another ironclad, an ironclad is essential. Still less would we attempt to build cruisers, that with any fair prospects of success could engage an ironclad. The first line on this point we think to be, that Britain should possess a sufficient number of ironclads to oppose any probable combination of the European Naval Powers; and in estimating the probability, we do not think it necessary to put France and Germany or Russia and Turkey on the same side. We would always have two or three building to keep up our stock, and to keep on the level with improvements in shipbuilding and marine engineering. But we must also state that we think we have sufficient ironclads, both built and building, to more than satisfy the conditions we have sketched, and that the ironclad question is by no means a pressing one. But if we ask ourselves,—What about our cruisers, the vessels that are to put down privateers and protect our commerce; is the answer as satisfactory? We think that the answer to this question might be adapted from that celebrated chapter in the natural history of Ireland on snakes. "There are no snakes," and there are no cruisers. This statement is tolerably distinct, and may at first sight appear to many as incredulous, but it is literally and accurately true. "'Tis true, 'tis pity; but pity 'tis, 'tis true." A very little attention to Mr. Barnaby's late lecture at the Royal United Service Institution, and his speculations as to the Servia and Alaska, will show that this question has at last been crushed in upon him, and the present Government are wisely sending abroad guns to arm our merchant steamers, in case of need. This wise project is due neither to a soldier, nor a sailor, nor even to a Government official, but to Sir Donald Currie, a man who commenced life in an office, and is now a large and successful steamship owner. The want of cruisers has been a constant theme in our own columns. Hardly a week has passed that we have not pointed it out, and the subject has not received the attention it deserves. Having none, the wisest thing the Government can do is to improvise cruisers, or take steps to do so. But this should not retard, but accelerate our building. Let us go back twenty years, and see the progress that has been made in private steamers. It is well known that the North Atlantic trade is the most onerous in which a ship can engage, and in it there is the most competition. Consequently, we find here the strongest, the fastest, and, in a word, the best ships. We give here a table, covering twenty years, containing the particulars of certain steamers that were, when built, the fastest and best, and later on we shall give their contemporaries in the Navy List, and compare them. Two steamers from each of the great companies that devote themselves to first-class passengers are given, viz., the Cunard, Inman, Guion, White Star. These ships have a high freeboard, the highest, the Servia, has 16 feet 2 inches, and this is the only one built of steel. It is worthy of remark that they are all single screws. We give in Table 2 the logs of the three fastest steamers during the second half of 1882; and in our next article, we shall give the logs of those steamers which (in the event of war) we shall have to provide against as privateers :—

Valorous, Portsmouth. Homeward Bound.—Encounter, Malta. Rocket, Devonport. Seagull, Devonport. Lily, Malta. Thetis and Gannet, St. Vincent, Cape de Verdes, care of H.B.M.'s Consul; mail May 8. Thalia, Aden. Firefly, Devonport, unless otherwise addressed. Moorhen and Sheldrake, Aden.

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in packets, labelled—"JAMES EPPS and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London."—Also makers of Epps's Chocolate Essence.

THE WARRANT OFFICERS OF THE NAVY.

SIR,—In reply to a question put by Sir H. Drummond-Wolff, in the House of Commons, on Monday, respecting a circular which appears to have been recently issued by the warrant officers of the Navy, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, the Secretary of the Admiralty, said :—"I have seen a copy of the circular referred to, but I have no means of knowing how far it really represents the views of the warrant officers, as it is published anonymously." Now, Sir, not only the warrant officers, but other classes of officers in the Navy would feel grateful to the Secretary of the Admiralty, if he would be so good as to express how as a body, officers can, without incurring the pains and penalties threatened by the regulations, make known the grievances and anomalies under which they may consider themselves to be labouring. In the case of the warrant officers, the course I would suggest for that very deserving class to adopt is, for those serving on board every ship at home and abroad to take a copy of the circular to their respective captains, and assure them that it represents their views as a body. Possibly, then, the Secretary of the Admiralty would be satisfied on the point.—I am, &c.

J. M.

SIR,—Allow me to thank you most heartily on behalf of the Warrant Officers of the Navy, for your very favourable comments on the pamphlet they have issued. At the same time, I hope I am not unnecessarily taking up too much of your space by respectfully pointing out a slight error you make in regard to Chief Gunners, Boatswains, and Carpenters. You speak of Chief Warrant Officers. Now, Sir, there is no such rank in the Service. Chief Gunners, Boatswains, and Carpenters are commissioned officers, their commissions being precisely the same as for Lieutenants, the chiefs having to pay the 5s. stamp duty on their commissions, the same as other officers. You will therefore see that the small boon asked for, viz., a step in rank on retirement, is not a point that involves the question of a commission. The chiefs have from between 20 to 25 years' service as officers before they become entitled to their promotion to a higher grade, and when I tell you that a non-commissioned officer in the Army or Marines who may be promoted to Qrmr. to-day, and should retire to-morrow, would have the relative rank of Capt., with all its attendant advantages of widow's pension and compassionate allowance, and if he had served ten years as Qrmr. would have the rank of Major, which corresponds to our Senior Lieuts.' relative rank in the Army, you will see that the chiefs are only asking to be treated relatively the same as their brethren in the Army or Marines; and surely the Royal Navy deserves as much consideration as the Army? Trusting you will not deem my remarks impertinent,—I am, &c.,

CHIEF GUNNER.

[The Admiralty having made Chief Gunners, Boatswains, and Carpenters commissioned officers, should most assuredly place them on the same footing as those holding relative rank in the Army. We refer all concerned to our editorial remarks on the pay of Naval Officers, when, no doubt, the reason why the Admiralty will do nothing except for that class of which the Board is composed will be understood. Public opinion will soon remedy these matters.—ED. A. & N. G.]

LIEUTENANTS, R.N.

SIR,—Had Lord Salisbury had the advantage or disadvantage of spending a commission in a ward-room mess, he would know that the time for preventing the discontent of Naval Lieutenants has long gone by. Whether, in any case, his logic as to the means of averting the catastrophe is sound, is more than doubtful. Lieutenants are and have been for some years emphatically "a discontented class," and are likely to remain so until their prospects improve. Their discontent is also likely to grow, and go on increasing until the climax is reached, and something serious happens. Of course, no one supposes that their duties will be less thoroughly done in the meantime; but surely this should not tell against them, as it undoubtedly does. The policy of the Medical Naval officers in "starving out" the Admiralty is periodically successful, but we cannot use this method as Lord Northbrook hints in his speech, and therefore—as he also hints—we may go on as we are. But parents may be deterred from sending their sons into the Navy. The Admiralty may in this manner be starved. I believe we would not follow the example of the Irish police if we could, consequently justice is denied. I am not writing to point out our grievances. You, Sir, have ably done this. But I am desirous of calling attention to the First Lord's want of sympathy, Lord Salisbury's strategy, and to return thanks to Lord Belmore for his determined stand on our behalf.—I am, &c.,

ANOTHER LIEUTENANT.

Extensive alterations are being made in the starting gear of the Opal, and the departure of the vessel is likely to be delayed for another month.

The Goshawk is to be brought forward for sea with all available despatch for service on the Australian station, the Admiralty having decided to supersede the obsolete class of sailing schooner at present doing duty on that station by a small class of steam vessels.

MACHINE-GUNS AND HOME DEFENCE.

Sir,—Having had much experience as an Artillery Officer in India, and also in command of a Volunteer Artillery Corps in England, I venture to offer a few observations on the latter branch of the service, which I think may be useful at this time. The late Volunteer Review at Brighton, like all its predecessors, was of little or no use as a means of instruction to the artillery present; and would probably give the infantry such an inadequate idea of the difficulties and dangers they would be exposed to from an enemy's artillery as might lead to serious reverses in the event of their being called upon to take the field—a contingency never to be lost sight of. From the organisation of the volunteer artillery, I am fully convinced that they can never become really efficient as field batteries. The expense of horsing the guns, unless borne by the country, and the time required to teach driving (not riding, as men able to ride can be found, but driving on all kinds of ground, which requires much training and frequent practice, for both men and horses), are sufficient reasons for discouraging the volunteer artillery from trying to become field batteries in the ordinary sense. How, then, can they be made useful for the defence of the country, except as garrison artillery or as heavy batteries of position? I would suggest, by arming them to some extent with machine-guns, Gatlings, Nordenfelts, or some other kind. These weapons, being mounted on very light carriages, are easily moved by drag-ropes, and they might be used in manœuvres to represent batteries of field artillery. They would be also, I consider, of the utmost value in many situations, in the hands of the coast corps in opposing landings. Say that the Sussex Artillery were armed with machine-guns, and trained to use them. From the Fort at Newhaven to Brighton a battery of these, easily moved along the road at the top of the cliff, supported by a couple of companies of infantry, should be able to prevent a landing, at least for a time. Another would do the same from Seaford to Eastbourne. There is, I think, only Berling Gap to cover in this section. The Fort at Newhaven would cover Seaford Bay, and the Redoubt at Eastbourne a portion of Pevensey Bay. Lewes may be considered an important strategical point, and well worth protecting from being suddenly seized on. In fact, in this light, it is of far greater importance than Brighton, which would only be of use from the supplies to be obtained from it. The railway value of the latter place can be destroyed by blocking Clayton tunnel; while Lewes commands the railways, viâ Keymer and Tunbridge Wells, with their connecting links. This point should be therefore protected from a sudden attack by a small force till a larger body was sent from the main army to hold it. I have selected this section of coast as an example, because Brighton is so well known to the Volunteers; but many other sections could be equally protected by machine-guns. I know it is a question whether arms of this description should be in the hands of the artillery or infantry; but I venture to express my opinion that they should belong to the artillery, and more especially to the Volunteer Artillery, for the following reasons:—(a.) They have some experience in handling guns both in firing and repository exercises, which latter should enable them to get light pieces over bad ground with comparative ease. (b.) From the practice they have in carbine shooting, they would be able as well, or almost as well, as the infantry corps, to estimate the effect of small-arm fire, and to know when to employ it. (c.) If these guns were attached to, and worked by, infantry, sections would have to be detailed specially to work them, and they would probably be used in too scattered formations. In fact, it would be a reversion to the old system of "galloper guns," as used by cavalry before the advent of regular Horse Artillery, or to the system of "battalion guns" with infantry: whereas in the hands of the artillery, a concentration of machine guns could be effected where wanted. If two of these guns were attached to each artillery corps of four or more batteries, and one to each station where two batteries could use them, it would be enough for drill purposes. For manœuvring drills, some old ship field gun-carriages, or old H.A. 6-pounder carriages might be issued to corps. Details as to practice ammunition and its conveyance would have to be considered. But I will not ask for more of your space, as this letter has already run to greater length than I had intended.—I am, &c., Experience.

SURGEON-MAJOR THORBURN'S CASE.

Sir,—The Earl of Morley, in his speech on my case, made some statements which I am sure he made without looking at the papers in his office connected with the case. The Lord Truro examined all the original evidence in the case and full notes of the Court of Inquiry, and his statement could not, therefore, be, what Lord Morley characterised it, an ex parte statement. I kept all the original evidence. The noble Earl failed to notice that the foundation of my whole case rests upon the fact that the Lucknow stewards hastily, on a Sunday morning, connected me with the supposed misconduct of the rider of a pony by the public records of the money transactions of the race meeting. The stewards stated that those records, the lottery papers, showed me to win a large sum of money, whereas they showed nothing of the kind. This hasty, false step led to all the trouble that followed. They refused to admit they were wrong. Lord Morley then stated that every officer whose character was impugned should at once place the matter in the hands of his commanding officer, giving the Queen's Regulations as the authority, which, he says, I disregarded He omitted to mention, however, that the matter was in the hands of my commanding officer, Gen. Cureton, my chief accuser, and that the Queen's Regulations state that it was his (Gen. Cureton's) duty to investigate, in his military capacity, at once and on the spot, the charge made against me (vide Queen's Regulations, sect. 6, par. 52). I, however, at once and on the spot, did place copies of all charges against me in the hands of the Deputy-Surgeon-General. If Lord Morley will take the trouble to look at the documents in his office, he will find this recorded. He will find it recorded that I refused to leave India until a court of inquiry had been granted, though, after sending in my defence, the Commander-in-Chief in India wished me to go home and say nothing more about the matter. I hold documentary evidence of this fact. Who, then, broke the Queen's Regulations, myself or the Indian Military authorities? The noble Earl then alluded to the forged document, and stated that it was drawn up without any desire to deceive the Commander-in-Chief in India. If this were the case, why was the document all in one handwriting, and Mr. Dickson's name at the end of it? Why was it drawn up in Lucknow, but forwarded with a letter dated from Calcutta, where the man whose name was forged lives? Why did Gen. Cureton call a Lucknow report a Calcutta Turf Club Report, "conscientiously and undoubtedly," when it was written in Lucknow? The Earl of Morley holds my solicitor's written opinion about this document. He next stated that I impugned the honesty of the Lucknow stewards. Was it honest to state that the lottery papers convicted me (vide their letter of Aug. 18, 1881) of dishonesty, when they admitted at the Court of Inquiry that on Aug. 17, 1881, they knew that statement to be untrue? Lord Morley states that the Court of Inquiry were guilty of great irregularity in expressing an opinion on my case. Can it be properly called irregular, to congratulate a man who has been wrongly accused, on establishing his innocence? However, whether the Court of Inquiry behaved irregularly or not, the fact remains, they congratulated me. The Commander-in-Chief in India has stated in writing that, in his opinion, the evidence, being presumptive, was not sufficient to lay before a court-martial, but he presumed I was guilty. If presumptive, why hold him guilty? Is this fair, is this English? No mention is made of what the presumptive evidence was. The noble Earl explained to the House of Lords how a dishonest man was presented with a gratuity of £2,500, and he mentions that Mr. Childers and Lord Hartington considered me guilty of swindling; but he omitted to mention a single fact against me in substantiation of that charge, except that, in his estimation, I had "failed to remove the suspicion cast upon me." This comes rather badly from a man who avoids all allusion to Lord Truro's remarks regarding the refusal of a court-martial, which would have had the judicial power denied to a court of inquiry.—I am, &c., D. Thorburn.

Sir,—It is with some diffidence that I venture to beg space in your paper for a few remarks in connection with a subject you may consider exhausted—the proposed, and, I fear, intended change from the national colour hitherto predominating among our military uniforms. A question which would appear, not unreasonably, to present itself is,—Have those most concerned been consulted in the matter? I maintain they have not. The officers of the British Army are ignored; as to obtaining the opinion of the rank and file, they, presumably, cannot form one of even comparative value, should it be brought into contact with the ideas of the able, though mufti-clad gentleman, whose long military experience has gained him the position of War Minister for England. Now, we acknowledge ourselves to be following the lead of a nation whose experience in war has been on a grander, though less varied scale than our own. Yet it is a curious fact that, when, some two and a half years ago, the German authorities were considering the advisability of abolishing bayonet instruction, a circular was sent round to every regiment in the service, and the opinions of the officers of each corps noted as to the matter under consideration. Now, if the German regimental officers, who have been engaged on no service since the Franco-German War, are able to come to a valued decision on the point alluded to, surely the Englishmen, who have fought in so many climates, under such varied circumstances, might be supposed competent to enter formally into the present discussion. The German officers are clever and hard-working men, so are the British officers; neither do the latter, even in their amusements, fail to acquire experience of great military value. Apart from war service, the English officer has a knowledge of country rarely equalled, born of his love for and proficiency in field sports. The sportsman and the soldier are near akin; when each is in his element, their surroundings and necessities are similar. And yet this question of an important change of dress has been apparently decided by a small committee of gentlemen, soldiers, certainly, but influenced by outsiders. As to the choice of this committee, you, Sir, with your knowledge of the sentiments obtaining in our Army, will attach importance and significance to the extraordinary majority of non-red-coated officers. I do not wish to argue the question, but I think it ought to be argued by the Army—by that Army, be it remembered, so rich in experience and ability, and which yet clings lovingly to the traditions of the past, traditions many of them now severed and broken, but which lead us back, in the tracks of fame and honour, for more than two centuries and a half. Regretting the length into which I have been led,—I am, &c., A. M. F.

Sir,—Is it too late to hope that the change of colour of uniform may be reconsidered? Far from being prejudiced on the subject, I belong to a "khaki" Indian regiment, and up to the time of the Afghan Campaign was a hot advocate for it, but long ere its conclusion I became a convert to red. The idea of grey being superior on service is a purely theoretical and non-practical one. To begin with, red without white belts is by no means conspicuous at the ranges of modern rifle, let alone artillery, fire; and whilst not entailing extra risk of casualties on its wearers, it has at the same time an imposing appearance at close quarters, a moral effect by no means to be despised for a change. 2. More loss is apt to accrue from men mistaking their own side for the enemy, and vice versâ, and from the Staff being uncertain as to whether some detached body is friend or foe, than from any amount of war-paint we may pile on. Two of the few officers who fell at Peiwar Kotal did so from mistaking the Afghan grey for our khaki. At Jugdulluk one British regiment fired upon its own flanking company (in khaki), and at Alexandria it was only the fact of the Marines, who were in blue, not having had time to dye their white helmets that saved them from being shelled by the Blue-jackets. Within my own experience, I could quote many other such instances. If any change of colour is required, it is rather to put all corps into red. Thirdly, dust, glint (of rifle barrels, still more than of buckles, and in spite of all possible browning at the outset of a campaign), and motion, even such as the whisk of horses' tails, invariably attract attention long before the gayest of colours strike the eye. Men under fire are either lying down with little but their heads showing, or if engaged are personally hidden, but their position sufficiently indicated by the puffs of smoke. Scouts or outlying vedettes alone gain a pull by uncertainty as to which side they belong to, but being mounted, they can, if advisable, cloak up, as do most Continentals. The only practical advantage of the change is to have all corps of one colour, which, for the tunic at least, might far better be red. It is also a mistake to suppose that grey is more economical; it stains and gets shabby sooner than scarlet. Blue, for dust, sun, and visibility, is practically the worst of all colours. As some of your correspondents, however, justly point out, anything is better than one unbroken shade; any deerstalker will tell you this; and by all means let the continuations and helmet be grey and the belts umber. A change of shape, rather than of colour, is what is really required. For a working-dress, we cannot do better than utilise the practical experience of sportsmen. A Norfolk or Austrian jacket and knickerbockers should replace tunic and trousers. Not only are the latter tiring to walk in, but across country, or even on bad roads, it is quite impossible to keep dry below the knee. It is not easy to carry a spare pair of trousers, but you can easily have one of socks. In frontier expeditions in light order, where the beds of streams are your usual roads, on arrival in camp, wet to the knee, whilst the British soldiers had to shiver through the night in their wet trousers, with the thermometer several degrees below freezing-point, the frontier regiments, with their knickerbockers, dried their puttis and slippers whilst cooking dinners, and went comfortably on night picquet. The great-coat and cavalry cloak should most certainly, however, be of a grey or dust colour, if only for not showing the effect of a muddy march or a sandy bivouac. When we find this proposed change deprecated even by such papers as Truth, it is going rather far to say that the advocates of our old historical red are simply blinded by Conservative feelings. To the practical soldier, the change has absolutely nothing to recommend it. It is simply change for the sake of change.—I am, &c., Vieille Moustache.

THE YEOMANRY AND HONOURABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY OF LONDON.

Sir,—I beg to be allowed to draw your attention to the wording of the "Interpretation of Terms of the Army Act, 1881," when, for the purposes of the Act, the Honourable Artillery Company is "included" in the "Volunteers" under sec. 190,—(12), (14). (12 states):—"The expression 'Auxiliary Forces' means the Militia, Yeomanry, and the Volunteers." (14.) "The expression 'Volunteers and Volunteer Forces' 'includes' 'the Honourable Artillery Company of London.'" If thus classified, so distinguishing them from the Yeomanry, the latter being mentioned therein as a distinct force and next to the Militia, it must be an oversight if not meant to apply when out with other troops. According to the "Index" of the Army List, the officers appear to be composed of mostly Regulars, some Yeomanry, others Volunteers. See "Index to Officers on the Active List," where the majority of the Captains and Lieutenants have no letter against their names to denote that they are serving in the Regular Army; whilst the few that have are denoted by the letter "B," and two by "Y."—I am, &c., An Observer.

DISTINGUISHED-SERVICE PENSION.

Sir,—Having read your remarks in your issue of the 14th inst., as to the hardship and injustice of taking the reward for distinguished and meritorious service from General Officers who are retired on account of age, or not having been employed for five years, I entirely concur with you in thinking that it might be reconsidered with immense advantage, and to the great content of the Generals generally, but I doubt whether the institution of a good-service cross or gold medal in lieu of £100 a year would be appreciated, or meet the case, for this reason, that, when a general officer is retired, the only occasion when he would be likely to wear the cross or gold medal would be at one of her Majesty's levées or drawing-rooms, or some similar State occasion, which would be so seldom as not to be worth considering. General Officers now get £1,000 a year on being retired, which is equivalent to a regiment in former days, when the reward for distinguished or meritorious service lapsed. This rank of General Officers has, therefore, nothing to complain of; but as regards a lieutenant-general or a major-general who is retired, and who is in possession of the reward, the case is different, as he never can get the maximum rate on retiring, viz., £1,000 a year, and it seems, therefore, only fair and just that he should retain the £100 during his life, as a reward for past services.—I am, Sir, &c.,

A Lieutenant-General.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Times states that the combined corps of the Imperial Guard ordered for service in Moscow during the coronation festivities will be under the chief command of the Grand Duke Vladimir, and will consist of 19 generals, 619 officers, 12,515 men, 3,613 horses, and 22 guns. They will be quartered in the barracks and guard-houses of the permanent garrison, which will go into camp. At the close of the festivities the Guards will immediately return to the camp at Krasnoe-Selo.

Amusements.

With this week has terminated the brief but brilliant season of the Carl Rosa Opera Company at DRURY LANE, the last night of the season being associated with "Mignon," given at the express desire of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, Madame Marie Roze-Mapleson enacting the title-rôle. On Saturday next, April 28, Mr. Augustus Harris will reproduce "Youth," with new scenery, novel effects, the ground of the battle-scene changed, and the military episode greatly elaborated.

The HAYMARKET is now giving farewell performances of "School." Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft resume their original positions as Jack Poyntz and Naomi Tighe, Mr. H. B. Conway and Miss Gerard repeat their effective embodiments of Lord Beaufoy and Bella, and Mr. F. Everill as Dr. Sutcliffe, Mr. Alfred Bishop as Beau Farintosh, Miss Erskine as Mrs. Sutcliffe, and Mr. C. Brookfield as Mr. Krux secure for the reproduction the warmest welcome.

At the OLYMPIC Miss Geneviève Ward has brought out a new drama by Mr. Sydney Grundy, entitled "Rachel," in which her forcibly impressive style of acting is effectively illustrated. The piece, somewhat sombre in tone, deals with the substitution of children, avowedly suggested in the prologue by the gloomy play, "La Voleuse d' Enfants," produced at Paris in 1865. In the latter portion of the drama, Mr. Grundy relies upon caustic repartees, ably delivered by Mr. Hermann Vezin, as the rascally Captain Craven, Mr. W. H. Vernon as Sir Philip Grant, and by Miss Geneviève Ward as Rachel, afterwards to be known as Mrs. Athelston. Mrs. Leigh Murray cleverly enacts the "baby-farmer," Margaret Waters, and Mr. Bindloss and Miss Lucy Buckstone vivaciously represent the pair of youthful lovers.

Morning performances at the GAIETY have now to be chronicled rather than criticised. On Tuesday, Miss Vane had a matinée. On Wednesday, Miss Wallis appeared as the heroine of a new three-act comedy, called "The Decoy," written by Mr. Frederick Eastwood, and advantageously occupying only two hours in representation. The scenes are laid at Nice and in the Alps, and the slight story is well interpreted by the performers, among whom Mr. Beerbohm Tree attained prominence. On Thursday, Mrs. Alfred Maddick made her first appearance in the metropolis as Lady Clancarty in the effective drama of "Clancarty," with Mr. Henry Neville in his original character. On Tuesday next "The Hunchback" will be played for Miss Walpole's matinée, when that young lady will make her first appearance on the stage as Helen, Miss Wallis playing Julia for the first time in London. On the following Friday, April 27, Mr. Pennington gives a special performance under the patronage of the Prime Minister and Mrs. W. E. Gladstone. Mr. Pennington will play Ingomar in Mrs. Lovell's drama of that name, with Miss Louise Willes as Parthenia, and afterwards, as one of the wounded survivors of "The Light Brigade," recite the poem of "Balaklava," written by Sir Francis Hastings Doyle.

At the OPERA COMIQUE, Miss Hilda Hilton has reproduced the version of "Frou Frou," already familiar to her metropolitan audiences. Her embodiment of Gilberti has been improved since it was first seen. Miss Nelly Bromley is now Louise, and Mr. William Farren the younger gives a clever portraiture of the light-hearted, frivolous father, Mons. Brigard, inviting special recognition.

Mr. Edgar Bruce has taken the IMPERIAL THEATRE, Westminster, for a term, and will commence his season on Monday night with "Camille," in which Miss Lingard, of American and Australian renown, will repeat her impersonation of the heroine. The company also includes Mrs. Dixon, Miss Mary Foster, Miss M. Armitage, Mrs. Stephens, and Messrs. George Alexander, Charles Sugden, F. Haywell, C. H. Hawtree, and G. W. Anson. Morning performances will be given every Wednesday and Saturday.

DISTRIBUTION OF NAVAL AND MILITARY REWARDS.

SIR,—Honours are falling thick on the Naval and Military commanders of the Egyptian Expedition, and one would like to see the rank and file get a fair share of the plums. Lords Alcester and Wolseley get Peerages and £2,000 a year for two lives. Could not the country well afford a few pounds to each soldier and sailor, in addition to a medal? Naval and Military rewards seem to have been very unequally divided in days gone by as now. Thus, in 1762, when the Army and Navy acted in concert at the capture of Havannah, the commanders each got £122,697 10s. 6d. out of the immense booty taken, while the share of each soldier and sailor was £3 14s. 9d. only. Is not a little reform needed in the way Army and Navy rewards are divided?—I am, &c.,

NEARLY all the French Commanders engaged in the Franco-German War, with the exception of Marshal MacMahon, have written books explaining the disasters which befell them ; but the thick volume just produced by Marshal Bazaine is the most interesting of the series. The only pity is that it did not appear many years ago, when the events he describes were more fresh in the mind. The ex-Marshal can hardly have required twelve years to draw up his defence. Marshal Bazaine's book, we may begin by remarking, is a kind of Parthian arrow, which, if not calculated to do the archer much good, inflicts many wounds of a stinging description,—wounds on the reputation of the French Army in general, on individual officers, on the French Government, and on the nation at large. Most of the French Commanders of Army Corps, according to Marshal Bazaine, exhibited marked incapacity, and threw chances away, while others (and Generals of Divisions) were guilty of disobeying orders. Several blunders are pointed out, such as those committed by MacMahon, which compromised the campaign at a very early date. As for the insubordination complained of, that is an old failing. It was all Napoleon I. could do to maintain discipline among his Marshals even in the zenith of his power; and Bazaine, whose authority was never very clearly defined, was a much lesser light. We feel no admiration for the character or military talent of Bazaine, whom we saw tried at the Trianon ; but we should be sorry to brand him either as a most incapable commander or as a traitor, after the manner of several of our contemporaries. As far as his generalship is concerned, it must always be borne in mind that he did not assume the command of the Army of the Rhine until it had suffered more than one defeat, and until confusion reigned in its ranks. Bazaine's fault, therefore, was that he was unequal to the task of extricating the army from difficulties for which he was not responsible. It was in consequence of those difficulties, and in accordance with the popular wish, strongly expressed throughout France, that Napoleon III. handed him over the command of the Army, already astonished and disheartened by defeat, for the French can never take punishment well. When Bazaine complains of the state of the Army, we are necessarily reminded of those admirable reports which the French Military Attaché at Berlin, Baron Stoffel, addressed to his Government before the war. His cry was, "Beware of the Prussian Staff." He, and several other officers of the stamp of Ducrot and Douai, foresaw what would happen in the event of a rupture. While M. Thiers was laughing at the idea of Prussia being able to place 1,000,000 soldiers in the field, and while the Republicans were asking that the Standing Army should be abolished, their minds were filled with apprehension. Baron Stoffel declared that a war between the two countries would be a struggle between want of foresight, ignorance, and incapacity, on the one side, and foresight, instruction, and intelligence, on the other. Events proved that Baron Stoffel was right. The French service had been allowed to go to the dogs, France paid the penalty, and the Republicans, who were the most to blame, reaped the reward. Bazaine may have clung to Metz, but the question is whether he did not inherit this necessity after the loss of the battle of Rezonville, in which the Germans had sacrificed 581 officers and 14,239 men. Frenchmen who consider that Rezonville was a victory may blame the movement on Metz, but Bazaine plainly pronounces Rezonville to have been a defeat for the French arms. We are quite of opinion that Bazaine might have done better at Gravelotte, just as Napoleon might have done better at Borodino, by employing the Imperial Guard; but this question has been amply discussed. We now turn to the question of Bazaine being a traitor. A few months before the war, the Emperor appealed to the country, which, by a crushing majority, approved of his rule. One can pardon Bazaine, when he was shut up in Metz, for not supposing that the whole nation had altered its mind, and, in the throes of a gigantic struggle, wished to change the form of government, or, as Abe Lincoln would have expressed it, desired to swop horses while crossing a stream. Bazaine writes himself that he could not believe it possible that a revolution should break out while the enemy was on French soil, and while fighting was still going on upon the frontier. "We could not believe that the ambition of the leaders of a political party would be capable of sacrificing the most sacred interests of the country, to grasp the power they coveted. Those were the traitors." By "we," Bazaine meant the Council of War which he summoned, on receiving the news of Sedan and September 4. Bazaine has been severely criticised for negotiating with Count Bismarck and for the Boyer mission; but a good deal may be said on this matter. Few people thought that France would be mad enough to go on with the war after Sedan. M. Thiers pronounced M. Gambetta to be a raving lunatic, for wishing to fight the Germans with raw levies. Count Bismarck had declared that he would not negotiate with the Government of National Defence, which had received no mandate from the nation, and was purely revolutionary. England had offered to mediate, for M. Jules Favre had not yet spoken those imprudent words which cut short all negotiation,—"Pas une pierre de nos fortresses, pas un pouce de notre territoire." For the Army of Metz, the Government of National Defence was simply the Revolutionary party in Paris. It was under these circumstances that "it was decided," writes Bazaine, "by a majority of seven to two, that General Boyer should return to Versailles, and should thence go to England, in the hopes that the intervention of the Empress-Regent might obtain better terms for the Army of Metz. It was unanimously decided that the Commander-in-Chief should not sign any treaty implying questions not connected with the Army. The mission of General Boyer, therefore, had no other object beyond trying to deliver the Army of the Rhine from its painful situation, and to preserve it for France." It has often been said, and is still said, that Bazaine should have cut his way out of Metz, and that no other army 140,000 strong would have capitulated. But the French Army was thoroughly demoralised, and Bazaine, and his Council of War, soon found that sorties were useless. On October 24, we are told that a new Council was called, and "it became necessary to resign ourselves, because an attempt to force our way out, which had already been considered as only a last act of despair, would, under the actual circumstances, have been a veritable suicide." Such was the opinion of Marshals Bazaine, Canrobert, Leboeuf, General Changarnier, and the other officers of the Council. Had the Army differed from this opinion, it would probably have done as an English army once did in India,—it would have given Bazaine to understand that if he did not go out, it would go out without him. The Army of Metz was not exposed to "useless slaughter," and if its leader was made a scapegoat of and condemned to death, it afterwards did the State some service by putting down the Communist insurrection, and saving France from a second Reign of Terror. We have little sympathy for Bazaine, but we object to see one man driven into the wilderness charged with all the sins of the people. A Frenchman of the period might well have exclaimed, with Macaulay :—

> "As we wax hot in faction,
> So in battle we wax cold,
> Wherefore men fight not as they fought
> In the brave days of old,
> When none were of a Party,
> But all were for the State,
> When the rich man helped the poor man,
> And the poor man loved the great."

WE have such an inveterate habit in this country of acting according to the old proverb of locking the stable after the horse is stolen, that Major-General Luard's recently published report on the state of the Canadian Militia will not probably receive the consideration which the grave state of affairs brought to our notice in that document seems to demand. No Government but our own would tolerate the idea of a huge and magnificent territory, as large as the whole of Europe, remaining in so utterly defenceless a condition as the facts before us prove Canada to be. The system of Military service in Canada consists of a very imperfectly embodied Militia, with an establishment of 36,000, but the organisation is so thoroughly defective as to reduce the utility of the force to an almost nominal value. The men are enlisted voluntarily for three years' service, but owing to a most mistaken idea of economy, they are not trained annually, and in many cases are not trained at all. The practice is to call out a certain proportion every year. On paper, this proportion was last year three-fifths, or 21,500; but owing to the imperfect system and laxity of discipline, only 16,000 of these paraded for inspection ; so that the so-called 36,000 men number among them 20,000 who have had no training since 1881. What can be expected of such a body? Our home Militia is, as we have always affirmed, a force fit only for a place in the second line of the country's defence, and from its want of cohesion is admitted by the most competent Military authorities to be unfit for immediate employment in the field. The comparative value, then, of the Canadian force, which, let us remember, is a first line of defence along a frontier of 3,000 miles, cannot better be described than in General Luard's own words :—"In England, the Militiaman is drilled by a staff of thoroughly well-informed officers and non-commissioned officers—old soldiers—the first year for three months, and each subsequent year for one month ; total in four years, say, 180 days. Compare this with what the Government of Canada allows its Militiaman. The countryman of Canada gets, according to latest rules, about twelve days' drill in camp every two years; total, in four years, twenty-four days. What can be expected from him, in so short a time, and with an interval so long?" What, indeed! A more wretchedly inefficient arrangement than the above cannot well be imagined. The little learned in one year is totally lost before the next biennial training comes round, and therefore the money spent upon it is practically wasted, even if every man returns to duty. Besides this, as there is no proper special training for the recruits, the nebulous remains of former knowledge which a man may bring to a second training must rest undeveloped, because the whole of the time allotted for instruction is necessarily taken up with the preliminary drill of the recruits; and so the battalions, in the country districts especially, have, under the present régime, no earthly chance of progress in efficiency. The same influences which stand in the way of proficiency in the ranks militate equally against the officers of the force. From a want of example, owing to the absence of Imperial troops, they have not for years past had in their training any high standard of excellence to aspire to; consequently, their attainments have not been great, while the exceedingly rare occasions on which anything like discipline has been brought to bear have not predisposed them to obedience. Hence it is hardly with surprise that we learn in the Report that a considerable number failed to take steps to bring their men up for inspection in anything like their proper strength, whilst some excused themselves altogether on various pleas, and some on none at all. One Captain of Artillery did not bring his battery up to drill "because he could not spare time to keep it together," and one Lieutenant-Colonel is reported as having neither appeared himself, nor sent a single officer or man of his battalion, though warned in due course personally by the Deputy Adjutant-General of his District both as to the time and place of his training, and expressing himself quite satisfied with the arrangements. We mention these instances as samples of the state into which many of the regiments have been allowed to drift, and as indications of the heart-breaking difficulties confronting such a conscientious soldier and disciplinarian as General Luard. Some of the urban regiments, indeed, seem to be exceptions to the rule of laxity and practical inefficiency. Owing to their greater geographical unity, an esprit de corps has sprung up, which has resulted in voluntary drills, on the same system as in our Volunteer service. These, however, are the exceptions, and the general state of things more than warrants the earnest words of the General on the subject. He says, quoting in his current Report, his unheeded warning of a year ago,—"The foundation of Military duty is discipline. Without it, troops are like ropes of sand. I therefore once more, before it be too late, urge most strongly the establishment of permanent schools, wherein officers and non-commissioned officers may learn . . . . . . their duty." He goes on to express his opinion that one-half the force, if properly trained, would be infinitely more valuable than the present whole, and that every penny spent on a system of inefficiency is utterly wasted. He urges most strongly that an annual training of at least 16 days is absolutely necessary for each rural Militiaman, and that it is essential to the existence of anything like a useful force either to make the number of Militia proportionate to the sum voted by Parliament, or vote a sufficient supply for the number enrolled. Of the good spirit and willingness of the men, he speaks in the highest terms; but good-will alone is, unfortunately, a very insufficient prop in a national emergency. There appears, indeed, but one solitary redeeming feature in the generally deplorable state of the Military institutions of Canada, and that is the Military College. Established some six years ago, to provide a sound training both in military and civil branches of education, this institution has already justified its foundation, and is yearly sending out of its doors young men well fitted to succeed in any walk of life, and well grounded in all the qualifications of a scientific and practical soldier. It is gratifying to turn from the reports of Infantry, half of which are unclothed, Cavalry under-horsed, and Artillery without guns, to the exceedingly complimentary expressions in the annual report of the College. Competition seems keen to enter it, and the spirit of work and discipline very excellent. The only criticisms are on the material subjects of space and ventilation, and we feel sure that when the Government of the Dominion fully realises the treasure it is acquiring in these young, trained intellects, it will not be slow to bring to the front and perfect an establishment on the success of which its future safety may in a large measure depend. The Royal Military College shows what Canadian good-will is, and we trust that the authorities, encouraged by this fact, and stirred by the friendly, but energetic utterances of Major-General Luard, will start the reforms so urgently required. They are such as appeal not to statesmanship, but to common-sense, and, for the honour and safety of the great Empire to which they belong, the "loyal Canadians" will doubtless do their duty to themselves and their fellow-subjects, by acting promptly on the principle of "Defence, not defiance." It is, no doubt, owing to the confidence felt in the great and peaceful nation whose borders touch their own, that the Canadian Government have allowed their armament so to decay; but human passions and prejudice rarely do more than slumber, and never die. Without one thought of "bunkum" or aggression, it is always well to remember the old maxim, "If thou wishest peace, be prepared for war."

Naval reform, though much needed, is refused by those at the head of the affairs of the Navy. It is not for us to conjecture why. Our duty is to make it clear to the country that reform in the Administration of the Navy is absolutely necessary, if such be the case. We believe it is. There is no need for us to recapitulate why or wherefore. Instead, we bring direct evidence to prove conclusively that the reforms we have so long advocated are necessary. We have published the Report of the Committee on Naval Pensions. We this week publish Mr. Swainson's report on the first of the frauds which headed the list of causes célèbres now known as Naval scandals. Next week we shall further enlighten the country by means of another official report, still more conclusively proving the necessity of a thorough inquiry into the existing Administration of the Navy. But, to insure the success of our efforts to benefit those serving under the pendant, it is necessary that all ranks in the Navy should help in the work on hand. It is not sufficient for the Earl of Belmore in the House of Lords to take up the question of the pay of Lieutenants in the Navy, or for Lord Henry Lennox in the Commons to discuss the state and condition of our armourclads. What is required is a Naval Party in both Houses of the Legislature, as it is only by the creation of such a power that the Naval question, as a whole, is ever likely to be brought "within the domain of practical politics." Such a party is in course of formation, and to enable the representatives of the Navy in Parliament to effectually advocate the claims of the service, we shall be glad to receive communications from all ranks, stating clearly what grievances they are at present labouring under, and what reforms they would suggest. From the mass of material thus brought together, there can be no doubt but that a comprehensive scheme of Naval reform, which will confer great benefit upon the Navy, will be elaborated. But the first thing Naval men have to learn to do is to pull together, and in so doing we will readily assist them.

Viscount Sidmouth will on Tuesday inquire whether it is the intention of the Admiralty to construct any vessel or vessels expressly for the purposes to which the Hecla has been converted.

Sir Thomas Brassey is as well aware of the danger to which this country is exposed from the rapid strides made by France in armour-clad construction as any man living. Indeed, had he not been interfered with, and had his colleagues not begged of him to tone down his remarks, facts, and figures, relating to the French Navy, prior to the publication of his recent work on "The British Navy," that book would have contained much more matter for Sir Thomas Symonds to quote than it now does. We believe Sir Thomas Brassey makes no secret of this "official interference" with his book, nor of the fact that the Admiralty are in a bad way just now.

Lord Palmerston, in 1863, wrote to Admiral Wilmot, then Commodore, in command of her Majesty's ships on the West Coast of Africa, "to drive the Portuguese to Hell out of the Congo, and on no account whatever to allow them to land." What a change has come over the Liberal party since the days of the glorious "Old Pam." Under their present "Grand Old Man," the policy of England is directed entirely in the interests of foreigners, and against the interests of her own sons. We shall next week discuss the Congo question at some length.

The Admiralty have decided that in future, in accordance with the representations made by Captain Lord Charles Beresford, no man-of-war shall proceed to sea unless her armament includes at least one Nordenfelt machine-gun. By this means, the small craft cruising on the China coast or in African waters will prove much more formidable to pirates and slavers, especially if the small-bore Nordenfelt, firing rifle ammunition, is used.

With the retirement of Staff Captain Frank Inglis we see the last of those who, by good-luck, have risen from the ranks to the highest grade of their branch in the Navy. Originally a 1st-class boy in the Victory, he obtained a nomination as master's assistant, through the good offices of the master of that ship, who belonged to a family well known in the Naval service. Staff Captain Inglis now retires with the rank of Captain, and can be complimented on the fortunate turn which favoured him in the early part of his career.

Vice-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh is about to appoint the Rev. G. E. Carwithen, M.A., R.N., his honorary Chaplain. Mr. Carwithen has been Chaplain of the Plymouth Division of Royal Marines for the past eight years, and the appointment will be much appreciated by the corps, by whom the reverend gentlemen is held in the highest esteem.

By Admiralty order, dated June 20, 1868, retired officers, whose names are published in the quarterly Navy List, are permitted to wear their uniforms on such occasions as they may think proper.

The Lepanto, lately launched at Leghorn, is a formidable addition to the strength of the Italian Navy. Italy now possesses four first-class sea-going turret-ships, the Duilio and her twin-sister the Dandalo, the Italia and the Lepanto. The Duilio and the Dandalo are each armed with four 100-ton guns, and are built on the same principle as the Inflexible, which, however, only carries 80-ton guns. The Italia and the Lepanto (displacement, 13,480 tons) are the largest ironclads afloat, but they are not likely to be ready for sea for two years at least. They are at present being fitted with their machinery, while the question of their armament is still under consideration. The Italians are ambitious in the matter of Naval artillery, and wish their new ships to carry still heavier guns than those mounted in the Duilio and Dandalo. Negotiations are now going on with Sir W. Armstrong, who has been asked to construct a gun of 120 tons. No doubt a 120-ton, or even one of yet heavier metal, can be constructed; but the preliminary trials and experiments which will be necessary before such a gun can be ready for service, must be lengthy and costly. It is for the Italian Government to decide whether, having already incurred a heavy outlay for the 100-ton guns, they are justified in burdening the country with fresh expenditure for a new series of costly experiments, which other countries, and especially England, will profit by more than themselves. Italy is unfortunate in having no iron and no coal. All her machinery, guns, and coal supply come from this country. Thus England rather than Italy is the chief gainer by the laudable efforts of the Italian Government to improve their Navy. As Lord Northbrook pointed out the other day, we had only to watch the interesting experiments made at Spezia with the 100-ton gun, and then, when its success was assured, a supply of these guns was ordered from Sir W. Armstrong at half the cost at which Italy obtained them. This, however, is exactly what all foreign nations have been doing for years with regard to England's shipbuilding experiments. We do not wish to detract from the credit which is certainly due to the Italian Government for the energy and enterprise which they are displaying in Naval matters. Some of the most important questions concerning Naval artillery have been decided at Spezia, notably the question as to the respective capabilities of steel and wrought-iron armour for ships-of-war. For reasons, however, which we have mentioned, the real Naval interests of Italy would probably be better consulted, if she were to proceed in a less ambitious way, by quietly and judiciously following in the wake of England and France, rather than by attempting to take a lead in Naval matters, which neither the natural resources of the country nor its embarrassed finances permit her to do in such a way as to contribute to her permanent strength as a Naval Power.

A correspondent with the Channel Squadron, writing from St. Vincent on April 15, says:—"The Minotaur, Northumberland, Agincourt, and Achilles arrived at Port Praya, St. Jago, on the 4th, and were joined on the morning of the 6th by the Sultan, from St. Vincent. The stay at Port Praya was devoted to torpedo practice and boat firing. The Portuguese Governor of the Cape de Verde Islands lives at Port Praya. He visited the Admiral, and received the customary salute. The town is a miserable little place, but there is a fair amount of cultivation about; vegetables and fruit being plentiful. There is a little shooting to be got, some quail and a few guinea fowl were picked up. We left on Monday morning, the 9th, and after clearing the anchorage, spread for target practice, reassembling in the afternoon. Next evening, after a day at steam tactics, we arrived here, and moored off the town. Since our arrival all the ships have coaled. We have been very lucky in our weather, as there have been light winds and a smooth sea. With a strong trade wind and a heavy sea setting in, coaling would be a very slow and unpleasant operation. We are to wait here for the mail from England, which is due on the 19th. As we have not received any mails since we left Gibraltar, just a month ago, we are looking forward to its arrival. The homeward-bound mail-steamer came in yesterday and leaves this afternoon. A few cricket matches have been played. Yesterday, the Fleet eleven played the English residents; the Fleet got rather the best of it, though it is still quite an open game:—The scores being, Fleet, 1st innings, 101; 2nd, 28 for eight wickets. Residents, 1st innings, 49. It will be concluded to-morrow. Officers' crews in galleys and gigs practise morning and evening for a race which is to come off on Wednesday. All the steam-launches and pinnaces are to go through a course of steam tactics before we leave. There will be few regrets in the Squadron when we say farewell to the Cape de Verde Islands."

The paper read yesterday afternoon by Captain R. H. Harris, R.N., at a well-attended meeting of the Royal United Service Institution, on "Maritime Power, and its Probable Application in War," is deserving of more attention than we can devote to it this week. Captain Harris, after briefly discussing the transient nature of the supremacy of the maritime powers of the past, argues the necessity of our being fully alive to this fact, and goes on to show the danger of our being in any way unprepared to at once take up on the outbreak of war, in their entirety, all the duties that will be required of our Navy, if we are to retain the command of the seas. We are of one opinion with the lecturer in his remark that promptitude in maritime war will ever be our greatest national economy. Although Captain Harris does not actually say so, it is evident that he holds the opinion that for actual sea-fights the days of monster armour-clads are practically numbered, and he seems to think that our fleets of the future will mainly consist of smaller and swifter vessels, who will rely on their numbers and the use of ram and torpedo for success, rather than on their artillery powers. We shall go more fully into Captain Harris's valuable paper on a future occasion.

Colonel Geoffrey Mairis, who has been selected for the command of the Royal Marine Depôt at Walmer, in the place of the iate Colonel Maskery, has seen good service, having landed with the Royal Marine Brigade in the Crimea in 1854, and remained with it until 1856. He was present at the battle of Balaclava and siege of Sebastopol, for which he received a medal and two clasps, 5th class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal. He served subsequently in the Baltic, and in the Chinese expeditionary force from 1857 to 1860, when he was present at the capture of Canton, and in action at Sinho, Tonghoo, and Taku Forts. He was severely wounded, and mentioned in despatches (medal and two clasps). Colonel Mairis was also selected to command the Royal Marine Battalion in Ireland, a post which he retained until his promotion to Second Commandant at Plymouth.

The trials which took place last week on board the Nettle were ordered to test a plate 6 ft. by 8 ft., and 11 in. thick, manufactured by Messrs. Cammell and Co., with the sole object of ascertaining to what extent a certain steel would resist the impact of a projectile, and not, as erroneously stated in the daily papers, to test a sample plate representing armour to be delivered to the Admiralty. The trial was entirely of a private nature, the plate not representing Messrs. Cammell and Co.'s usual make of compound armour. One of the latter was recently tried in Germany, by the Prussian Government, on behalf of the Chinese. So well did the plate withstand the test, that, having fired three shots, and the plate being still intact, five more shots from the Krupp gun were fired at it, without even causing a flaw or crack of any magnitude, and without piercing the plate.

The very large number of Members of the House of Commons who voted on the amendment—that is, against any pension being conferred on Admiral Lord Alcester and General Lord Wolseley, to support their new titles—shows clearly how the opinion of the "rest of the Army" on the subject of the recent campaign, or, as it is called, "walk-over" in Egypt, has been reflected in the Lower House. The self-glorification, endless speechifying, and tall-talk which have been indulged in ever since the troops have returned from that most glorious battle that has been fought since the invention of the English Army, against the most miserable and worthless Army that ever was trained, has produced a very natural reaction, and the country has been for some time surfeited with glory; they would now wish to hear no more of it, as the subject is becoming demoralising. The land of Goshen is played out for the second time. We believe that no such opposition has ever been made in Parliament before to a Prime Minister's proposal to award pensions in support of titles given for war services.

In connection with the repeal of the C. D. Acts, the Western Morning News says that:—

> "It is impossible to go through Mr. Stansfeld's speech and show that his statistics were fallacious, and his conclusions wholly wrong. Most of those who voted for him would admit that his arguments, though strongly put, had no real foundation. What they voted for was the sentiment which has led him to sacrifice the hope of official life for a single idea. The sentiment of personal right and liberty is joined to a sentiment of modesty, and for the sake of the modesty of a public woman, supposed to be infringed by a medical examination, we are asked to give up what good has been gained. The Acts are gone; but we must have something in the place of them. What do their opponents intend to propose?"

> "What do the gentlemen who voted so enthusiastically with Mr. Stansfeld on Friday night intend to propose in place of the laws they seek to repeal? They have to face one fact which they have not considered. The districts which have had experience of the law that so offends a certain sentiment, and is said to outrage religious feeling, are in favour of its continuance. Not a member from any such district dared to vote against the law as it stands. In the protected districts it is believed that not only does the present system prove beneficial from a sanitary point of view, but that the moral improvements which result from it are incalculable. It puts an end to street importunity, and in consequence reduces temptation. It almost abolishes the worst form of juvenile vice. It gives every woman on her entrance on a public life a chance to bethink herself and to return to her own home. It brings abandoned girls under moral influences, and leads often to their reclamation. It regulates and represses the dreadful traffic, with results of the best kind. As regards the sanitary side of the case, it has almost put an end to the worst forms of a loathsome disease; and if the Acts were extended, we might probably stamp it out altogether. Now these are results actually attained. The charges against the administration of the Acts have all broken down. Not one of them has been so proved as to satisfy trained lawyers. The action of the House has been taken in defiance of the almost unanimous public opinion in every one of the localities where the facts are necessarily the best known."

Our contemporary has stated the case so fairly and moderately, that we are glad to give its views prominence. Those who have been agitating for a repeal of the Acts, have simply been carried away by sentiment. To us it is astonishing how persons professing to be Christians can so far forget all that is due from them, as to have used their exertions to bring about the withdrawal of measures, the effect, if not the immediate object, of which has been to reduce immorality and to check the growth of disease among the unoffending. The result of the division on Mr. Stansfeld's motion only shows to what extent bigotry will be carried, even among those who pride themselves on their enlightenment.

Some weeks ago an article appeared in one of the Plymouth journals suggesting that it was probable the Army Estimates for 1883-84 would include a sum of about £8,000 for demolishing the Plymouth Citadel and filling-in the trenches, and also that the Devonport Lines might perhaps be treated in the same manner, since which the local papers have teemed with letters on the subject, pro and con. The advantage that has accrued to Portsmouth and Southsea by the demolition of the useless Lines has drawn the attention of the inhabitants of the three towns at Plymouth to the possibility of similar improvements being accorded to them. The Citadel, which was erected in the time of Charles II., in 1670, has from time to time received additions and improvements, and at one period was a formidable work in relation to the class of ships and guns which could be opposed to it; but in these days of modern ironclads, monster guns, and ponderous shot and shell, its ramparts could offer no lengthened opposition to attack, as its walls would quickly crumble into shapeless masses. This being the case, it is practically useless as a fortification, and it would be as well to throw the ramparts into the moats and continue the slope of the present glacis. The same remarks would apply to the Devonport Lines, which have become obsolete since the construction of the outer line of works for the defence of Plymouth, extending across the isthmus from Saltash Ferry to Bovisand. If the ramparts were levelled and the ditches filled with the débris, as has been done at Portsmouth, Devonport Park and the space known as the Brickfields would be considerably enlarged as a drill-ground for the troops in garrison, and be a benefit to the surrounding neighbourhood. One word, however, must be said with regard to the Citadel,—whether it would not be desirable to construct a small and strong work with heavy ordnance on a portion of its site, not on the top of the hill, but well down, as a fleur d'eau, to sweep the Fairway Channel rounding the eastern end of Drake's Island. The forts on Staddon Heights, on the east side of the harbour, are constructed with a view to resisting an attack from landward, and the entrances to the Sound at either end of the Breakwater are defended by the Breakwater Fort, and those at Bovisand on the one side and Picklecombe on the other; but if once a vessel ran the gauntlet past these, she would only have Drake's Island to encounter, until she got under the Eastern and Western King's Redoubts, on her way to Hamoaze, while nothing but the guns from the island would oppose her passage up Cattewater, where she could hammer away at Plymouth at her leisure. There can, therefore, be little doubt as to the necessity of some strong, though possibly small, work, which would have a vessel within its range while running over a course of about three miles, being constructed to supersede the old Citadel, in the event of its being removed.

A valuable military historical work has appeared during the last few days at Moscow, giving an account of the Russian Army during the reign of Peter the Great. The author—Colonel Maslousky, of the General Staff—goes deeply into details of organisation, armament, conditions of service, strategy, tactics, and other cognate subjects, based upon the archives at Moscow; and does full justice to the Scotch officers who helped to organise the army, and led it repeatedly to victory.

The late Major-General the Hon. Sir Hugh Clifford was of an energetic character and a most active man in his younger days. When a subaltern in the Rifle Brigade, and engaged in the Kaffir war of 1847, he ventured to run a race with a friendly Kaffir, who was a noted runner among the "fleet of foot" of his tribe. Young Clifford beat the Kaffir, who felt so mortified at his discomfiture that he threw himself on the ground and roared.

We trust that the War Office may yet be induced to offer a cross or distinction of some kind for the part played by our troops in the campaign against the Boers. We refer more particularly to the two battalions (21st and 94th) and battery of Artillery which defended the forts of the Transvaal successfully, and suffered such severe privations, as well as heavy losses from fire. That these men should remain utterly unrewarded is not right. The war, say the Government, was, on the whole, a failure, therefore no rewards are due. But who made it a failure? The Government, by patching up a peace, when the Transvaal garrisons were ready to strike. The troops which fought in Egypt have received a gratuity. In both cases—Egypt and Transvaal—the troops received field allowance, in both cases the prices of necessaries, &c., were enormous. In the Transvaal, the men had to pay 2s. for a glass of beer, the officers 5s. for a bottle, everything else was in proportion. Hitherto, the issue of a gratuity for service in South Africa has been denied on the ground that the thing was without precedent. Now, a precedent has been established, and we do not see how the Government can possibly continue to withhold, at any rate, the issue of a gratuity to those troops who served in the Boer war. The matter is, we hear, to be taken up by several influential Members this Session. It is one that deserves to be ventilated.

The Italia Militare publishes the following particulars respecting the autumn manœuvres of the Italian Army. Two complete Army Corps are to operate on the right bank of the Po, in the country between Alessandria and Piacenza, under the command of Lieutenant-General Mezzacapo, first separately, and then against each other, the operations to last twelve days, from August 30 to September 10. Independent of these manœuvres, the Cavalry will operate under the command of Lieutenant-General di Revel, commanding the 2nd Army Corps, in Lombardy, from August 16 to September 10 (26 days). The Cavalry Division, commanded by Lieutenant-General Marchese della Rochetta, consists of four regiments in two brigades and two batteries. Operations will also be carried out by an independent brigade of three regiments and one or two batteries towards the end of August in the district of the 8th Army Corps, under the command of Major-General Roero di Settime. The battalions of infantry and Bersaglieri of the manœuvring corps, as well as a few other brigades and battalions, will be concentrated four weeks' before the beginning of the manœuvres, for training in camps of instruction.

The Spanish Government have acquired from Krupp, for arming the coast batteries of Ceuta, heavy steel guns, having a length of 20 calibres. The 26-centimètre (10·14-in.) guns fire a steel shot weighing 205 kilogrammes (451 lb.), with a charge of 38 kilogrammes (85·8 lb.). They are said to have an initial velocity of 605 mètres (1,985 ft.), and to penetrate at a distance of 2,500 mètres (2,735 yards) a wrought-iron plate 38 centimètres (14·82 in.) thick. The 35·5-centimètre (13·9-in.) guns fire a shot weighing 528 kilogrammes (1,162 lb.), with a charge of 210 kilogrammes (462 lb.) of prismatic powder, and penetrate at a similar distance (2,735 yards) an armour-plate 58 centimètres (22·62 in.) thick. It is stated that, after arming Cadiz and Ceuta, the Spanish Government intend to provide heavy guns also for the fortifications of Algeciras and Tarifa; in the former place, Isla Verde and Punta Carnero are first to be armed.

Capt. Stevenson, 10th Bombay N.I., now employed in the Quartermaster-General's Department at Bombay, will probably be appointed special assistant secretary to the Government of India in the Military Department for the Bombay Presidency, but it is said that the appointment will have effect for the Simla season only.

The crew of the London, who came home from Zanzibar in the Windsor Castle a few days since, were paid off on board the Royal Adelaide at Devonport, and came on shore on 51 days' leave of absence.

The commissioning of the steel and iron corvette Canada has been postponed from Thursday till May 1, when Capt. Francis Durrant will be appointed to her with a complement of 266 officers and men. It has been decided to provide accommodation for two additional officers, a lieutenant and medical officer, and she will also carry a naval instructor, these arrangements being rendered necessary by the contemplated cruise in her of Midshipman Prince George of Wales. The work of fitting out the vessel is proceeding rapidly under the direction of Mr. R. Barnaby, Constructor, and Mr. W. H. Malpas, foreman of the yard; and the Vavasseur central-pivot mounting has been successfully placed in position on her sponson, and tested with satisfactory results.

The Devastation has been placed at the disposal of the staff of the Vernon for trial of torpedoes of various kinds; experiments will be carried out at Spithead, under Capt. Markham.

The Indian reliefs will, it is believed, again show but few movements of British troops, all arrangements being made with a view to save expensive railway journeys; at the same time, certain regiments will be given practical lessons in marching long distances.

Some important changes are, the Lahore paper understands, under consideration in the Indian Commissariat Department; the most notable being the appointment of a Major-General as the administrative head of the Department, for all India, and the Dependencies under the Government of India.

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL PENSIONS:

COMPARISON OF PENSIONS IN HER MAJESTY'S SERVICE AND SERVICE IN THE MERCANTILE MARINE.

We deem it advisable to give publicity to the following extracts from the Report of the Committee on Naval Pensions, as it is our opinion that the more widely the facts therein contained are made known among the classes from which the supply of Seamen and Marines for the Navy is drawn, the greater will be the benefit derived by the Service from the labours of the Committee :—

"It is difficult to estimate the exact influence that the proposed reduction in the pension rates would exercise on the manning of the Navy, but in arriving at an opinion on this point, we have been guided in some measure by the following facts.

1. The average long-service pension awarded 20 years ago was about the same as that now proposed, namely, £25, but for an average service of about 25 years instead of 22; and it must be borne in mind that the men now leaving the service, who are of the highest class, enlisted when these pensions were in force.

2. The proposed pensions would be far more liberal than those granted in other branches of the Naval Service. The average rate for all ranks combined would be about £1 3s. for each year of service if pensioned after 22 years, and about £1 6s. for each year if pensioned after 27 years' service; whereas in the Marines the average, up to the present time, is less than £1 2s. for each year of a service of 21 years, and in the civil departments of the Navy (where about half the men only are eligible for pension) the average is less than £1 for each year served, and is not granted until after 40 years' service, or until the man is 60 years of age.

3. In the Army, men, with very few exceptions, are compulsorily discharged without pension after 12 years' service, unless they at that time hold non-commissioned officer's rank, consequently only a small proportion of the men become entitled to pension.

4. Pensions are, we understand, in no cases granted in the Mercantile Marine, and this is the service with which the Navy can compare.

These and other considerations have led us to the conclusion that the men now serving might have been obtained on far less than the existing terms in regard to pension, and that the present excessive awards, so far from procuring any advantageous return, act detrimentally to the Crown by inducing the men to take their discharge at the earliest opportunity, the pensions granted being so nearly equal in amount to the pay of their ratings that the difference is far more than made up by the wages of private employment.*

It is very difficult fairly to compare service in the Royal Navy and in the Mercantile Marine, owing to the very different conditions which necessarily obtain in these two great branches of the sea service, but this is a point to which we have given our serious consideration. We have ascertained from the Board of Trade that the average rate of pay for able seamen (including petty officers) given by the best steamship companies is 80s. a month, or £48 a year. Making allowance for occasional non-employment, arising either from the men being unable to get ships, or from their voluntarily taking 'spells on shore' without pay, the average earnings of a seaman in the best class of merchant ships may be put at £40 a year. These men, however, have much more liberty than seamen in the Navy, the cost of their clothing is less; they have not to be absent from home for such long periods, and so much is not required of them in the way of special qualifications. The average annual rate of pay of Blue-jackets in the Navy, including petty officers, is £37 5s. But the Blue-jacket in the Navy is entitled to a pension, the average cost of which to the public, calculated upon the numbers on the active list, amounts at existing rates to more than half of the effective pay (the estimated normal pension liability on present terms for 36,000 seamen being about £700,000 a year, or an average of £19 10s. each), and under the proposed conditions to about three-eighths of such pay (the estimated normal pension liability at proposed rates for 36,000 seamen being about £500,000 a year, or an average of nearly £14 each. It follows, therefore, that, even with the reduced cost to the State for pensions which we propose for the future, the cost to the public per head of effective Blue-jackets will be £51 (£37 5s. + £14), as against £40 a year which seamen receive in the best lines of the Mercantile Marine. To this also must be added all the benefits which seamen derive from the funds of Greenwich Hospital. We are of opinion, therefore, that even with the large reduction in the present liability for pensions which we propose, the attractions of service in the Navy largely preponderate over those of service in the Mercantile Marine, and that the Navy will continue, so far as the Blue-jackets are concerned, to attract the élite of the youth of the country who adopt a seafaring life as their calling. In recommending a general extension of the periods of service, we have not been unmindful of the fact that such extension will necessarily cause a reduction of the numbers of men available for the Reserve of Pensioners. Under existing conditions it is estimated that there would be a normal force of about 6,000 pensioners so eligible under 50 years of age, but if service in the Navy until 45 years of age were general, this number would be reduced to about 1,000. It should, however, be borne in mind that the premature discharge of men, through which this additional force of 5,000 men is created, causes an increase in the pension charge of over £190,000 a year. Should the reduction of this force consequent upon an increase of third engagements be deemed undesirable, it has occurred to us that a considerable reserve might be created by offering to all men who leave the Navy, on the expiration of their first continuous service engagement, a retaining fee of £6 a year, to be awarded for periods of three years, up to the age of 50, on condition of their undertaking to serve, if called upon, in time of war. These men, who, under the existing system, have about 12 years, and under the proposed system will have about 14 years' training in the Navy, are practically lost to the Crown when they take their discharge without pension, a loss of a highly trained and therefore valuable force that might be obviated in a great degree by our proposal. If thought desirable a similar reserve might be formed from Marines leaving the service after their first engagement. The payment of these retaining fees ought not, however, to be in the nature of a pension, but should be provided for out of Vote 4."

NAVAL NOTES.

The under-named men have been awarded the medal for long service and good conduct :—Robert Precey, first-class writer, of the Thalia; Jonathan Haines, chief bandmaster, of the Audacious; William Richards, sailor, of the Indus; Edward Thompson, first-class painter, of the Inflexible; John Kavanagh, bandsman, of the Duke of Wellington; Alfred J. Eldridge, armourer, of the Polyphemus; Thomas Coleman, boatswain's mate, of the Agincourt; James Barry, James G. S. Pride, and Ernest William Bond, boatmen, and David Bride, commissioned boatman, of the Coastguard.

The annual inspection of the Naval establishments at Sheerness, and the vessels of war stationed in the Medway, by Vice-Admiral E. B. Rice, Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, was brought to a close on Saturday last. A Naval review was organised in the recreation-ground at West Minster, and was followed by a sham fight, in which the Royal Marine Light Infantry battalion formed the attacking party, the defending force being composed of half-a-dozen companies of Bluejackets, with a 9-pounder field-gun.

A correspondent writes :—"In your number of Saturday, Dec. 9, 1876, a very able article appeared respecting the illegality of withholding retired pay from officers of the Navy and Marines holding civil appointments. The injustice then complained of still continues, and it has occurred to the writer whether the time is not rife and opportune for reopening the question. If you agree in thinking so, and will write a short article on the subject in an early issue of the Army and Navy Gazette, you will be conferring a great favour on several officers who are still suffering from that arbitrary power which grants or withholds pensions to officers, without regard to the question of legality."

Navigating-Lieut. Edward W. Wild, of the Grappler, was tried by court-martial on March 30 at Gibraltar, on a charge of drunkenness. He was sentenced to be dismissed his ship, and adjudged to forfeit all seniority.

Dr. Joyce, of the Superb, who has been doing duty at the Naval Auxiliary Hospital at Malta, returned to England in the Himalaya.

A correspondent of the Hampshire Telegraph writes that the Monarch is in a fearful state. This ship has just been docked at Malta, when her rudder was found to be in a very defective condition. The whole of the interior angle irons were worn out, and the centre one actually fractured. It would also appear that the engines of this ship have not given much satisfaction since they were converted from jet to surface condensers, this operation having been performed so long ago as 1877-78. The ship has become a very expensive and interesting toy to the Dockyard authorities at Malta. In two years the tubes of the condensers, numbering about 18,000 in all, have, since the Monarch's arrival on the Mediterranean station, been renewed twice—first in 1880, and afterwards in 1882. They have now given out a third time, and are being temporarily repaired, in the hope of making the ship efficient for the coming summer cruise, and nothing more. The engineering talent at Malta Dockyard is unable to discover the cause of the deterioration. This is a matter which deserves being inquired into, for, apart from the cost entailed by the frequent renewal of these many miles of tubes, there is to be considered the inconvenience caused by one of our turret-ships being placed hors de combat for several weeks annually.

Mr. Albert J. Durston will be appointed chief engineer of Portsmouth Dockyard, Mr. A. Morcom succeeding him at Sheerness. Mr. J. T. Corner will thereupon be promoted from second to first assistant at Portsmouth, and Mr. R. Mayston made second assistant.

A court-martial was held on Wednesday, on board the Duncan, to try Lieut. H. V. Baker, of that ship, on a charge of intoxication whilst in command of a party of seamen, sent to navigate the Agamemnon from Sheerness to Portsmouth. The court found the charge proved, and sentenced the prisoner to lose two years' seniority and be dismissed his ship.

Rear-Admiral Sir Frederick Sullivan, Director of Transports, made the first official inspection of the ships under his charge on Tuesday. He then visited Portsmouth, and discussed with the dockyard authorities the details connected with the illumination of all troopships by means of the electric light.

The question of abandoning the port of Vizagapatam as a military station has again been reopened by the General commanding the district, and is at present under the consideration of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in India.

A correspondent in Hong Kong furnishes us with information respecting the serious accident which happened on board H.M.S. Daring at Yokohama. It would appear that whilst that vessel was at target-practice in the Bay on Feb. 23, the breech of her 68-pounder muzzle-loading gun blew out, killing two men instantaneously, and wounding several others, the names of the deceased being Timothy Connolly, able seaman, and Private John Rendell, R.M.L.I. The Curaçoa subsequently called at Yokohama, and transferred one of her guns to the Daring to replace the disabled weapon, as well as 14 men to make up her complement.

ARMY NOTES.

The Times of India says :—"Major-Gen. Wood has just vacated the command of the Northern Division of the Bombay Army on being promoted to Lieut.-Gen., and Brigadier-Gen. Carnegy has been chosen to succeed him. Gen. Carnegy has left Bombay for Ahmedabad, and the high respect in which he is held here was testified to by the large number of military officers and other friends who assembled at the station to see him off. The Marine Battalion, the regiment with which Gen. Carnegy was so long identified before he assumed the Bombay command, furnished a guard of honour—a quite spontaneous mark of attention, we believe. The new commandant of the Bombay District is Col. R. Mallaby, 13th N.I., who took a prominent part in the Afghan Campaign, first commanding the Field Column which went in Khakar Sora Valley in Sept. 1880, and subsequently commanding the Reserve Brigade of the Quetta Garrison. He has arrived here from Rajkote and entered upon his new duties."

A Major-General writes an excellent letter to the Standard, under the head of "Twelve Years with the Colours." He says :—"As a former commanding officer of one of the finest regiments in her Majesty's Army—one of the old standard—I have been pained and grieved by appeals from old comrades in the ranks who, having completed twelve years' service with the colours, are thrown adrift on the world, and, seeking employment in civil life, find the gravest difficulty in obtaining even the necessaries of daily existence. I fear hundreds of these young, able-bodied, war-trained soldiers are in this serious strait. Only yesterday, a fine, young man, 29 years of age, fitted in every way for a long renewal of his late calling, found out his old Colonel, and gave me the details of a hard story, the truth of which I see no reason to doubt. He told me, in no whining spirit, but with manly confidence, that his twelve years had expired just previous to the late Egyptian Campaign, for which he was compulsorily retained, and served with his distinguished corps in every engagement, winding up with the rush at Tel-el-Kebir. He is in possession of a certificate of education, two good-conduct badges, and his parchment certificate of discharge notifies his conduct as 'very good,' sustained in this special feature by a private testimonial from his commanding officer, who fell severely wounded while leading such men to victory; he also has other strong proofs fully corroborative of his trustworthy character. Only 29, in the very prime of manhood, he told me that nearly 150 men like himself—nearly all holders of good-conduct badges—were cast adrift at the same time, and though desirous of serving on, their appeal to do so was repudiated by the home Military authorities. I ask, why were this thoroughly efficient soldier and his comrades ousted from the service, when their discipline and valour had done their work for the honour and interests of England, and when their retainment would have been of such value? My heart goes out to these wandering warriors, the more so as I had an active hand in calling them to the profession of arms to which they have done such credit. My late comrade observed that the gap caused by their leaving their regiment at Alexandria has been or must be filled up by comparative youths; and, he added, 'I am far better suited to be a soldier now in every way—health, strength, intelligence, and will—than I was 12 years ago;' and this must apply to the greater part of the 150 castaways. Such is a story which must speak for itself; and, putting aside the position of the men themselves, the question in other features demands attention on important national grounds."

The death is announced, as having taken place at his residence, Uplands, St. Leonard's-on-Sea, on Monday, in his 81st year, of Sir Thomas Howell, formerly Director of Contracts at the War Office. The deceased was the son of the late Mr. T. Howell, of Clapham Common, and was born in June, 1802. He was educated at the Charterhouse, and in early life was engaged in commercial pursuits connected with the Army service, and, after being so employed many years, was, in June, 1855, appointed Director-General of Contracts to her Majesty's War Department, which office he held till 1874, when he retired.

The Standard says :—"The Earl of Morley's Committee on the Army Medical and Transport Departments, which has been sitting at intervals for the last six months, has just concluded its inquiries. The Committee's report has been finally considered; but, being very voluminous, it is not expected to be out of the printer's hands for some time. Several important changes in the administration of the two Departments will be advised by the Committee."

The Secretary for War has approved of Major E. Clayton, R.A., being appointed Professor of Fortification and Artillery at the Royal Military Staff College, Farnborough, vice Col. Lonsdale Hale, from July 31.

The first general meeting of the shareholders of the African Syndicate Company, Limited, was held last week, at the offices, St. Swithin's Lane. The chairman, Lord Robert Montagu, who presided, stated that all the shares had now been allotted, and that the engineers, who had worked independently of each other, agreed in stating that the mineral value of the land, especially of the goldfields bought by the Company, greatly exceeded the expectations which had been formed. Some 2,000,000 acres have now been acquired by the Syndicate, and a large company, with a capital, probably, of £5,000,000, will immediately be formed for developing the great natural resources, agricultural, and mineral, of the Transvaal.

The directors of the Pictorial Printing and Publishing Company, formed on June 20, 1882, for the purpose of purchasing the copyright, &c., of the Pictorial World, announce the issue of £37,000 of shares. Judging by the circulation of the two other sixpenny illustrated papers, the Graphic and the Illustrated London News, and by the progress made since the commencement of the new series of the Pictorial World, a weekly sale of from 70,000 to 80,000 copies is anticipated, with a very much larger increase on certain special occasions, there having been printed, as already stated, as many as 101,493 of one number.

* [The charge of maladministration, frequently brought against the Admiralty in these columns, is more than confirmed by this paragraph in the Report of the Committee. The Admiralty have simply been wasting the funds of the public, and inquiry into the administration of the Navy is, therefore, an absolute necessity.—Ed. A. & N. G.]

The Army.

Royal Horse Guards Blue. Lieut.-Col. Burnaby is gradually improving, but owing to the weakness of the heart and the lung mischief, his progress is necessarily slow.

1st Dragoon Guards. Lieut.-Col. Thompson has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on private affairs.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys). The Liverpool Courier says :—"It has not been announced what regiment will succeed the 2nd Dragoon Guards (Queen's Bays) in Manchester and Liverpool, but the 2nd Dragoons (Scots Greys), now in Ireland, are likely to be selected. The Greys were last in Manchester in 1865, at which time there was no cavalry detachment in Liverpool. Liverpool became a cavalry station in 1868, when a detachment of the 15th Hussars were quartered here. Infantry succeeded the troopers, and in 1870 the 4th Dragoon Guards commenced a two years' occupation of Rupert-lane Barracks, followed by the 5th and 7th Dragoon Guards, 12th Lancers, 7th Hussars, &c."

8th Hussars. Rdgmr. Eaton has compiled a very useful drill-book, for the guidance of non-commissioned officers and men of the mounted services in the riding-school. It is published by H. Little and Son, 77½ Bishopsgate Street Within, E.C.

17th Lancers. Lieut.-Col. Boulderson has been granted leave from India to England for seven months, on private affairs.

19th Hussars. Lieut. Freeman sailed for Egypt on Wednesday in H.M.S. Jumna.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Lieut. C. T. J. Noble, a probationer, wing-officer 5th Madras N.I., is about to be admitted to the Madras S.C., with effect from Oct. 7, 1880.

Lieut. G. T. Kelaart, Comy. of Ordnance, 3rd class, has been granted leave from India to England.

Major-Gen. W. W. Barry, C.B., died on April 19, at Naples. He was the youngest son of the late Major-Gen. H. G. Barry, of Ballyclough, county Cork, and entered the Army in 1846. He took part in the campaign of 1854-55, including the battles of Alma, Balaclava, and Inkerman, and the seige and fall of Sebastopol, for which services he obtained the brevet rank of major, the medal with four clasps, the Turkish and Sardinian medals, and the fifth class of the Medjidie. He served also in India in 1857-58, being present at the relief of Lucknow, the battle of Cawnpore, and the siege and capture of Lucknow. For these services he was twice mentioned in despatches, and received the brevet of lieutenant-colonel. In 1860, he served with the expedition to China, and was present at Sinho, Tangku, the capture of the Taku forts, and the surrender of Pekin. He was promoted to a colonelcy in 1877. He was for some time brigadier-general commanding the Belgaum district, in Bombay. Gen. Barry was nominated a C.B. for his services in China.

"A Horse Artilleryman," writes from India :—"There are one or two points in your article on the proposed reorganisation of the Royal Artillery to which I should like to call attention, more especially in regard to those changes which are apparently contemplated in the nomenclature and dress of the Royal Horse Artillery. According to the writer, the batteries of the late Horse Artillery will still be 'armed with a light gun, their gunners mounted, their mobility increased. The batteries which gained such a reputation in the Peninsular and Waterloo campaigns will be preserved intact.' What then is the proposed change? The writer goes on to say, 'the existing dress is expensive, uncomfortable, and unserviceable; it is invariably discarded as an incumbrance on active service.' I presume it is then proposed to change the full dress of the Royal Horse Artillery. But does not the last quoted sentence apply equally in every respect not only to Hussar and Cavalry full dress, but to the tunic of the Royal Artillery and Infantry? If a regiment now-a-days take their full dress on service with them, they never wear it except for a special occasion, such as a march-past at the close of a campaign; and then, what dress is more effective than the jacket of the Horse Artilleryman? Having worn the dress many years, I may be permitted to express the opinion that, though expensive at start, the jacket lasts a long time, and is neither uncomfortable or unserviceable far less so than a tunic. The lace supports the body in the saddle, and if worn in action would be considerable protection against sword cuts. Now as regards nomenclature, I presume these new 'equally effective' batteries would be called Light Field batteries, the name 'Royal Horse Artillery' being abandoned, and with it our present proud position on the right of the British Army. The feeling of the authorities may be against the maintenance of corps d'élite, but not that of those who have once served in such, or who wish to do so. The removal of our position on the right of the Line and handsome dress may seem a trifling matter in these levelling days, though Highlanders did not think so a short time back, but it is not looked upon as such by officers, non-commissioned officers, and men who have and have had the honour of serving in a battery of Royal Horse Artillery. Reforms in the regiment generally are doubtless required,—the total separation of Horse and Field from Garrison Artillery is to be hoped for, and perhaps the breaking-up of the Royal Regiment into smaller ones; but even if the jacket is doomed, and in common with the writer of your article, I believe our prestige too high to be 'seriously influenced by the cut of a jacket,' let us at all events keep our name and position, or 'Ichabod,' instead of 'Ubique,' must be for the future our motto."

At the last winter assizes at Winchester, Gunner William Pearce, stationed at Gosport, was sentenced to five years' penal servitude for alleged arson, several farm buildings having at that time been burned down. The matter, however, was laid before the Home Secretary, with the result that Pearce has returned to duty with a free pardon.

"Late Indian Artillery" writes :—"It is to be presumed that the injustice to the old Royal Artillery, caused by the unlimited tenures of command held by officers of the late Indian Lists, and so forcibly pointed out in the Army and Navy Gazette of the 14th inst., will not be allowed to continue much longer; and the sooner arrangements are made to do away with the anomaly, the better for all concerned. At the same time, it would be but just that officers of higher ranks than lieut.-col. should bear their fair share in any remedial measure, or the brevet colonels will be sufferers, much in the same way as major-generals of the Line now are, by being kept out of their legitimate commands by the rank above them. To prevent this it is necessary—(1), That the order allowing our major-generals to reside for three years in India, unemployed, on the full pay of colonels, be cancelled; and (2), that all colonels who have completed five years in the rank be put on an Unemployed List. It must be remembered that many of the lieut.-cols. have only enjoyed 'command pay' for about half their five years."

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Mr. Carbutt asked the Under-Secretary of State for India on Monday, to state under what circumstances Lieut. G. K. Scott Moncrieff, R.E., and other officers of Royal Engineers attached to the Indian Public Works Department, were permitted to draw their civil pay as members of that department as well as their military pay during the time they were employed on field service discharging military duties in the late Afghan campaign. Mr. Cross said the established rule had been followed of allowing half civil pay in addition to military pay and allowances.

The 27th (Torpedo) Company vacated the barrack-ship Hood in Chatham Harbour on Tuesday, and moved into the quarters at St. Mary's casemated barracks. The 23rd Company, which is also a submarine engineering company, arrived at Chatham on Wednesday from the Milton musketry depôt, and also went into quarters at St. Mary's Barracks, which will in future be used as a depôt for the torpedo companies, and also for the balloon equipment of the corps.

6th Royal Warwickshire Regiment. Lieut. Greenwood, 2nd Batn., is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 19th Madras N.I., on probation.

11th Devonshire Regiment. Major Vaughan, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for nine months, on urgent private affairs.

14th West Yorkshire Regiment. Major Hutchinson, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on private affairs.

20th Lancashire Fusiliers. An exchange has been sanctioned between Capts. Paull and Orred, Capt. Paull joining the 2nd and Capt. Orred the 1st Batn. Lieut. Brackenbury, 2nd Batn., is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 1st Bombay N.I.

24th South Wales Borderers. Lieut. Caulfield is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 10th Madras N.I., on probation.

25th King's Own Borderers. A shooting match took place at Berwick-on-Tweed on the 20th inst. between 80 serjeants of the depôt and a similar number of the Berwick Artillery Volunteers, resulting in a victory for the Borderers by 14 points. In the evening, the winning team entertained their opponents to supper in their mess-room, under the presidency of Serjt.-Major Graham, when a most enjoyable evening was spent.

29th Worcestershire Regiment. Lieut. Lincoln is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 17th Bombay N.I., on probation. Lieut. Clarke has been granted leave from India to England for four months, on private affairs.

35th Royal Sussex Regiment. Lieut. and Adjt. Pierson left England on Wednesday for Egypt, in charge of a draft of 104 men, in H.M.S. Jumna. Qrmr. Croft also took passage in the Jumna.

41st Welsh Regiment. Lieut. Jones has applied to join the Indian S.C., on probation.

42nd Black Watch (Royal Highlanders). Lieut.-Col. Coveney, and Lieuts. Home and Souter, and 128 men sailed for Egypt on Wednesday in H.M.S. Jumna.

44th Essex Regiment. Lieut. Brabazon has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on urgent private affairs.

46th Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry. Lieut. Holland has applied to join the Indian S.C., on probation. Lieut. Cunningham sailed for Egypt on Wednesday in H.M.S. Jumna.

47th Loyal North Lancashire Regiment. Capt. Sawyer and Lieut. Leonard sailed for Gibraltar on Wednesday in H.M.S. Jumna.

49th Berkshire Regiment. Lieut. Delamain and 150 men sailed for Gibraltar on Wednesday in H.M.S. Jumna.

50th Queen's Own (Royal West Kent Regiment). Lieut. Wintour sailed for Cyprus on Wednesday in H.M.S. Jumna.

The Admiralty have appointed Col. 2nd Commandant Geoffrey Mairis, R.M.L.I., to the command of the Royal Marine Depôt at Walmer, vice Col. Maskery, deceased.

The following promotions have taken place consequent upon the death of Col. 2nd Commandant J. H. Maskery :—Lieut.-Col. and Col. Howard Sutton Jones, C.B., A.D.C., to be Col. 2nd Commandant, vice Maskery, and appointed to the Plymouth Division, vice Mairis, transferred to Chatham, for duty at the depôt, Walmer; Major and Brevet Lieut.-Col. John Delves Broughton to be Lieut.-Col. at the Plymouth Division, vice Jones.

Capt. A. H. Blaxland, R.M.L.I., has embarked in the Neptune, to replace Major C. Frampton, R.M.L.I., who has been admitted into Haslar Hospital seriously ill, suffering from an attack of pneumonia.

Qrmr.-Serjt. Edwin Albert Syms, R.M.L.I., has been promoted to the rank of Qrmr. at the Plymouth Division, vice Qrmr. Rendell, deceased.

58th Northamptonshire Regiment. The Times of Natal of March 14 has the following :—"It is a pleasant fact to record that some recognition has at last been made of an act of heroism by a British soldier on Natal soil. The decoration of Private Charles Godfrey, of the 58th Regt., with the distinguished-conduct medal, an event which took place at the garrison, Fort Napier, March 14, should prove to the private soldier that so long as he has the fortune to serve in a regiment which is commanded by gentlemen and men of honour, he may feel tolerably sure that any special act of bravery and daring he may commit in the field will sooner or later meet with some reward. It is more than two years ago since Private Charles Godfrey, of the 58th Regt., performed an act of valour which entitled him to the Victoria Cross; but individual deeds of valour counted for very little in the Boer War, and Godfrey must think himself lucky that his colonel has been able to obtain for him the badge which was pinned to his coat that day, although, in fact, something more was actually earned by him. The soldier who has won in the Boer War a badge of any kind whatsoever would not, we imagine, exchange it for the whole hundreds of cartloads of medals and decorations thrown broadcast after the Egyptian Campaign; and Private Godfrey, who stood alone by the body of Major Hingeston on the slopes of Laing's Nek on Jan. 28, 1881, exposing himself to the fire not only of the unerring rifles of the enemy, but to the answering bullets of his retiring comrades, may be pardoned if he is a proud man to-day."

60th King's Royal Rifle Corps. Major Crosbie, Capt. Henley, and 65 men, 3rd Batn., sailed for Egypt on Wednesday in H.M.S. Jumna.

61st Gloucestershire Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Fane has been granted leave from India to England, for twelve months, on private affairs.

63rd Manchester Regiment. The officers attended the Prince of Wales's Levée on Monday as a body, and were presented to his Royal Highness by Lieut.-Col. Auchinleck. They were nearly all wearing three decorations, but the insignia of the C.B. was conspicuously absent from the breast of "the chief," than whom no commanding officer in the service is more deserving of recognition. Lieut. Gardner, a probationer, wing-officer 5th Madras N.I., is about to be admitted to the Madras S.C., with effect from Jan. 11, 1882.

65th York and Lancaster Regiment. Major C. J. Ewen, formerly captain of the regiment, and for many years adjutant of the 2nd West York Militia, died at Old Windsor on the 19th inst., aged 57 years.

71st Highland Light Infantry. Major J. A. S. Inglis died suddenly at Cyprus on the 1st inst. The deceased entered the Army in Oct., 1867, and became major on May 6, 1882. The following special Official Gazette was published on April 7:—"The High Commissioner announces with deep regret the death of Major J. A. S. Inglis, the Commissioner of Nikosia, which lamented event took place on the 1st inst. Major Inglis has served in Cyprus since the British occupation in July, 1878. For three and a half years he had resided at Famagusta, for the most part as Commissioner of that district, and the High Commissioner is well aware, from his personal observation, of the esteem and respect which he had earned from all classes by his genial manners and kindly administration. By his death, her Majesty has lost an upright and devoted servant, the people of Cyprus a warm friend, and the High Commissioner a trusted and faithful colleague."

72nd Seaforth Highlanders. Sir W. H. Dyke asked the Secretary of State for War, on Thursday, whether the officers of the 63rd Regt. and 72nd Highlanders, having received six months' field allowance during service in Egypt, in common with the officers of other regiments, had since been called upon to refund the same; and, if so, whether any justification could be found for treating these regiments, specially summoned from India to serve in Egypt, in a less generous manner than our English troops? Mr. J. K. Cross replied: The officers referred to were not considered entitled to the advance of six months' field allowance, because up to the date of their landing in Egypt they continued to receive those higher rates of Indian pay which include the provision of field equipment, to meet the cost of which the advance in question was made to officers proceeding on service from England. From the date of their landing in Egypt, however, they received the War-Office daily rate of field allowance. The regimental authorities of the Seaforth Highlanders drew the whole of the six months' advance, and have been called upon to refund. The claim of the Manchester Regt. to the advance was disallowed. The India Office has now under immediate consideration the claim of the officers to the whole of the six months' advance. Sir W. H. Dyke said he would put a further question on the subject.

74th Highland Light Infantry. The whole of the troops in garrison at Devonport paraded in review order on Mount Wise, on the 20th inst., the occasion being the presentation of a medal for distinguished conduct in the field to Colour-Serjt. Robinson. Major-Gen. Sayer, commanding the Western District, made the presentation and said :—"It is my pleasing duty this morning to present a medal to you for distinguished conduct in the field. I will read part of a letter I have received from the Horse Guards :—'Sir,—In reply to your letter I am desired to acquaint you that her Majesty the Queen has been pleased to approve, on the recommendation of his Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, the grant of a silver medal for distinguished conduct in the field to Colour-Serjt. Robinson, in recognition of his gallant conduct during the campaign in Egypt. The medal, when prepared, will be forwarded to you for presentation to him on parade in as public a manner as possible.' For the benefit of those who may not know what this medal is presented for, I will give you a brief account of what Colour-Serjt. Robinson did—what he performed. It seems that on the night before the battle of Tel-el-Kebir, he was performing the duties of quartermaster-serjeant. He made himself very conspicuous by the way in which he performed those duties, issuing rum, &c. When his battalion went on to the front, after seeing that everything was right in the rear, Colour-Serjt. Robinson took his rifle and volunteered to go forward. He accompanied his battalion, and was distinguished for conspicuous bravery in the engagement with the enemy when they got into the trenches. I hope this may be an incitement to young soldiers to imitate the conduct of this gallant man. Come forward, Serjt. Robinson. I have great pleasure in giving this medal to you, and hope you may live long to wear it."

77th Middlesex Regiment. Lieut. Smart has applied to join the Indian S.C., on probation.

79th Cameron Highlanders. Lieut. Hackett sailed Egypt on Wednesday, in charge of a draft of 115 men, in H.M.S. Jumna.

81st Loyal North Lancashire Regiment. Lieut. Grimstone is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 45th Bengal N.I.

88th Connaught Rangers. Capt. Maher, on leave from India, has been appointed to the depôt for duty.

89th Royal Irish Fusiliers. Lieut.-Col. Dunn has been granted leave from India to England for fifteen months, on private affairs.

98th North Staffordshire Regiment. Capt. and Pymr. Johnson has been granted leave from India to England for eight months, on private affairs.

100th Leinster Regiment (Royal Canadians). Lieut. Keate is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 20th Madras N.I., on probation.

106th Light Infantry. Capt. FitzGerald and 16 men sailed for Gibraltar on Wednesday in H.M.S. Jumna.

107th Royal Sussex Regiment. Gen. the Hon. A. Upton, colonel of the regiment, late of the Coldstreams, died on Monday at his residence in Bruton Street, Berkeley Square, in his 77th year. The deceased was the third son of John Henry, first Viscount Templetown, and brother of the late and present Viscounts. His mother was Lady Mary Montagu, only daughter of John, fifth Earl of Sandwich. He was born in 1807, was educated at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and entered the Army in 1825. He became capt. in 1829, and was promoted to lieut.-col. in 1839, col. in 1851, major-gen. in 1855, lieut.-gen. in 1862, and gen. in 1871. He was appointed col. of the 107th Regt. in 1873, and retired from the Army in 1877. Gen. Upton, who was a magistrate and deputy-lieut. for Westmoreland, and heir presumptive to his brother's viscountcy, married in 1866 the Hon. Elizabeth Frederica, eldest daughter of Joseph, third Lord Wallscourt.

2nd West India Regiment. Col. G. D. Webber, C.B., on the Retired List, died suddenly on the 22nd inst. He entered the Army, Jan. 26, 1855; became lieut., Nov. 9, 1855; capt., Dec. 30, 1862; major, April 23, 1871; lieut.-col., Oct. 19, 1872; and col., Oct. 19, 1876. He served with the 17th Foot in the Crimea, and was at the bombardment and surrender of Kinbourne (medal and Turkish medal), and commanded the 2nd West in the Ashantee Campaign of 1873-74, (medal with clasp, and C.B.)

Rifle Brigade. Lieut. Winn, 4th Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for fifteen months, on private affairs.

Pay Department. "Hopeless" writes:—"I have been for nearly two years done out of my servant's allowance, although unable to get a suitable soldier-servant. I gathered from Sir A. Hayter's speech, when the Army Estimates for the present year were brought forward, that we should, in future, have the option of drawing the allowance or of being provided with a soldier-servant. Imagine, then, my dismay, when week after week passes without the Army Pay Department Warrant making its appearance! Surely, this should not be? But what can be expected when the Department is not represented at the War Office?"

Medical Department. Surg.-Gen. J. L. Holloway, C.B., died at Netley on the 19th inst., aged 57 years. The deceased, who was the son of the late Mr. B. Holloway, D.L., J.P., of Lee Place, Charlbury, Oxon., entered the Army as assist.-surg., March 17, 1848; became surg., Oct. 2, 1857; surg.-major, March 17, 1868; deputy-surg.-gen., April 28, 1876; and surg.-gen., March 12, 1882. Surg.-Major E. C. Maskey has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate.

Veterinary Department. First-class Vet.-Surg. F. W. Going has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate.

MILITIA.

The following regiments assembled on Monday for their annual training—in each case for 27 days, which will terminate on May 19:—2nd Brig., Eastern Division (Norfolk Artillery), at Yarmouth; 3rd Brig., Welsh Division (Royal Carmarthen Artillery), at Carmarthen; 4th Brig., Welsh Division (Royal Pembroke Artillery), at Haverfordwest; 3rd and 4th Batns. East Kent, at Shorncliffe Camp; 3rd Batn. Oxfordshire Light Infantry (Buckinghamshire Militia), at High Wycombe; 4th Batn. South Wales Borderers (Royal Montgomeryshire Militia), at Welshpool; and 4th Batn. Leinster Regt. (Queen's County Militia), at Maryborough.

The under-mentioned regiments are ordered to assemble for 27 days' training on Monday:—Royal Lancashire Artillery (2nd Brig. Lancashire Division), at Liverpool; 5th Brig., South Irish Division (Tipperary Artillery), at Duncannon Fort; 4tn Batn. Devonshire Regt. (1st Devon), in camp at Winford, near Exeter; 4th Batn. Essex Regt. (West Essex), at Warley Barracks; 3rd and 4th Batns. Royal West Kent, at Shorncliffe; 4th Batn. Royal Fusiliers (London Militia), at Finsbury; 3rd Batn. Suffolk (West Suffolk), at Bury St. Edmunds.

VOLUNTEERS.

The Marquis of Hartington, replying to Mr. T. Egerton on the 20th inst., said there would be no manœuvres this year at Aldershot, but certain Volunteer corps had been invited to join the Camp of Instruction for regular troops from the 11th to the 25th of August, and that invitation was sent out on Thursday. Mr. G. Russell asked whether the Secretary of State for War would consider the advisability of issuing a bronze medal to every Volunteer of 21 years' service, with a clasp for every additional year which he had served up to this time. The Marquis of Hartington replied: A question almost similar to this one was put to my right hon. friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on June 10, 1881. He replied to the effect that, as Volunteers were already allowed to wear a star for every five years of efficient service, it was unnecessary and inexpedient to issue a medal or badge for long service. I do not see any reason to differ from the opinion expressed by my predecessor, and I am inclined to think the issue of medals should be restricted to war service, to long and meritorious Army service, and to the saving of life.

It is stated that the objection of the United States National Guard to competing against the Volunteers of Great Britain, unless allowed to use the wind-gauge sight in use in the United States, will not be pressed, and that the match will this year be shot at Wimbledon with the old sight.

The attention of the Secretary for War having been called to the number of Volunteer corps now in existence whose establishments are far below the required strength to constitute a corps, orders will be given by the War-Office authorities to Generals commanding the several districts to at once take steps to reduce the number of such corps, should it be found impracticable, in a reasonable time, to enrol the required men to make the said corps efficient.

Reviews.

Ready Money. By Maurice Hyrne, LL.D. (W. H. Guest.)—There are few, if any, who will be bold enough to under-value the soundness of the principles laid down in this little treatise. The advantages of ready-money payment are pointed out by the author with eloquent simplicity, which can scarcely fail to create a highly favourable impression. Having entirely exhausted the subject, he concludes his useful little treatise with the following observations:—"The young man who starts in life firmly determined to adhere rigidly to the advice of this essay in regard to prompt cash payments, will save himself all through his life from much trouble, anxiety, waste of time, loss, litigation, dishonour, and shame, besides securing to himself much positive happiness, happiness resulting from the proud feeling, the joyful consciousness that he is doing what is right and wise in systematically pursuing a method of economy that is beneficial to others, no less than to himself; that he is free and independent; that he is respected; that, in short, he owes no man anything, except that charity and good fellowship which, as Christians, we all owe one to another."

Episodes in the Life of an Indian Chaplain. By a Retired Chaplain. (Sampson Low, Marston, Searle, and Rivington.)—An interesting volume of life in India, written by an able hand, and so arranged as to make a very readable book. We recommend it as well worthy of perusal.

Cassell's Library of English Literature.—This is the first part of a most important work, prepared and edited by Professor Morley, the purpose being that of providing a compact and comprehensive library of English thought, from the earliest times to our own day. In order to accomplish this, it will be necessary to publish a few volumes which should prove sufficient to carry out the author's intentions. The first will contain a series selected from all the best and most characteristic of those poems which are short enough to be given in full, followed by a corresponding series of the best of our prose works, and a series of pieces in prose and verse, illustrating from first to last the religious life of England. Also a series of plays by the best dramatists, from the time of the miracle plays downwards. Each of these volumes will be illustrated freely with copies from trustworthy portraits, sketches of places, contemporary illustrations of manners and customs, or of incidents described or referred to in the pieces quoted. There can be but one opinion as to the importance of a work like this to every class of reader. To use Professor Morley's words, "The Library of English Literature seeks to draw for rich, for poor, for young and old, the healthiest of pleasures from the highest human source. It will illustrate all forms of thought, from the lightest jest that has the true ring in it, to the utmost reach of heavenward aspiration. It will put no true man under ban for his opinions, but fairly represent as far as space permits the various forms of that endeavour of the English people which is as old as England and alone keeps England young,—the firm endeavour to find out the right, and do it for the love of God."

SPECTACLES v. BLINDNESS.—"Spectacles can only be perfectly adjusted by those having a thorough knowledge of the anatomy of the eye, combined with optical experience."—We have the highest medical authorities confirmed by daily experience, that imperfect glasses, together with the haphazard plan of selection generally employed by the mere vendor, is the cause of most cases of blindness and defective vision. Sir Julius Benedict writes:—"I have tried the principal opticians in London without success, but the spectacles you have adapted suit admirably. The clearness of your glasses as compared with others is really surprising." The Rev. Professor W. A. Hales, M.A. Cantab., 2 Minford Gardens, West Kensington Park, writes:—"The spectacles are perfect, and a most decided boon. I had occasion on Monday to write to Lord ——, and took the opportunity to mention your name and the wonderful power of your spectacles." Dr. Bird, Chelmsford, writes:—"I could not have believed it possible that my sight could have been so much improved and relieved at my age (82). I can now read the smallest type, although suffering from cataract on the right eye." Testimonials from Earl and Countess Lindsay; F. D. Dixon Hartland, Esq., M.P.; the Venerable Archdeacon Palmer, Clifton; Rev. Mother Abbess, St. Mary's Abbey, Mill Hill, Hendon; C. J. Alford, Esq., Gas Light and Coke Company, Horseferry Road, Westminster, &c. Mr. HENRY LAURANCE, F.S.S., Oculist Optician, 39 OLD BOND STREET, W. (late 3 Endsleigh Gardens, Euston Square), personally adapts his Improved Spectacles daily (Saturdays excepted), from 10 to 5. Special arrangements are made for invalids and others unable to wait on Mr. Laurance. Pamphlet, "Spectacles: their Use and Abuse," post free. City Branch, 6 Poultry, Cheapside.

MUSKETRY INSTRUCTION IN THE ARMY.

The annual report of the "Progress of Musketry Instruction in the Army," prepared by Col. Harrison Trent, Inspector-General of Musketry, Hythe, has just been issued. Col. Trent states that the number of men exercised was 105,034, viz., 12,693 in the Cavalry, and 92,341 in the Infantry. The annual course of both was well carried out, and though there were 3,473 men not available for training, this number was less by 42 per cent. than in previous returns, and is annually lessening in a satisfactory manner. Field-firing was extensively carried out in India, as well as by all battalions at Malta, Aldershot, Gosport, Shorncliffe, and for the first time at Birr and Jersey. Col. Trent thinks that in a modified form, such as a company broken up into sections in the formation for attack, it might be practised in many other stations both at home and abroad. The individual firing of the recruits was not quite so good. but the volley, independent, and skirmishing were all better, The amount awarded as prizes for shooting and skill in judging distance was £17,923 15s., or £1,283 more than the previous year. Revolver practice was carried out in the Cavalry by those ranks armed with the weapon, and in the Infantry by the staff serjeants. The results are very satisfactory, but still are not nearly so good as they might be, and Col. Trent considers that the adoption of a new system of revolver drill and practice, such as was submitted in 1880, would, without doubt, be very beneficial. In the Cavalry, "the shooting appears to be steadily improving; it is 1·44 points per man better than it was last year, and the percentage of marksmen has increased from 6·15 to 7·72 per cent." The classification of efficiency in musketry in the Infantry gives 15 as "very good," 64 "good," 58 "moderate," and 2 as "bad." Of the 58 "moderate," 36 battalions were stationed at home, 13 in India, 9 in the Colonies, and the 2 "bad" are the West India Regiments. The results of the individual firing are satisfactory, there being an increase in the average at every distance and an increase altogether of 2·89 points per man. The number of marksmen has increased from 15,692 to 18,207, an increase of 1·94 per cent. Thirty-one battalions have more than 25 per cent. of their men marksmen (of these 13 battalions were stationed in India), and 4 had less than 10 per cent. The results of the volley firing cannot be compared with those of any previous year, in consequence of the practice having been held at three distances instead of at one as formerly. Five hundred and eighty-seven officers, an increase of six, executed the individual firing of the annual course, with the following result, which compares very favourably with that of the men, viz.:—118·54, as against 103·12; 1,785 officers also executed the judging-distance practice, half of which number were classified as first-class judges of distances.

"CHANGE OF COLOUR."

Sir,—It seemed to me quite incredible, until I had read the comments and letters on the subject in the Army and Navy Gazette, that the abandonment of our national red as the distinctive national colour in the Army was seriously contemplated; for though we live in an age of most marvellous and extraordinary military changes, that of which I now make mention would (I may venture to say, the whole service would assert) be the last to be suggested. We have a great appreciation of the "Prussian blue," and yet that colour is adopted and maintained by the most military nation in Europe, and the French have not seen fit to change it. And yet, it is far more visible, either close or far, than the British red, relieved as it is by accoutrements and straps. Enquiry is being made by various military pundits, I am informed, at this moment, as to the cause of the rapid changes of hue of the chameleon, in order that, on discovery, the secret may be applied to a cloth which will change in colour at every change of position, ground, and shade. It is not supposed that even a spectre is quite invisible, because it must have been at some time seen, to have been reported. But I trust that the efforts in the direction of invisibility may be crowned with success, and delight the heart of many a one who is, like myself, a Military Cagliostro.

Sir,—As you have, I am glad to see, opened your columns on this subject, allow me to make a few remarks. It is, I believe, admitted by the Committee which recommended the abolition of our glorious, time-honoured scarlet that dark blue and rifle green are nearly, if not quite, as conspicuous as red. If this is the case, why, I ask, did not the Germans—those masters in the art of war, and whom we are so ready to copy—discontinue their dark blue tunics and trousers and their conspicuous brass-mounted helmets, after their late campaigns in France? Their Cavalry is still dressed in the brightest colours, such as white, sky-blue, scarlet, &c., but no change has been deemed necessary by their far-seeing Von Moltke. Again, the French still retain their blue tunics and red trousers. The Russians have not given up their dark green tunics; nor, in fact, has any Army in Europe, the Austrian excepted, seen fit to abandon its time-honoured national colour. Why, then, should we give up the scarlet in which British soldiers have fought and conquered since the days of Cromwell.—I am, &c.,

Audacious, Capt. R. E. Tracey, flagship of Vice-Admiral G. Willes, C.B., Commander-in-Chief on the China station, was at Hong Kong up to March 20. The Daring was at Yokoska on March 9, ordered to Corea, to relieve Moorhen. Sheldrake at Yokohama. Zephyr at Shanghai on March 10, ordered to Newchwang. Kestrel at Shanghai. Cleopatra, Curaçoa, Swift, Pegasus, Linnet, Albatross, Vigilant, Flying Fish, Magpie, and the reserve ships Wivern, Midge, Esk, and Tweed at Hong Kong.

Beacon, Com. Arthur W. Moore, left Malta on April 16, on passage home to pay off at Chatham. She may shortly be expected.

Boadicea, Capt. Edmund Church, flagship of Rear-Admiral Nowell Salmon, C.B., V.C., Commander-in-Chief of the Cape of Good Hope and West Coast of Africa station, was in dock at Simon's Town on April 25. The Briton was in Simon's Bay, waiting the arrival of the Sapphire.

Canada, Capt. Durrant, will be commissioned on May 1. H.R.H. Prince George of Wales will complete his time as a midshipman in the Canada.

Cockatrice, Lieut. and Com. H. W. Hill, having for several months past been undergoing repairs in the Turkish Dockyard at Constantinople, is at last ready for sea. She has had a top-gallant forecastle built in order to add to the comfort of her crew. By special order of the Sultan, the Ottoman Admiralty has been prohibited from accepting any payment for the work. The Cockatrice is to remain until the arrival of the Helicon, which is expected in the first week of May, from Egypt, with Lord Dufferin on board. She will then resume her station on the Danube, the Helicon probably remaining as an Embassy despatch-boat until the return of the Antelope from Malta.

Constance, Capt. Doughty, was at Coquimbo on March 11, about to start for Callao.

Dragon, Com. Bolitho, was cruising in the Gulf of Aden on April 5.

Duncan, Capt. John D'Arcy, flagship of Vice-Admiral E. B. Rice, C.B., Commander-in-Chief at the Nore. A court-martial assembled on board on Wednesday for the trial of Lieut. Henry V. Baker, Royal Naval Barracks, for that he, being a person subject to the Naval Discipline Act, did, between April 7 and 10, drink intoxicating liquors to such excess as to incapacitate him from the performance of his duty. Capt. John D'Arcy, H.M.S. Duncan, prosecuted; and Capt. Lord Walter T. Kerr, H.M.S. Pembroke, presided. Mr. W. B. Risk, Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief, officiated as Judge-Advocate. The prisoner pleaded guilty, and handed in a written statement in explanation of the circumstances, in which he said it was not the quantity of liquor he drank, but the quality which took effect upon him. He thought it rather severe to try him upon such a charge, when he was only suffering from a slight attack of dyspepsia. Capt. D'Arcy was called on prisoner's behalf, and that officer gave a strong recommendation in his favour. He said he was a zealous, painstaking, and good officer. Mr. Baker's certificates showed that he had been called upon to perform some very difficult duties, and that he had always carried them out to the entire satisfaction of his superior officers; also, that he was a very efficient, sober officer. The court considered the charge proved, and sentenced the prisoner to lose the whole of his seniority—nine years—and to be dismissed from his ship.

Eclipse, Capt. E. St. J. Garforth, ordered to Bushire, Persian Gulf, by March 30. The Arab was at that place.

Espoir, Lieut. and Com. Gamble, arrived at Aden on April 7, en route for the China station. She has since proceeded.

Flamingo, Com. Custance, left Port Royal, Jamaica, on April 6, for Port-au-Prince, and will return to Jamaica when services on the coast of Haiti are considered no longer necessary.

Foam, Lieut. and Com. Julian A. Baker, is ordered to leave Jamaica and join the flag at Bermuda on April 10.

Helicon, Lieut. and Com. Alfred Winsloe, left Malta on Saturday last for Alexandria to embark Lord Dufferin for Constantinople, where she may be expected to arrive about May 10.

Heroine, Capt. F. R. Blackburne, was to leave Coquimbo for Callao on March 26.

Himalaya, Capt. Palliser, from Hong Kong, Singapore, Ceylon, and Malta, arrived at Portsmouth on Saturday morning. She brought home military invalids and time-expired men, and the paid-off crews of the Pegasus and Albatross.

Nelson, Comdre. James E. Erskine, A.D.C., in command of the Australian station, was at Sydney, New South Wales, on April 25.

Neptune, Capt. Maxwell, still remains at Spithead. After completing the readjustments of her compasses in Stokes Bay on Tuesday afternoon, and when on the point of departing upon her preliminary cruise in the Channel, it was found that her engines would not start. The cranks are placed at right angles, and as they happen to stop with one crank nearly at the dead point, and the other in the position at which steam is cut off by the slide-valve, recourse was had to the hand-gear, by which the auxiliary slide-valve is worked. This was rendered so stiff by the pressure of the steam behind that it could not be removed, and some time elapsed before the ship could be brought round to Spithead. It is intended to fit the hand-gear with a lever, and remove the back-pressure upon the slide-valve by means of a cock. The additional work will keep the ship at the anchorage until Monday. This is the third mishap which has befallen the ship since she was commissioned.

Orion, Capt. Fitzroy, which has been guardship in Alexandria Harbour during the winter and up to this time, was relieved by H.M.S. Invincible on April 16, and steamed west for Malta under the usual salutes. A correspondent writes:—"We are sorry to lose the Orion, for the officers were a pleasant gentlemanly, set of fellows, and the crew were orderly and well conducted in the city, which is full of temptations, in the shape of abominable grog-shops and so-called 'saloons.' Capt. Fitzroy is a strict disciplinarian and a very smart officer, and the condition of his ship after so many months' harbour duty shows that he can turn out a smart crew without having recourse to severity or creating discontent between decks. Of his strictness in service matters, you may have heard of a specimen which caused some talk here lately. Her Majesty's Minister Plenipotentiary and Consul-Gen. Sir E. Malet arrived one night and went on board the P. & O. Venetia, which was to sail next day for Venice. The captain of the Venetia, desiring to do honour to the Ministers' presence, and to secure for his distinguished passenger the usual salute from the Mehemet Ali, ran up the 'Jack,' as he had not the proper Consular flag on hand and in a brace of shakes off came the Orion's boat, with duty officer in charge, and said officer requested the skipper to haul down the 'Jack' at once. The captain explained the reason of its display, and referred the matter to Sir E. Malet, who probably did not care what flag was up, but who, on being referred to, felt he was bound, out of regard to his position as her Majesty's Minister (entitled as such to certain marks of respect on leaving port), to have the authority for the order pointed out. Whereupon, the lieutenant returned to the Orion, and came back with a certain bulky volume, in which was a certain paragraph in a certain section setting forth that any master of a British merchant-vessel hoisting the 'Jack' should, on conviction of the offence, 'forfeit a sum not exceeding £500.' And the 'Jack' came down in a jiffy. Similar questions have arisen before now, and some have not been settled in the same way. Fitzroy may always be depended upon to do his duty." The Orion has reached Malta.

Philomel, Com. H. Berners, was paid off at Bombay on March 31, and was recommissioned the next day.

Satellite, Capt. Charles B. Theobald, was commissioned on April 24 for the Pacific station. Capt. Theobald, when a midshipman, was specially mentioned for having taken charge of and fought in the Niger's landing-party at an attack on the rebel village of Omata, his commanding officer being dangerously wounded; promoted (New Zealand medal); lieut. of pinnace of the Wasp at capture of an armed slaver, off Zanzibar, after a desperate resistance, May 12, 1865, was severely wounded, and was promoted to the rank of com. for his conspicuous gallantry on the occasion.

Seagull, Lieut. Rae (in charge), arrived at Madeira on April 23, and was to leave for Gibraltar on April 26, bound to Devonport.

Superb, Capt. T. le Hunte Ward, C.B., left Malta on April 9 for Port Augusta, and will return about first week in May.

Thetis, Capt. A. C. Curtis, left Coquimbo on March 14, homeward bound, and may be expected to arrive about the end of May.

The Admiralty have issued a Circular directing that the Treasury Regulations, relative to the service counting for superannuation of Admiralty writers, and also limiting the gratuities granted to hired men on discharge, after 20 years' service, to the amount of a year's wages, shall be shown in the Instructions, in the following manner:—Home Yard Regulations.—Page 127, art. 4, cancel paragraphs 3 and 4, and add new paragraphs as follows (Dockyard Circular No. 37 (F. 54) C., of April 4, 1883): —3. No description of temporary or hired service is allowed to reckon for pension, except only in the case of temporary clerks, writers, or copyists, who were employed before Aug. 19, 1871, and were afterwards, without interruption of service, transferred to the establishment. 4. Writers compensated by a gratuity for their service, and afterwards registered by the Civil Service Commissioners as writers on the ordinary scale, can, if transferred to the establishment, only reckon service prior to the date of such transfer, if they repay the compensation awarded to them. 5. Writers registered in respect of employment after Aug. 19, 1871, and afterwards transferred to the establishment, can count no service before the date of such transfer for superannuation. Renumber present paragraph 5 as paragraph 6. Page 129, add to art. 12 (Dockyard Circular No. 37 (F. 54) C., of April 4, 1883):—Such gratuities not to exceed the amount of one year's wages.——Instructions for her Majesty's Naval Yards Abroad.—Page 196, art. 5, cancel paragraphs 3, 4, and 5, and add new paragraphs as follows (Dockyard Circular No. 37 (F. 54) C., of April 4, 1883):—3. No description of temporary or hired service is allowed to reckon for pension, except only in the case of temporary clerks, writers, or copyists, who were employed before August 19, 1871, and were afterwards, without interruption of service, transferred to the establishment. 4. Writers compensated by a gratuity for their service, and afterwards registered by the Civil Service Commissioners as writers on the ordinary scale, can, if transferred to the establishment, only reckon service prior to the date of such transfer if they repay the compensation awarded to them. 5. Writers registered in respect of employment after August 19, 1871, and afterwards transferred to the establishment, can count no service before the date of such transfer for superannuation. Page 200, add to art. 18 (Dockyard Circular No. 37 (F. 54) C., of April 4, 1883):—Such gratuities not to exceed the amount of one year's wages.

We regret to hear that there is no improvement in the condition of Lieut. Gimlette, of the Alexandra, lying in a critical state at the Malta Hospital, from a fall into a pinnace alongside the ship, the rail of the accommodation ladder having given way as he was leaning upon it.

Throat Irritation.—Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use Epps's Glycerine Jujubes. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the Glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing. Sold only in boxes, 7½d, tins, 1s 1½d, labelled "James Epps and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London." A letter received:—"Gentlemen,—It may, perhaps, interest you to know that, after an extended trial, I have found your Glycerine Jujubes of considerable benefit (with or without medical treatment) in almost all forms of throat disease. They soften and clear the voice.—Yours faithfully, Gordon Holmes, M.D., Senior Physician to the Municipal Throat and Ear Infirmary."

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 28, 1883.

THE question brought before the House of Lords by the Earl of Sandwich has been exercising the minds of Gunnery Lieutenants for some time past. The noble earl wished to have explained to him the principle on which the senior Lieutenant had been appointed to the Garnet; observing that, the captain of that vessel having failed to obtain the officer he applied for, another was selected by the Admiralty, who, however, from some cause or another, was superseded after a few weeks by a gunnery officer, to be, in his turn, as suddenly recalled, on the vessel reaching her station. To have the principle of these and other proceedings with regard to the appointments and promotions in the Executive branch explained, was, perhaps, almost too much to expect; but Lord Alcester, who replied, attributed the recall of Lieutenant Hay to the dearth of Gunnery Lieutenants, consequent upon the employment—as stated by the Earl of Sandwich, and admitted by Lord Alcester—of seven or eight of such officers in the capacity of senior Lieutenants of vessels of less tonnage than the Garnet. We confess that we are unable to discover in the Navy List any authority for this statement:—"There are at present only five such appointments held by Gunnery Lieutenants, one of which will soon cease to exist, the Thetis being on her way home, thus leaving practically only four; and two of these officers, it may be remarked, are junior to Lieutenant Hay." This explanation can scarcely be regarded as a satisfactory one, more especially as Lieutenant Hay has since been appointed, much against his will, to a harbour ship, to supersede an officer who, though over his time there, was not at all in a hurry to be removed, and who is now on half-pay. It is to be presumed that Lord Alcester's predecessor was responsible for the bungle which was made of the appointments to the Garnet; but this latter arrangement appears, to say the least of it, a somewhat illogical sequel. It is not easy to understand in what sense the position held by the gunnery officer of a corvette affects the question, seeing that, whether senior or junior, he is still a Gunnery Lieutenant, and as such, may or may not be required elsewhere. One thing, however, appears tolerably clear, and that is, that Gunnery Lieutenants, who have considerable interest, can get such appointments, while others are told that they are not to be had. It would, perhaps, be too much to assume that herein lies the "principle" of which the Earl of Sandwich is in quest; but that such is the rooted conviction of most Naval officers, there cannot be a doubt. We have heard that Lord Alcester holds different views from his predecessor as to the expediency of combining the duties of first and gunnery lieutenant in corvettes; it is, therefore, to be hoped that, when practicable, such appointments will be conferred. It is, of course, essential that the larger and more important vessels, with their numerous crews and complicated gear, should have the preference; at the same time, if there are Gunnery Lieutenants available for corvettes, it is, on the whole, better for the service, as well as for individuals, that they should also undertake the duties of executive officer; and if they are not available, let those who hold such appointments be recalled, without respect of persons, to fill posts which are deemed more important.

On Lord Alcester's Annuity Bill, Mr. Labouchere on the motion for going into Committee, is to move,—"That it be an instruction to the Committee that they have power to provide by an immediate payment, in lieu of an annuity to Lord Alcester, the amount of such payment being calculated upon an actuarial estimate of the value of a pension for his own life only." Mr. Arthur Arnold—"That it be an instruction to the Committee to substitute a lump sum for an hereditary pension." Sir George Campbell—"As an amendment to Mr. Arthur Arnold's motion, to move, after 'lump sum,' to insert 'not exceeding the actuarial value of a pension for his own life, of the amount proposed in the Bill.'" Mr. Lewis—To move, "That this House will, upon this day six months, resolve itself into the said Committee."

The districts which furnished the greatest number of recruits for the Foot Guards during 1882 were the 17th Leicester and 45th Derby, each with 25 men; 6th Warwick and 9th Norfolk, each with 20; and the 14th Buckingham, with 19.

We are glad to note that Colonel C. E. Stewart, of the 5th Punjab Infantry, is about to return to Eastern Persia to resume his functions as English agent for Herat and Khorassan. Colonel Stewart secured for himself a reputation by a journey he took in disguise in 1880 to the Perso-Turcoman frontier, to watch the operations of the late General Skobeleff. The disguise he adopted, of an Armenian horse-dealer, was so perfect, that for three weeks he lived alongside and daily conversed with Mr. O'Donovan at Deregez, without the latter having the remotest idea that he was a fellow-countryman. On Russia complaining at the presence of Colonel Stewart and the late Captain Gill on the frontier, both were ordered home; but shortly afterwards it was considered advisable to locate an English agent at Khaf, the nearest Persian town to Herat, and Colonel Stewart was selected for that purpose. A few months ago, he was summoned to England, and there was a talk of abolishing the post at Khaf, but the restlessness of Russia beyond the Caspian has caused the Government to reconsider the matter, and Colonel Stewart returns to Khorassan for another year.

The Secretary of State for War has decided that any sum which may be due by men who are entitled to the gratuity for the Egyptian Campaign may be deducted from such gratuity, in the event of there being no other source from which to recover the debt, the cause of such deduction to be clearly explained to the men. This order will sensibly affect the gratuities of many soldiers: It will require much explanation, indeed, to convince a man who has become entitled to a sum of money by reason of service in the field that he ought not to receive that sum intact, notwithstanding any small debts that might be against him.

From a Return of the number of men in a territorial regiment on January 1, 1883, born in the Regimental District, it would appear that the 6th Warwickshire has the distinction of heading the list, with a total of 1,378 men; the next in order being the 3rd Buffs, with 1,241; the 37th Hampshire, 830; 63rd Manchester, 794; 18th Royal Irish, 790; 27th Inniskilling Fusiliers, 760; 9th Norfolk, 704; 102nd Dublin Fusiliers, 685; 28th Gloucestershire, 671; 38th South Stafford and 64th North Stafford, 1,265; 13th Somerset, 603; 8th Liverpool and 40th South Lancashire, 1,124; 12th Suffolk, 560; 62nd Wiltshire, 547; 20th Lancashire Fusiliers, 492; 49th Berkshire, 484; 24th South Wales Borderers, 481; 50th West Kent, 477; 29th Worcester, 466; 83rd Royal Irish Rifles, 440; 10th Lincoln, 395; 33rd Yorkshire, West Riding, 372; 48th Northampton, 357; 45th Derby, 345; 17th Leicester, 339; 42nd Black Watch, 335; 44th Essex, 334; and 53rd Shropshire, 306. The last on the list is the Royal Scots, with 23 men, those immediately above being the 34th Border Regiment, with 24; 87th Royal Irish Fusiliers, 43; and 41st Welsh, 48 men. The return would be more valuable, if the numbers in the Line and Militia Battalions were respectively divided.

A Good-service Pension for Artillery officers falls vacant by the death of Major-General Barry, R.A., C.B. The vacancy in the Major-Generals' List will be absorbed.

The extracts from the Report of the Committee on Musketry Instruction, only just presented to Parliament, though the Committee sat in 1881, reveal a very unsatisfactory state of affairs in the Militia, all officers who have given evidence agreeing that the present allowance of twenty rounds per man a year is a waste of ammunition. The experiment of putting regiments through the same course as the Line resulted, out of fifteen regiments, in only two being enabled to fire up to 800 yards, one to 700, ten to 600, and two to 400. The Committee recommend that the recruits should be put for three weeks through a complete course during their first year, as in the Line. This might be effected by taking one week from the drill, making an extra fortnight suffice. After this, the Committee consider their shooting may be kept up with a course of sixty rounds annually. It is noticed that in 1881, 53 regiments of Militia were without musketry instructors. We have not observed any intention on the part of the authorities to give increased value to this neglected portion of the Army.

The notices of amendment in Committee to the Annuity Bills of Lords Alcester and Wolseley cover two pages and a half in the Votes of the House of Commons.

A memorandum has been circulated on Horse Guards authority, containing answers to several questions connected with the working of G.O. 51 and 52 of 1883. The training of "casuals" will be left to the discretion of commanding officers, according to the number of company or troop officers they have available. The band will be trained with one of the companies, the selection of which is left to the commanding officer. The classification of soldiers in target practice will be as follows:—Recruits: 1st class, 115 points; 2nd class, 85; 3rd class, under 85 points. Trained soldiers: Marksmen, 195 points; 1st class, 150; 2nd class, under 150. The points obtained by the worst shots in "A" practice, second part, are not to be included in the calculation for comparative figure of merit of a squad, troop, or company. For the present, no part of the annual musketry instruction is to be included in the six weeks' company course.

The Musketry Committee recommended, we notice, a certain number of waterproof sheets, not exceeding 50 per infantry battalion or cavalry regiment, should be issued, to lessen the difficulty existing in teaching soldiers the lying-down position.

We observe that although the Musketry Committee recommended the present distinction between the Adjutant and Musketry Instructor should be discontinued, they suggested that the Adjutant should be assisted by two assistants holding Hythe certificates, the senior of whom would probably succeed to the adjutancy on a vacancy. It is strange how the recommendations of some Committees are carried out, and others treated as waste-paper.

When the authorities are so very particular at the competitive examinations about correct spelling, is it not somewhat inconsistent that in the Army List names of places are spelt in more ways than one? For instance, with the Norfolk Regiment (late 9th), "Cabool, 1842," "Kabul, 1879;" Prince of Wales's South Lancashire Regiment (40th and 82nd), "Candahar," "Cabool, 1842;" Gordon Highlanders (75th and 92nd), "Kabul, 1879," "Kandahar, 1880;" the Leicestershire Regiment (17th), "Affghanistan" (with two "f's"); "Afghanistan, 1878-9" (with one "f").

Notwithstanding the remarks of the Inspector-General of Recruiting, it appears by the Army List that besides Dover and Gosport, three other Territorial Divisions of Garrison Artillery have the Militia head-quarters in proximity with the depôt of the service batteries, viz., Lancashire Division, at Liverpool; Western Division, at Devonport; and the South-Irish Division, at Kinsale. These districts are not, however, among the most successful in obtaining recruits.

The Earl of Carnarvon's question as to carrying into effect the recommendations of the Royal Commission "for the defence of British possessions and commerce abroad" is deferred till Friday next.

H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge presided at the festival dinner in connection with the British Home for Incurables, Clapham, on Friday, the 20th inst., at the Freemasons' Tavern. The Duke said he had so often lately been called upon to respond for the Army, that he found it very difficult to say anything new on those occasions. He had great pleasure, therefore, in proposing the toast of the Army, Navy, and Auxiliary Forces, leaving to others the task of responding. Major-General Bulwer, C.B., responded briefly for the Army. Captain Bedford Pim, R.N., on behalf of the Navy, spoke in unqualified praise of the officers and sailors, but used the plainest terms of condemnation for our ships. Colonel Sir Francis Burdett, Bart., 8th Middlesex Volunteers, responded for the Auxiliary Forces. Lord Holmesdale, the president of the institution, gave a clear and succinct account of its origin, progress, condition, and prospects. There were about 120 at the dinner, and the secretary announced the amount of subscriptions and donations during the evening as £720. The sombre uniformity of evening dress was relieved by the decorations and miniature medals worn by several officers. As this practice is now officially sanctioned, and indeed enjoined on such occasions as we are describing, it is to be hoped that no officers will be prevented by false delicacy from wearing those medals that are in so many cases the only rewards of arduous services.

Colonel Walker, commanding the 3rd Battalion, Royal Scots Fusiliers, will on Friday, May 18, deliver a lecture at the Royal United Service Institution, on "The Musketry Training of the Militia."

Not content with putting the British portion of the Indian Contingent on English pay from date of landing in Egypt, the officers of that unfortunate body have now been ordered to refund the six months' field-allowance which was granted to them, in common with all officers proceeding from England to the seat of war. The Indian Government, we understand decline to be responsible for the amount.

The motion of Lord Stratheden and Campbell to call attention to the state of the Auxiliary Forces is postponed till Monday, the 30th.

Sir Walter Barttelot will on Monday move an address for return of the names of the regiments, the strength of each battalion of infantry, serving in Egypt and in the Mediterranean; also of the other (or twin) battalion of the regiment, whether serving at home or abroad, and of the depôts belonging to each regiment, also stating the length of service and the age of the non-commissioned officers and men of each battalion and at the depôts. Similar return of the 19th Hussars serving in Egypt and with the depôt at home, the number of horses with the regiment in Egypt, stating the number fit for or doing duty. And also showing the authorised establishment in each case; the information to be given so as to show the strength of each battalion of the regiment, and of the depôt, on April 1, or to the latest date to which such returns have been or can be made up.

We have this week to announce the death of three Companions of the Bath, viz., Major-General W. W. Barry, R.A., Surgeon-General J. L. Holloway, and Colonel G. D. Webber.

In our regimental column appear some remarks of a Natal paper on the decoration of a man of the 58th Regiment with the distinguished-service medal for gallantry in the late campaign against the Boers. The case of other deserving officers, non-commissioned officers, and men might now be considered, which have been ignored up to this. Men who suffered privations for months, living on half and quarter rations of bad biscuit, and sleeping out in the open the whole time, with no shelter from the deluge of the South-African rains, deserve some recognition. If this had occurred in the Egyptian Campaign, what would have been the number of medals given!

An officer who served in Afghanistan has a complaint he wishes us to ventilate. He says:—"Three years ago, I went to Afghanistan, and served with my regiment in both phases of the campaign, was twice mentioned in despatches, and got promotion and other rewards. As yet, however, I have no war medal. A young relative of mine went to Egypt. He has come home with a medal, which he is wearing, and a decoration. This may be considered by some a small matter, but it is a far more important one than some suppose, for it shows how the Afghan Campaign has been under-rated. Those who served in both wars assure me that there was no comparison between the two, either as regards management, generalship, or fighting. The Egyptian business was simply a military burlesque, when compared with the military operations in Afghanistan. And yet those who served in Egypt are fêted and decorated, whilst we, who were for nearly two years in the field in Afghanistan, are almost forgotten. I do not wish to complain; I leave your readers to imagine what the feelings of the Army of Afghanistan must be, when they read all the rubbish which is written and said about the brilliant successes in Egypt." There is so much reason in what our correspondent says, that we give his remarks prominence. He expresses the views of nine-tenths of the officers of the Army.

Notice is given that her Majesty's Birthday will be generally kept up on Thursday, May 24 next, and that it will be celebrated in London alone on Saturday, May 26. The Queen will hold Drawing-rooms at Buckingham Palace on Thursday, May 10, and on Monday, May 21 next, at 3 o'clock.

A "Preliminary Return of the British Army" just issued gives the following information:—There were on service at home on Jan. 1, 1883, 90,784. English, 65,131; Scotch, 7,781; Irish, 16,586; born in India or the Colonies, 1,004; foreigners, 82; not reported, 200. Religious denominations—Church of England, 60,389; Presbyterian, 7,562; Wesleyan, 3,345; other Protestants, 603; Roman Catholics, 18,685; not reported, 200."

Col. Chapman, Military Secretary to Gen. Sir Donald Stewart, Commander-in-Chief in India, will shortly proceed home on leave. It is expected that Lieut.-Col. Gosset, 54th Regiment, will proceed to Simla, to act for Col. Chapman.

"Sapo Carbonis Detergens" is a physician's name for a remedy prescribed for the past quarter of a century for every variety of skin disease. The public have found that as a preventive of small-pox, scarlet fever, and measles, it is unequalled. See that the Latin name described above, and the words "Wright, Southwark," are on each wrapper, and branded on each tablet, without which none is genuine.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company was formed on June 20, 1882, for the purpose of purchasing the Copyright, Goodwill, and Unsold Quire Stock of the Illustrated Weekly Paper known as "The Pictorial World" (which was started in the year 1874), together with the valuable Stock of Wood Blocks and Electros which had appeared during the several years previous, and of carrying on the same on an extended scale.

The first and second issues of £25,000 and £12,500, respectively, were duly subscribed for, with the exception of two hundred Shares, part thereof, which were allotted as fully paid, to the Vendors, as the consideration for the purchase. On the first issue, £12 10s per Share, and on the second issue, £10 per Share, has been paid up.

The Company is now in full operation, having produced in all 34 numbers, with an average circulation of 40,031. This average is taken over the period from September 2, 1882, to the present time, and is equal to six times the weekly sale of the old sixpenny series.

> "Until between twelve and thirteen years ago, there was only one high-class Weekly Illustrated Paper, and when the 'Graphic' was started, in 1869, many thought that the ground was thoroughly occupied by the "Illustrated London News." The very reverse, however, has since been proved.
>
> "It is now maintained that the time has arrived for another high-class Weekly Illustrated Paper, and therefore it is proposed to supply the want by developing THE PICTORIAL WORLD."
>
> "It may be assumed from the fact that the two existing papers are gigantic commercial successes (the 'Graphic,' worked by a Limited Liability Company, having paid dividends approaching cent. per cent. per annum), that another, at least equally well done, and with distinctive features in addition, would receive the support of the public to an extent sufficient to pay handsome dividends to the Shareholders."

It is hardly necessary for the Directors to dilate on the popularity of the "Pictorial World" has attained during the past few months. Every one must be acquainted with the weekly coloured Portraits, undoubtedly a distinctive feature, which have proved such an attraction, and which may be seen in nearly every newsagent's shop and at every railway bookstall in the United Kingdom.

The series of Political Coloured Portraits now appearing is extremely popular, and calculated to very largely increase the circulation by bringing the journal prominently before the various constituencies as the Portrait of each Representative Member of Parliament appears. One week's edition attained the extraordinary number of 101,493 copies (see certified report published at the time).

To have earned such popularity as the "Pictorial World" has attained, large sums of money have necessarily been spent in advertising, and in the giving away with the Paper of Extra and Special Supplements, in the employment of a staff of travellers through the country, and in various other ways needful in the development of a newspaper. This preliminary sinkage the history of all successful newspapers and periodicals proves to be necessary, there being few, if any, instances on record where the contrary has been the case.

The results arrived at by the money sunk, as above stated, and the large and still increasing circulation of the paper, fully justify the Directors in believing that the Company possesses a valuable property, which may be expected to realise substantial profits. In preference to calling up the capital remaining uncalled on the first and second issues of shares, it has been thought more advantageous to issue further capital, and the Directors confidently expect, by the judicious expenditure of such additional capital, to so far increase the sales as to make an investment in the undertaking more than ordinarily remunerative to shareholders.

To help towards this necessary increase in circulation, the "Pictorial World" being fairly represented in the United Kingdom, one of the objects of the Directors will be to open up Agencies in the Colonies and abroad for the sale of the paper, and so make it, as its name implies,

THE PICTORIAL WORLD.

In addition to this, it will be the endeavour of the Directors to get that finish into the Engravings almost peculiar to high-class book illustrations, and the experience the Messrs. Dalziel have had in that branch of art would be some guarantee to the public of its being carried into effect.

This Company was promoted by, and its Shareholders are to a great extent, men of Art and Letters.

It may be stated that no promotion-money has been paid or agreed to be paid, no founders' shares allotted, nor have any shares been issued upon any terms other than actual payment in cash, with the exception of the vendors' shares before mentioned.

The Directors themselves hold over £13,000 of the capital of the Company.

Judging by the circulation of the two other sixpenny illustrated papers, the "Graphic" and the "Illustrated London News," and by the progress made since the commencement of the New Series of the "Pictorial World," a weekly sale of from 70,000 to 80,000 copies is anticipated, with a very much larger increase on certain special occasions, there having been printed, as already stated, as much as 101,493 of one number.

WITH A CIRCULATION OF 50,000 WEEKLY,

after paying for all cost of production, paper, printing, publishing, advertising, and all expenses necessary in the conduct of the paper, with a fair proportion of advertisements in the paper, a weekly profit can be made of which, on £40,000 paid up, would yield a dividend of about 15 per cent. per annum.

WITH A CIRCULATION OF 70,000 WEEKLY,

after paying for all cost of production, paper, printing, publishing, advertising, and all expenses necessary in the conduct of the paper, with a fair proportion of advertisements in the paper, a weekly profit can be made of

The difference between the profit on 50,000 and 70,000 is so great that it is thought necessary to give some explanation. The original cost of production, no matter what number be printed, is the same; so that it should be easily understood that immediately after such an increase of circulation is arrived at as will pay original cost of production, the profit on every 1,000 copies sold has no original cost of production to be charged against it, but only the cost of paper and printing. By original cost of production is meant drawings, engravings, composition, literature, &c.

The Agreement under which the Company acquired the paper is one dated the 21st day of June, 1882, and made between Gilbert Dalziel and Harvey Dalziel, of the one part, and Edwin Thomas, for the Company, of the other part.

In the course of the Company's business numerous contracts relating to the conduct of the business have, of course, been entered into; and in order to obviate any question as to whether any contracts other than that of the 21st of June, 1882, are within Section 38 of the Companies' Act, 1867, applicants for shares will be required to waive their right (if any) to any description, under that Section, of contracts made.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application can be obtained at the Offices of the Company, or from the Bankers or Solicitors.

Applications for Shares are to be made on the accompanying form, and are to be sent either to the Bankers or to the Secretary. Should no allotment be made, the amount paid on application will be returned in full.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—INDISPUTABLE REMEDIES.—In the use of these medicaments, there need be no hesitation or doubt of their cooling, healing, and purifying properties. Imagination can scarcely conceive the marvellous facility with which this unguent relieves and heals the most inveterate sores and ulcers, and in cases of bad legs and bad breasts they act like a charm. The Pills are the most effectual remedy ever discovered for the cure of liver and stomach complaints, diseases most disastrous in their effects, deranging all the proper functions of the organs affected, inducing restlessness, melancholy, weariness, inability to sleep, and pain in the side, until the whole system is exhausted. These wonderful Pills, if taken according to the printed directions accompanying each box, strike at the root of the malady, stimulate the stomach and liver into a healthy action, and effect a complete cure.

IN FAVOUR OF THE

SPECIAL DEVON TRICYCLE.

Seaton, September 27, 1882.

SIR,—Having had a good trial of the SPECIAL DEVON TRICYCLE, over very rough and very hilly roads, I must tell you that I am much pleased with it. It is an easy one to ride, and the swing frame is a wonderful assistance for hills. It is very strong and comfortable.—Yours faithfully, A. H. TRAHERNE.

The Manager, Exeter B. and C. Co.

I may add that, being lame, I cannot get any exercise by walking; but the exercise I get on the machine has not only restored my health, but I am able to go out into the country when and where I like.—A. H. T.

2/- TEA OF EXTRAORDINARY QUALITY,

As Supplied to Dukes, Earls, Barons, and the County Families of England.

THE unprecedented depression in the Tea Market now enables COOPER COOPER and CO. to offer such value in Tea as would, a few years ago, have been considered simply impossible, but is now a realised fact, for at

TWO SHILLINGS
A POUND,

COOPER COOPER and CO. are able to supply Tea of amazing strength and exquisite quality, while the choice kinds at Three Shillings a pound, which are coming to hand in lessening quantities year by year, COOPER COOPER and CO. have the greatest difficulty, after ransacking the markets of China and India, in procuring in sufficient quantities for their consumption. These choice and selected Teas COOPER COOPER and CO. have the honour to supply to many Foreign Princes, Potentates, Ambassadors, &c.

THE enormous success—without competitors and with no rivals—which has attended the sale of COOPER COOPER and CO.'s Teas is perhaps unparalleled in the annals of this or any other trade, and can only be accounted for by the way in which their business has been conducted, which has gained the patronage of all classes. COOPER COOPER and CO. number among their customers Princes, Dukes, Earls, Barons—in fact, a large per-centage of the entire Peerage—Church dignitaries of every grade, and ministers of all denominations, County Families from every county in Great Britain, and from all classes of the community. COOPER COOPER and CO. are also shipping their Teas every day to foreign parts. Paris would appear to draw its supplies from COOPER COOPER and CO.'s Stores, and in almost every large city, and especially in the seaport towns of Europe, Asia, Africa, and America—in fact, to the very ends of the earth—COOPER COOPER and CO.'s Teas and COOPER COOPER and CO.'s name are known.

COOPER COOPER and CO. have their own Agents in China and India, and are consequently able to sell their Tea at a price which is actually under that which wholesale merchants, brokers, &c., charge to ordinary dealers. They are enabled to do this as they have not the expense of travellers, and no bad debts to provide for, their terms being strictly for nett cash before delivery. They also save an immense amount by keeping no horses and vans—many houses having from 20 to 100 horses, vans, and two men to each, to deliver, sometimes, half-a-pound of tea miles and miles away, this overwhelming expense having all to come out of the quality of the Tea.

COOPER COOPER and CO. have, in fact, no expense but indispensable rent and labour, which in consequence of still-increasing business, amount only to a fraction on the price of the Tea they sell.

COOPER COOPER and CO. may mention that they include among the regular buyers of their Tea a great many London Tea Brokers, from the simple fact that it can be purchased cheaper and better from them than from the importers themselves.

COOPER COOPER and CO. sell their Teas for ready money only. They have thus no provision to make for bad or doubtful debts.

AND now a word about this year's crop. It is hardly satisfactory on the whole, but some of the choice crops secured by COOPER COOPER and CO. are simply delicious, COOPER COOPER and CO. are still enabled to sell the very best at Three Shillings a pound, and it is veritably a marvel of goodness—a "thing of beauty" and "a joy for ever." But the most astonishing thing of modern times is the Tea at Two Shillings a pound which COOPER COOPER and CO. are now selling. The rich and wealthy buy this Tea. Ladies drink it in their boudoirs and at their early drums, and, as one of our country patrons writes, "It is lovely."

COOPER COOPER and CO. may add that Indian Tea is becoming day by day a greater favourite among the best judges, and this year's crop has been prepared with greater care than ever. It is strong, pungent, with most agreeable flavour, and the better it is known, the more it will be liked. The Tea is 3s a lb., for the best.

COOPER COOPER and CO. charge threepence a package (of any size) for delivering their Teas at any of the Railway Stations in London, or any place within the limits of the London Parcels' Delivery Co., thus putting all on an equality; those who send for their tea, and those who require it sent.

COOPER COOPER and CO. do not pay railway carriage, but are willing to compound for the same on receiving the sum of 6d. in addition to the price of the Tea, to any Railway Station in England, on quantities of the value of £2 and upwards. Families residing in the country can thus, by clubbing together, have their Tea sent almost carriage free, as well as save about 9d a lb. in the cost.

EGYPTIAN NOTES.

Cairo, April 17, 1883.

Weekly state of the Army in Egypt:—

	Total Force.	Sick.	Per cent.
Artillery, Cairo	508	34	6·7
Cavalry "	593	45	7·6
Engineers "	222	12	5·4
1st Brigade	2,031	138	6·8
2nd do.	2,841	231	8·2
Sundry Corps	653	30	4·6
	6,848	490	7·1
Alexandria	1,495	133	9·0
Ismailia	90	5	5·5
	8,433	628	7·4
Officers	288	4	1·5
Men	8,145	624	7·6
	8,433	628	7·4
Horses	1,236	80	6·5
	1,873	82	4·4

The increased per-centage of Alexandria is due wholly to the fact that it is being freely used as a sanatorium for Cairo.

The following officers have been struck off the strength of the Army in Egypt:—Captain T. L. Morgan, G-B., R.H.A., on retirement from the service; Surgeon W. T. Johnston, A.M.D., from March 27; Surgeon W. S. Gubbins, A.M.D., from March 29.

The s.s. Calabria, besides the C-3, R.A., and officers previously referred to, has sailed with Captain Carr, Royal West Kent Regiment, to Depôt, England; Assistant-Commissary-General of Ordnance G. Steevens, to Depôt, England; Surgeon-Major R. W. Troup, A.M.D., to Depôt, England; Lieutenant of Orderlies McKay, invalided, England; Deputy-Assistant-Commissary-General Gaussen, Commissariat and Transport Staff, Malta; Deputy-Assistant-Commissary-General Colebrook, Commissariat and Transport Staff, Malta.

Leave of absence has been granted to Surgeon-Major White, A.M.D., from April 13 to May 11, to visit Palestine; Surgeon-Major Barnwell, A.M.D., from April 13 to May 11, to visit Jerusalem; Rev. F. Collins, A.C.D., from April 13 to May 11, to visit Palestine; Lieutenant Burney, Berks Regiment, three months to England, by medical board.

The following officers have passed in (a) and (b), sec. IV., par. 28, Queen's Regulations:—Captain A. Wauchope, C.M.G., Royal Highlanders; Captain Lee, Commissariat and Transport Staff; Lieutenant G. Killick, King's Royal Rifle Corps; Lieutenant R. S. Bowen, King's Royal Rifle Corps; Lieutenant F. G. Todd-Thornton, Royal Sussex Regiment.

The detachment of the King's Royal Rifles, stationed at Ismailia, will be relieved by another of similar strength. Surgeon-Major S. Flood will go from Ismailia to Cairo, and his place will be taken by Surgeon H. O. Stuart.

Regiment.	Total Force.	Sick.	Per cent.
Royal Sussex (35th)	799	35	4·4
King's Royal Rifles (60th)	760	54	7·1
1st Royal Highlanders (42nd)	769	57	7·4
Berkshire (49th)	698	51	7·5
Cameron Highlanders (79th)	696	51	7·5
South Staffordshire (38th)	534	52	9·7
Gordon Highlanders (75th)	704	74	10·5
	5,733	456	8·0

The excellent health of the Royal Sussex is the more remarkable, as they are quartered at the Abbassiyeh, which, on the whole, has proved the least healthy station in Cairo.

A squadron of the 19th Hussars is being sent to Ramleh, the Cavalry Brigade is broken up and the rest of the 19th Hussars form part of the First Brigade under the command of General Arbuthnot. Brigade-Major, Captain Hitchcock.

Captain F. M. Robinson, E-1, R.A., has been posted to G-B., R.H.A., vice Morgan, and will be placed under orders to embark for Egypt.

Surgeon Forrester, A.M.D., has returned to duty.

General Earle has taken up his command at Alexandria. The General is not to be envied residence in a town where the sole alternative is crawling through or riding over smouldering ruins, where the "classic dust of Pharaoh's age," so far from "slumbering at our feet," whirls around, settles in the remotest crevices of the human frame, and changes the British uniform into a colour which would be as invisible as that recommended by the commission, even if there were anyone left in the town with sufficient eyesight to distinguish between "the fearful red of the soldier," "and the still more awful blue of the marine."

(FROM ANOTHER CORRSPONDENT.)

Quail-shooting has occupied the legs and minds of a good many of the garrison lately, and there is keen competition between the cracks and the "natives," some of whom are excellent shots. The Prime Minister, Sherif Pasha, is among the first flight of the latter, and last week he led a party, among whom were Lord de Grey (our "best man"), Murad Pasha, Colonel Zohrab, Mr. Russell, &c., to Bedreshin, near Memphis, where the fields are very extensive and the barley up to one's neck; but the bag was not equal to expectations, about a hundred couple only, as the quails were scarce that particular place and day, and in several instances two or three guns have done better in a few hours close to Cairo. Colonel Zohrab headed the score, having got among the birds earlier than Lord de Grey, and very rarely missing any chance. The "leaves" are out at last, out to the great joy of the lucky fellows who can escape the next three months' duty here. Wise people, who are not in a hurry, and who do not relish the sunny months of July, August, &c., here, will wait a little longer, but the impetuous youths who only think of present enjoyment are mad to be off. Lord Napier of Magdala and Major Napier left some eight or ten days ago, and there is a steady flight setting in from Cairo westward, though some are off to Jerusalem and the Holy Places. Brigadier-General Arbuthnot has moved out to the Abbassiyeh, which is likely to be more sought after than it was previously, as Cairo society will not willingly forego the pleasure to be found in the sociable little parties with which the Brigadier and Mrs. Arbuthnot have enlivened it; but "the way," if not cold, is certainly "long" and dusty, and some of the pilgrims are "infirm and old." Colonel Dulier, who is regarded by our officers as a very ill-used man, has left the Khedive's service, and is going to Europe, with Mrs. Dulier, whose loss will be much felt here. In vain did General Drury-Lowe write the strongest testimonial as to the services rendered by Colonel Dulier in the advance on and surrender of Cairo, and the submission of Arabi and his followers, in vain did our senior officers express their sense of his zeal and gallantry, some secret influence unfavourable to the Belgian was brought to bear in high places, and after 11 years' service in Egypt, during which Dulier served with the Khedive's army in Abyssinia and in the Turco-Russian war, he was informed that he must betake himself to the work of the Cadastre, and live in an Egyptian village, with his wife,—which was a way not even polite of getting rid of him. Colonel Turneyssen, an Austrian, who, like Dulier, served in Maximilian's Mexico campaign, and who bears a high reputation for personal courage, is another "victim." Is the game worth the candle? The opera subvention is to cease this year. It is doubtful if there will be any opera next year, so that a great source of pleasure will be cut off from the European visitors, and one of the civilising influences which Ismail Pasha boasted he had carried into the desert waste of Moslem ignorance perishes! It is a very pleasant sight, when there is a good night, and not least among the "novelties" is the aspect of some ten or twelve serjeants of the different regiments in the pit stalls, listening to Offenbach or Lecoq, and admiring the exquisite taste of the mise-en-scène of such shady operettas as "La Mascotte," "La Jour et la Nuit," "Boccace," &c. A propos of the non-commissioned officers, a question has arisen which deserves consideration. A few nights ago, two corporals of the 19th Hussars were refused admission to the pit. Colonel Coghill referred the matter to head-quarters, and the Adjutant-General was referred to an order, signed by Captain Humphreys, forbidding non-commissioned officers under the rank of serjeant to enter the pit, on the ground that many officers would be likely to make use of the same part of the house. The price of admission is three francs. The orchestra stalls in front are dearer, and are much used by officers, but the latter are often seen in the stalls behind, and there is practically no difference between the rows of seats, except in situation and price, as they are all en bloc. It is purely a question for the authorities, and they do not seem to agree. Although Sir A. Alison is so much better, it would not be at all prudent for him to spend the hot weather in Cairo, and it is supposed he will take two or three months' leave. Sir Evelyn Wood's little army is fast approaching perfection in such material use as it can be put to, considering the material of which it is made. The General has thrown himself heart and soul and head into the work, and, seconded as he is by excellent officers, really as good as any army ever had, he has created under the gaunt ribs of these lank and lean Egyptians something like the feelings of a soldier, based on a sense of duty and justice. For the first time in history, perhaps, they begin to learn they are men with rights, and that there are certain attributes of their life and manhood that must be respected. Indeed, it is believed that when it is known in the villages how much the status of the soldier is changed, there will be no difficulty in filling the ranks by volunteering, instead of conscription; and such a consummation would be little short of miraculous, in the case of the fellaheen, who loathe a soldier's life, because it takes them from the mud-heap called home. To enable the régime of regular and increased pay, good treatment, food, and clothing, to be appreciated, Sir Evelyn proposes to establish a cheap military postal service for soldiers' letters.

In the early part of the week, the musketry instruction of the troops was interrupted by the weather, which, from being very mild, became quite wintry, storms of hail and sleet sweeping across the camps at intervals. A marked improvement, however, has taken place since Wednesday, and ball practice has been resumed. Each brigadier has exercised his command in brigade drill once during the week, musketry, gymnastics, and working and fatigue parties being suspended on certain days in each brigade to enable this to be done, which would be impossible otherwise. With the departure of a strong draft on Tuesday to Malta from the 85th, this regiment almost ceases to be a factor in the Aldershot command. An authentic return of the numbers of the Division at the present time, showing how each man is employed, would be an interesting and instructive document. P Battery 2nd Brigade, R.A.—five officers, 139 men, and 72 horses—arrived here from Woolwich on Wednesday. T Battery 3rd Brigade, R.A.—five officers, 137 men, and 81 horses—will arrive to-day and Monday next from Ireland, viâ Portsmouth. Captain G. M. Fox, 42nd Highlanders, has taken up the duties of Assistant-Inspector of Gymnasia, vice Captain Gore, 84th Regiment. As it will be necessary to extend and add to the musketry ranges at Cæsar's Camp and Ash, owing to the new regulations for musketry practice, a Committee, consisting of Major Burton, D.A.A.G. for Musketry, president; Captain Reid, R.E., and Lieutenant Spens, 85th, members, has been ordered to assemble and report on the matter. Proceedings to be sent to the A.Q.M.G. A meeting was held at the Cavalry Brigade Office on Thursday to make arrangements for "polo" for the ensuing season. Each regiment and corps sent a representative. The seventh Grand Army Athletic Meeting will be held at Aldershot on Wednesday and Thursday, June 27 and 28 next. Among the stewards are Gen. Sir D. Lysons, K.C.B., and Major-General H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, K.G. The programme shows that there are 29 racing events, athletics, &c., including tug-of-war, open to the Army and Auxiliary Forces; 10 mounted and dismounted competitions for officers and men, four mounted competitions for officers, gymnastic competitions for non-commissioned officers and men holding certificates, and for Woolwich and Sandhurst cadets. The whole will be under the able management of Lieutenant-Colonel Cleather, Inspector of Gymnasia, Hon. Secretary, assisted by the Gymnasia Staff. Another Soldiers' Institute, a handsome structure, in Victoria Road, Aldershot, is rapidly approaching completion. This institute, like all others of its class here, is to be conducted on a sectarian basis. It is really a pity that we have not one undenominational soldiers' institute at the Camp, where all might meet on neutral ground. For sufficiently obvious reasons, a very small number of our soldiers ever enter these religious institutes. What is really wanted is an institute worthy of the name, with no denominational designation, where all shades of Christians might freely enter, with the knowledge that narrow-minded bigotry had no place within. Such an institution, sensibly managed, would not fail to be supported by the rank and file, would never languish for want of funds, and would do more real good than all the other establishments put together. The fifth Army rifle meeting will be held on three days during the last week of July next, at the Cæsar's Camp ranges. Surgeon-Major T. C. Tolmie, A.M.D., has been ordered here for duty. Lieutenant Anstruthers, R.E., proceeds to Hythe, on Tuesday, for a course of instruction. I have been trying to find out recently, but without success, why the sounding of "Lights out" should affect the clock in the tower of the Cambridge Hospital, South Camp. Shortly after this "call" has been sounded the lights in the tower go out, the cheerful clock-faces disappear, and are no more seen till dawn. Perhaps it is done on economical grounds, to keep down the gas bill. It has been suggested that a saving could be effected in another direction, which would more than cover the expense of illuminating the clock-faces all night. The firing of a time-gun (so called) three times a day is entirely unnecessary; it necessitates a gunner being always on duty, it is a useless expenditure of force, and a waste of time and money. When the charge has been rammed home tighter than usual, and under certain atmospheric conditions, the report has been known to startle the Camp from its propriety. Some time ago, it was not fired for several days, because a person of note residing temporarily within easy range had been frightened into fits by it. Here, then, is an expensive nuisance which ought to be abated, and, in its stead, we could have the clock-faces in the Cambridge Tower steadily beaming all through the night, much to the convenience of those whose duty it is to watch while others sleep. Quartermaster S. Cole, R.E., after an uninterrupted service of 33 years, has this week been retired on retired pay, with the honorary rank of captain. It is much to be regretted that the hard-and-fast rules of the service have driven this officer out of the Army. Few officers have been so deservedly popular, as Captain Cole, during the ten years of his Quartermastership at Aldershot. A generous, kind-hearted, and genial man, ever ready to aid and assist in sorrow, sickness, and distress, very many will miss him here, as men of his stamp are not found every day. He wears the Baltic, Crimean, and Turkish medals, the medal for distinguished conduct in the field, and the Cross of the Legion of Honour. In the "History of the Royal Sappers and Miners," page 442, the following is recorded:—"A few cases occurred in which the rank of serjeant was attained by a junior non-commissioned officer within eighteen months. Samuel Cole is an instance. He went to the Crimea a young, second corporal, but so conspicuous was his conduct in the trenches, and so sustained his usefulness and gallantry, that besides the grant of pecuniary rewards, a special medal for distinguished service, and the Order of the Legion of Honour, he was promoted successively to the ranks of corporal and serjeant. Of him Colonel Gordon wrote, on December 6, 1855, that he was one of the 'most distinguished in the corps for bravery, and had just received a step of rank'—that of serjeant—'for very distinguished service in the field.'"

The Civil and Military Gazette says:—"The Government of India have sanctioned the enrolment of natives as Volunteers, but the permission has been granted with a stipulation which makes the sanction practically valueless. In an important matter like this, it may be as well to quote pretty fully the words of the Government letter. The Secretary to the Government of India, Military Department, writes: 'I am directed to state that the Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council, adhering to the views held by Lord Canning, has no objection to the admission of any native Indian subjects of the Queen-Empress into Volunteer corps; but that his Excellency in Council does not consider it advisable that separate corps, or even companies, consisting solely of natives, should be formed.' No Volunteer corps would at any time have admitted natives into their ranks; but now, when such an unhappy estrangement has sprung up between the Western and Eastern races, the likelihood of Bengali Babus being welcomed as comrades is more distant than ever."

Colour-Serjt. S. E. Cox, 1st Batn. Rifle Brigade, is the winner of the prize for the best "Essay on Hasty Entrenchments as applicable to Attack."

ACTIVE SERVICE cannot wear out the teeth that are brushed night and morning with ROWLAND'S ODONTO, the purest and most fragrant dentifrice ever made. RECENT NAVAL SCANDALS.

Report on the Courts-Martial held for the Trial of Mr. R. W. Parish, paymaster, Oliver Jew, ship's steward, and Alfred Morcombe, ship's steward's assistant, of H.M.S. Cambridge.

(By Mr. E. N. SWAINSON, Assistant-Secretary and Principal Clerk of the Admiralty.)

These three courts-martial open up a large field for inquiry and for improvement. I thought it might, perhaps, save their Lordships some trouble in going over the various points, if a general outline were put before them of the course of procedure, as laid down in the Regulations, with reference to demanding, receiving, issuing, and accounting for provisions, and examining the accounts. This I have done in the following report, drawing attention at the same time to the practice pursued on board the Cambridge in these various matters, as shown by the evidence, and pointing out what has been the effect of the irregularities which have been permitted. I requested Mr. Martin, who acted as prosecutor, to draw up, at the conclusion of the case, a paper showing what he considered to be the weak points all round, as revealed by his inquiries and the evidence before the Court, and his observations are annexed. The report which Inspector Swanson, of the Detective Department, made after his inquiries at Devonport, is also annexed.

1.—DEMAND FOR PROVISIONS.

The paymaster is charged with the duty of obtaining all requisite supplies of provisions (Article 1,616), and it is his duty to prepare all demands and submit them for the approval of the captain (Article 1,618). On board the Cambridge the demands were not made out as above directed. The ship's boat went to the Victualling Yard to get meat and vegetables, and whatever the coxswain of the boat stated was necessary was supplied. In giving a receipt for the quantities taken away, the coxswain noted on the receipt the quantities which would be required for next time, and the superintending storekeeper accepted it as a proper demand, and stated in court that this had been the practice for 30 years. (Court-martial on Oliver Jew, questions 11 and 12; see also Mr. Martin's paper, paragraph 1.) Oliver Jew himself stated at the Court of Inquiry that the demands were made without the knowledge of the paymaster, and without any reference to the number of persons to be victualled (Article 1,629 directs that the paymaster is to take care that no larger supply of fresh meat and vegetables is received on board than can be consumed fresh and good). Under such a system as that on board the Cambridge, there would be no limit to the amount of fresh beef and vegetables which could be demanded and got out of the Victualling Yard without the knowledge of the paymaster of the ship. His only check would be in afterwards seeing that the quantities received on board were correct according to the supply note from the Yard, and were not in excess of the number of men to be victualled. If he neglected to do this, the ship's steward could do anything. Mr. Martin has no doubt that the quantities obtained from the Victualling Yard were actually received on board.

2.—RECEIPT OF PROVISIONS.

When the provisions came on board, Article 1,633 directs that they are to be immediately weighed by the petty officer of the day, in the presence of the ship's steward, and under the immediate superintendence of the senior sub-lieutenant or the midshipman of the watch, or sub-lieutenant of the deck; the superintending officer to note the quantities in the deck log, and to report any errors discovered in the supply note. The paymaster, or assistant-paymaster, is to attend the weighing occasionally. The weighing by a petty officer in the presence of the ship's steward appears to have been duly carried out in the Cambridge, but no superintending officer appears to have been present until within the last three months, when a gunner was specially detailed for the duty, except between September and March, when the officer of the watch was present. (Court-martial on Oliver Jew, question 6 and 125.) The paymaster or assistant-paymaster do not appear to have ever attended.

3.—ISSUE OF PROVISIONS.

Each person victualled is allowed 1 lb. of fresh beef and ½ lb. of vegetables. (Page 753 of the Queen's Regulations.) No issues are made on account of persons sick in hospital, absent on duty, absent on more than 48 hours' leave, or absent without leave. (Article 1,597.) In order that the paymaster may prevent the unnecessary issue of provisions on account of absentees, a list of officers on more than 48 hours' leave is kept in the ship's office, under the superintendence of the captain; and a leave-book for men is kept by the master-at-arms, and ordered to be taken daily to the ship's office. (Article 1,597.) The Regulations direct that particular care be taken that the paymaster is furnished with this information in good time. (Article 1,654.) There are three places in which these "checks," as they are called, should appear, viz.:—In the leave-book, in the mess-book, in the ship's ledger, and all these ought to tally. On board the Cambridge these regulations appear to have been most imperfectly carried out. Mr. Onffroy, in examining the various books, found in No. 1 mess certain men checked for 59 days during the month of December in the mess-book, but not in the leave-book or the ledger. (Court-martial on Oliver Jew, question 202.) Ship's Corporal Jeffries, when acting for the master-at-arms in his absence, did not check the master-at-arms or any chief petty officer in his mess during Christmas leave (court-martial on Oliver Jew, question 236), and the master-at-arms acknowledges that when he returned he found many errors in the leave-book, and cut out some leaves, and had a fair copy made, but did not take care to see that he himself had been checked. (Questions 284 to 291.) Mr. Martin gives more instances in paragraph 10 of his paper, and also draws attention to the great slackness which he knows to exist in harbour ships in the matter of recording leave. This matter is a most important one, because if men are checked on the mess-book, and not either on the leave-book or on the ledger, the provisions would not be issued, and the victualling would not correspond with the ledger, and there would be a surplus. (Court-martial on Oliver Jew, questions 43 and 44.) If checked in the mess-book only, the paymaster would be claiming victualling for a greater number of days than the steward had to issue provisions for, and the result would be a surplus of stock over the remains shown on the paymaster's victualling account (question 203). Such surplus would be entirely in the hands of the ship's steward to do what he liked with. The ledger is the only one of the three books which comes to the Accountant-General's Department, and the audit of the paymaster's accounts must consequently depend on its correctness. Mr. Martin, therefore, suggests (paragraph 6 of this paper) that at the end of each quarter the rough or original leave-book should be totalled and compared with the total leave-checks in the ledger, and a certificate in the quarterly ledger should state that this has been done. This, however, would not secure that leave is duly entered in the leave-book; but this could easily be done by having a leave-book with a counterfoil, no man to be allowed to go on leave without a ticket, the counterfoil thereof being the paymaster's information of the fact. The record of officers on more than 48 hours' leave should also be made absolutely certain; and the practice of officers going on "private leave," alluded to by Mr. Martin, without being checked, should be stopped. It is perfectly evident that if the checks are not properly recorded, the Crown must suffer loss by the issue of provisions, or payment for savings, on account of officers and men who are not entitled to receive them or by the misappropriation of the accrued surplus.

4.—SAVINGS.

As stated in the foregoing paragraph, all persons, with the exceptions mentioned, are entitled to be victualled; but it is not necessary for them to take up their provisions if they do not wish to do so, and they can receive a money payment in lieu, viz., 4d. a pound for fresh meat and ¾d. a pound for vegetables (Article 1,666). These savings are to be paid monthly by the paymaster, and he is at the end of each quarter to enter the quantities paid for in his victualling account-book, and debit himself in his victualling statement when rendered into office (Article 1,669). The paymaster keeps a "mess-book" (mentioned in the preceding paragraph) for the entry of the quantities of every article of provisions taken up or saved daily by each mess, to enable him to make up the account of savings due (Article 1,717). The provisions of such officers and men as are absent for less than 48 hours are paid for as savings, and go to the benefit of the respective messes. As before stated, the checks in the mess-book should correspond with the entries of absentees in the leave-book and the ledger, otherwise the victualling accounts of the paymaster cannot be correct. It appears by the evidence that the Cambridge had two salt-meat days a week, but this does not appear to have been authorised by the Commander-in-Chief, as required by Article 1,600. This is the only ship at Devonport which has salt-meat days. It is a remnant of the time when savings were not paid for fresh meat, and men had salt-meat days allowed to enable them to obtain savings. I am not clear whether or not, under the present condition of things, salt-meat days are any longer necessary, at all events in harbour ships. Mr. Martin considers that they open the door to manipulation of accounts. (Paragraph 12 of his paper). By a judicious manipulation of the various books it would be quite possible for a man's mess to be paid savings, and for the man himself to be receiving his provisions in kind at the same time; and I expect that this was done in the case of the ship's corporals' mess, where it is very remarkable to find that the three corporals did not take up their provisions for seven months, but were paid savings, and then bought meat on the lower deck, obtained passes, and took it on shore. As soon as a new ship's steward joined, they took up their provisions. (Court-martial on Oliver Jew, questions 218 to 231 and 319.) No object, except a fraudulent one, would appear to exist for this practice, as they could have drawn their meat and taken it on shore, and sold it if they had wished to do so. The traffic which the police thus carried on with the men on the lower deck was most improper, and the master-at-arms professes not to have known anything about it.

5.—TAKING MEAT ON SHORE.

By a recent regulation, dated June 10, 1881, men are permitted to take their meat on shore, the limit being 4 lb. per man, and for this a pass, signed by the commander, is necessary. On board the Cambridge the master-at-arms gave the passes, and, until very recently, he was entrusted by the commander with a stamp, bearing the commander's signature, which he used to affix to the passes entirely at his own discretion, and sometimes as many as 40 passes were given in a day. (Court-martial on Oliver Jew, questions 129, 130, 164, and 274.) Mr. Martin discovered that on one occasion a ship's cook obtained two passes on one day. (Question 320.) In the case of the ward-room messman, as much as 40 lb. of meat have been taken on shore, with a pass, on one occasion; and his contention is that, under his arrangement with the mess, the meat is his own private property, to do what he likes with. (Court-martial on Oliver Jew, questions 245 to 255, 265 to 275, 329, 345 to 354.) But it was distinctly contrary to the regulation to allow any man to take more than 4 lb. This permission to take meat on shore appears to be open to objection and to fraud. Mr. Martin says in his paper (paragraph 3) that even while the trials were going on, a man with a pass for 4 lb. of meat was detected in going on shore with 10 lb. Mr. Parish, in his defence (pages 89 and 90 of his court-martial), attributes the frauds in great measure to the system of landing beef by the crew, which, he says, opens a vast field for dishonesty; and Inspector Swanson alludes to it.

6.—ACCOUNTS.

Certain accounts are kept by the paymaster, and retained by him for the purpose of reference, and for production in office if required (Article 1,713). So far as fresh meat and vegetables are concerned, these accounts are:—The daily account-book, showing the daily issues; such issues to be recorded by the ship's steward (Article 1,714). The weekly account-book (into which is to be transcribed the expenditure from the daily account-book), showing actual quantities remaining on board after all receipts and issues, and giving the paymaster the information necessary to enable him to make timely demands for supplies (Article 1,715). The mess-book, for the entry of provisions taken up or saved daily by each mess, to enable the paymaster to make up the account of savings due (Article 1,717). The victualling account-book, with debit and credit sides, showing in Part I., on the debit side, the remains at the commencement of the account and all supplies since received, and on the credit side, all issues and expenditure; and, in Part IV., an account of the number of persons actually victualled on board each day, brought into full allowance, and specifying whether on fresh or salt or preserved meat, and giving an abstract of the total victualling taken from the ledger transmitted into office (Article 1,718). The accounts kept by the ship's steward are to be examined daily by the paymaster or one of his staff; and before payment of savings, the mess-book is to be compared with the savings vouchers (Article 1,718, paragraph 3). The above-mentioned four books are not sent into office, but they form the basis on which the victualling accounts which the paymaster renders to the Admiralty are compiled. It was in these books that all the fraudulent entries were made. Oliver Jew, the ship's steward, was charged with neglect of duty in not making the daily account-book a proper record of the daily transactions; in preparing incorrect accounts of savings, whereby the messes were defrauded of about 7,000 lb. of meat unissued; and in not keeping the mess-books in accordance with the Regulations. To these charges he had no defence, and did not attempt to make any, as he could only acknowledge that his books and accounts were very badly kept (page 125 of court-martial on Oliver Jew). He denied any intentional fraud in the matter, and attributed the inaccuracies to carelessness and overwork, stating that the errors were of such a glaring description that they must have been detected at once by the most superficial examination of the books by the paymaster (pages 126-9 of court-martial on Oliver Jew). The erroneous entries were, no doubt, of a very patent character, and the nature of them can be seen by reference to Com. Castle's answer to question 144, in the court-martial on Oliver Jew, as regards the "weekly account-book;" Mr. Onffroy's answers to questions 188, as regards the "daily account-book;" 189 to 191, as regards the "weekly account-book;" 192, as regards the "mess-book;" 196 to 201, as regards saving vouchers; and 204 to 210, as regards the "victualling account-book;" also Mr. Forrest's answer to question 360 in the court-martial on Oliver Jew, and questions 229 to 258 in the court-martial on Mr. Parish; and Mr. Stewart's answers to questions 162 to 176 in the court-martial on Mr. Parish. As before stated, the paymaster is directed to "keep" the "daily account-book," the "weekly account-book," and the "mess-book," the ship's steward being directed to record the daily issues in the first book (Articles 1713-1718). Practically, as would appear from question 316 in the court-martial on Oliver Jew, the custom of the service is for the ship's steward to keep these books, under the paymaster's supervision and audit. Such being the case, it is necessary that they should be examined daily by the paymaster or one of his staff (Article 1,718, paragraph 3). This regulation, however, is not as clear as it might be, inasmuch as it might be taken to apply to Article 1,718 only, whereas it is evidently meant to apply to the five preceding articles also. This should be altered. On board the Cambridge, Oliver Jew kept these books, and the paymaster ought to have examined them daily, but he only examined the daily and weekly account-books weekly, and the mess-book monthly. (Court-martial on Oliver Jew, questions 70 to 73.) Mr. Parish, paymaster, was charged with neglect of duty in not properly examining these books, and not exercising a proper supervision over the accounts and issues of rations, whereby an actual deficiency of about 3,600 lb. of fresh meat occurred, and his accounts were made to show an issue of about 16,000 lb. of vegetables in excess of his stock, and that several messes were short paid savings for about 7,000 lb. of meat unissued. Also, with neglect of duty in rendering his "victualling account" in such a manner as to show impossible remains of 7,143 lb. of meat and 3,620 lb. of vegetables in his charge on a certain day, such remains not agreeing with the remains shown in the "weekly account-book." On these charges he was found guilty. He had no defence to offer, except that there was a conspiracy to defraud on the part of Oliver Jew and others, and that the accounts which were brought to him to examine must have been afterwards destroyed, and others prepared, as he could never have signed documents containing the glaring errors shown. He did, however, sign such impossible documents, as appears by questions 13 to 21 in the court-martial on Mr. Parish; and it would seem that, having every confidence in Oliver Jew, he took no pains himself to examine what was put before him, but signed mechanically. Mr. Martin remarks, with reference to the preparation of the savings vouchers and victualling accounts, that it is the frequent practice of the service for these all-important documents to be prepared by the ship's steward, to the probable neglect of his own duty. If they were made up by the paymaster himself, he could hardly fail to detect any fraud which was being systematically carried on, and it would have been impossible for Mr. Parish to have made out those documents which he transmitted into office, without knowing they were false in many instances. The charges on which the court-martial acquitted were, in the case of Mr. Parish, neglect of duty in not taking into his charge and retaining (Article 1,713) certain daily and weekly account-books, which were found missing; and in the case of Jew, destroying those books. Mr. Parish was acquitted, apparently, on the ground that he did take them into his charge, inasmuch as the books were placed in the book-rack in the ship steward's office, which was considered as part of the paymaster's office; and Jew was acquitted because it could not be proved that the documents which were torn up, and thrown away, were the books in question. The books could only have been got rid of by some person interested in concealing the frauds, and having access to where they were kept. There was a considerable amount of evidence as to the proper place of deposit for such books. I think that when the quarterly account has been made up, the books, which are the basis of that account, should be kept by the paymaster in his own charge, and under lock and key. They are of the utmost value in enabling frauds to be detected when the victualling account comes to be audited at the Admiralty; but, as a matter of fact, they have never hitherto been used for that purpose. The other charges in which Jew was acquitted were the embezzlement of 3,600 lb. of meat; and the causing of false entries to be made by the ship's steward's assistant, Alfred Morcombe. The embezzlement could not be actually proved; and the prosecutor did not go on with the charge in the case of Morcombe. Morcombe, however, was tried by court-martial for making the false entries, and found guilty. His defence was that he did not make them of his own free will, or for gain, but simply on the compulsion of Oliver Jew, who had power to ruin his prospects.

7.—Audit.

As before stated, the four books to which I have drawn attention are never sent into the office; they merely form the basis on which the paymaster makes up the victualling accounts to be rendered, under Articles 1,719 to 1,725. These are "audited," as it is called, in the Accountant-General's Department; but I think that "examined" would be the more correct term. There can be no true audit, such as would detect fraud, unless the auditors have before them the various documents on which the accounts have been built up. It is not too much to say that the examination of the paymaster's account by the Accountant-General's Department would never have detected such frauds as those which Oliver Jew perpetrated, simply because the system pursued did not necessitate any examination of the books containing all the fictitious entries. On this point, I would refer to Mr. Martin's observations at paragraphs 8 and 14 of his paper. In the account which Mr. Parish sent into office, and which covered some portion of the period under investigation by the court-martial, the only thing which could have been called in question by the audit branch would have been the large remains shown in his account on March 31. An explanation would probably have been called for, but an apparently satisfactory answer would, no doubt, have been forthcoming. Any actual deficiency, however, would have been discovered on final survey of the provisions, when Mr. Parish's time of service expired. I think it is impossible to suppose that these large frauds commenced only on Oct. 1 last. They have probably been going on for a long time, increasing in magnitude on account of the apparent impunity with which they could be committed; and there is nothing to show that they have been confined to this one ship and this one port. Mr. Martin suggests a further examination in paragraph 15 of his paper, and I submit that this be done without delay. I would propose that it be undertaken by Mr. Martin, and Mr. Onffroy of the Accountant-General's Department, and that they should have the assistance of a good ship's steward whom Mr. Martin knows; and that the books to be examined shall be those of the Cambridge for the three months prior to Oct. 1 last, to show whether the audit has failed to detect previous frauds; and those of the Indus, Excellent, and Victoria and Albert, to ascertain the Portsmouth practice.

8.—What Became of the Surplus Beef?

This is a question which can only at present be answered by surmises. There is no doubt whatever that the quantities drawn from the Victualling Yard were received on board the Cambridge. The facilities for getting things out of that ship appear to have been very great:—1. There was practically a free gangway after 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when the master-at-arms had gone home, the ship's corporal was busy at the canteen, and no sentry at the gangway (court-martial on Oliver Jew, questions 237 to 243, and 279). 2. There were the facilities offered by the practice of allowing men to take 4 lb. of beef on shore at a time. 3. There was the fact that the ward-room messman was allowed to take as much as 40 lb. of meat on shore at a time. 4. There was the looseness which left it entirely in the hands of the master-at-arms, or ship's corporal acting for him, to give passes for taking meat on shore. 5. There were the facilities afforded by the dust contractor, the ward-room messman's private boat, and other shore boats, for getting things out of the ship undetected. As regards the dust contractor, a man named Reynolds, I find that the Admiralty have just made a contract with him for five years to remove the dust and ashes from the ships at Devonport for £100 a year. It appears by answers to questions 149 to 158 in the court-martial on Oliver Jew, that he is a general dealer at Torpoint, and supplies the canteen with bread, for which he is paid. He pays the ship £4 a month for the privilege of removing the mess refuse, £3 7s. 6d. of which goes to the Recreation Fund, and 12s. 6d. buys salt for the messes. He comes on board three or four times a day. Com. Castle "believes" that a ship's corporal attends the ash bin when it is being emptied, and another the mess deck when being cleared of refuse. The ash bin appears to be an outside one, and the master-at-arms states in his evidence (questions 281 and 282 of court-martial on Oliver Jew) that fresh beef could be put into it without being observed by the police or sentries, and that it is only "occasionally" that the contents of the refuse casks are examined by the police. I would draw attention to the annexed report of Detective Swanson with reference to this man, and to Mr. Martin's observations at paragraph 5 of his paper. The ward-room messman's private boat appears to be hanging about the ship all day, and always lands at North Corner, and shore boats come off to the ship late at night, when there is a free gangway. (Court-martial on Oliver Jew, question 244.)

9.—Conclusions.

After having carefully gone over all the evidence, the following appear to be the conclusions to be arrived at:—1. That the demands under which supplies were obtained from the Victualling Yard were of a very informal character, and enabled any amount of provisions to be drawn without proper check on the part of the paymaster. 2. That there was gross and culpable neglect of duty on the part of Mr. Parish, which has been lightly visited on him by a sentence of severe reprimand and dismissal from his ship. 3. That Oliver Jew, the ship's steward, had been carrying on an extensive system of fraud, the amount of which it is not possible to arrive at; but that ordinary care on the part of Mr. Parish would have prevented it. 4. That the ship's police of the Cambridge were quite demoralised, and that they probably worked in connection with Jew, or, at all events, knew what was going, and made no difficulties. 5. That there was great laxity in the arrangements of the Cambridge, which offered considerable facilities for men taking provisions on shore, and for things getting out of the ship by other means. 6. That the regulations with reference to recording leave of absence and "checking" absentees were not duly observed. 7. That the examination of the victualling accounts, as conducted in the Accountant-General's Department, is useless for the purpose of detecting such frauds as those which have been brought to light. 8. That further inquiries are necessary to ascertain the practice on board ships at Portsmouth as regards "checking" persons on leave, demanding provisions, and keeping accounts.

The following steps appear to be necessary:—1. To charge Mr. Parish with the full value of the deficiency of 3,600 lb. of fresh meat for which he is responsible. 2. To disperse the ship's police of the Cambridge, and disrate J. Jenkinson, the master-at-arms, as recommended by the Commander-in-Chief. 3. I think it would also be desirable to disperse the staff of ship's stewards, and ship's stewards' assistants employed in the harbour ships and vessels at Devonport, and to order the discharge of Alfred Morcombe, ship's steward's assistant, who was found guilty of altering the figures under Jew's direction, as he is evidently not a fit person to be retained in such a position. 4. To approve the Commander-in-Chief's proposed action with reference to the ship's police sleeping on board the Cambridge; and to ask him to report whether he is satisfied that the arrangements for guarding the gangways described by Capt. Buller are such as will guard against irregularities of every description. 5. To provide for all leave over 48 hours being properly recorded, and the absentees properly checked throughout the service. 6. To provide a form of demand for the supply of fresh meat and vegetables from the Victualling Yards. 7. To order the further inquiry into the accounts of other ships, as suggested by Mr. Martin. 8. To consider the question of salt-meat days; and also whether any changes should be made in the regulations for taking fresh beef on shore; or for payment of savings. 9. To devise some means for securing a real audit of the paymaster's accounts, either by having the books sent into office, or by having them inspected at uncertain times at the ports by officers from the Accountant-General's Department.

NAVAL SUPREMACY.

If any doubt should exist as to the activity displayed by the French in armour-plated shipbuilding, the following list of ships in course of construction at the commencement of 1875, those subsequently completed, and others included in this year's estimates, will show the energy displayed by that nation as compared with English apathy and Admiralty misapplication of the national funds:—

Beyond this list of British ironclads there were purchased out of the Vote of Credit in 1878, Neptune, Superb, Orion, and Belleisle, and but for this impromptu addition to the Navy it will be seen that the ships would have stood at 34 French to 21 British. These facts and figures speak volumes for the disastrous consequences of the enormous deficiencies recently discovered in the shipbuilding tonnage accounts, compared with the quantities ordered by Parliament, which amounts in reality to about six substantial ironclads alone in 10 years.—Morning Post.

Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil.—Its Unequalled Efficacy in General Debility.—In cases of debility and defective nutrition, the use of this celebrated Oil has been attended with remarkably beneficial results. Rowland Dalton, Esq., District Medical Officer, Bury St. Edmunds, writes:—"In giving my opinion of Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil, I have no hesitation in saying that I have not the slightest confidence in any other kind. The effects of Dr. de Jongh's Oil are sure and most remarkable, especially in that broken-down state of health and strength, which usually precedes and favours tubercular deposit; and I never recommend any other sort. The Oil I have had from you was for my own use, and it has certainly been the only means of saving my life on two occasions; and even now, when I feel out of condition, I take it, and like it, unmixed with anything, as being the most agreeable way. I could wish that Dr. de Jongh's Oil would come into general use, and entirely supersede the Pale and other worthless preparations." Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil is sold only in capsuled imperial half-pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s; with his stamp and signature and the signature of his sole consignees on the capsule and the label under wrapper, by all Chemists. THE NEW DECORATION: "THE ROYAL RED CROSS."

WAR OFFICE, April 27, 1883.

VICTORIA, R.—Whereas We have been pleased to take into Our consideration the services rendered by certain persons in nursing the sick and wounded of our Army and Navy, and have resolved specially to recognise individual instances of special devotion in such service; Now, for the purpose of attaining this end, We have instituted, constituted, and created, and by these presents for Us, Our Heirs, and Successors, do institute, constitute, and create a decoration, to be designated as hereinafter prescribed; and We are pleased to make, ordain, and establish the following rules and ordinances for the government of the same, which shall from henceforth be inviolably observed and kept:—

First.—The decoration shall be styled and designated "The Royal Red Cross," and shall consist of a Cross, enamelled crimson, edged with gold, having on the Arms thereof the words Faith, Hope, Charity, with the date of the institution of the decoration; the centre having thereon Our Effigy. On the reverse side Our Royal and Imperial Cipher and Crown shall be shown in relief on the centre.

Thirdly.—The decoration may be worn by the Queen Regnant, the Queen Consort, or the Queen Dowager of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland: and it shall be competent for Us, Our Heirs and Successors, to confer the decoration upon any of the Princesses of the Royal Family of Great Britain and Ireland.

Fourthly.—It shall be competent for Us, Our Heirs and Successors, to confer the decoration upon any ladies, whether subjects or foreign persons, who may be recommended to Our notice by Our Secretary of State for War for special exertions in providing for the nursing, or for attending to, sick and wounded soldiers and sailors.

Fifthly.—It shall be competent for Us, Our Heirs and Successors, to confer this decoration upon any Nursing Sisters, whether subjects or foreign persons, who may be recommended to Our notice by Our Secretary of State for War, or, as the case may be, by the First Lord of the Admiralty through Our said Secretary of State, for special devotion and competency which they may have displayed in their nursing duties with Our Army in the Field, or in Our Naval and Military Hospitals.

Sixthly.—The names of those upon whom We may be pleased to confer the decoration shall be published in the London Gazette, and a registry thereof kept in the office of Our Secretary of State for War.

Lastly.—In order to make such additional provision as shall effectually preserve pure this honourable distinction, it is ordained that if any person on whom such distinction shall be conferred shall by her conduct become unworthy of it, her name shall be erased, by an order under Our Sign Manual, from the register of those upon whom the said decoration shall have been conferred.

And it is hereby declared that We, Our Heirs and Successors, shall be the sole judge of the conduct which may require the erasure from the register of the name of the offending person, and that it shall at all times be competent for Us, Our Heirs and Successors, to restore the name, if such restoration should be justified by the circumstances of the case.

Given at Our Court at Osborne, this twenty-third day of April, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, in the forty-sixth year of Our Reign. By Her Majesty's Command,

HARTINGTON.

ARMY.

WAR OFFICE, PALL MALL, April 27, 1883.

STAFF.

Lieut.-Gen. Lord Alexander George Russell, C.B., to be Lieut.-Gen. on the Staff, to command the troops in the Dominion of Canada, vice Lieut.-Gen. (with the local rank of General) Sir. P. L. MacDougall, K.C.M.G., whose period of service in that appointment is about to expire (May 24).

Major and Brevet Lieut.-Col. R. B. Lane, the Rifle Brigade (the Prince Consort's Own), to be Assistant Military Secretary to Lieut.-Gen. Lord A. G. Russell, C.B. (May 24).

INDIA OFFICE, April 27, 1883.

The Queen has approved of the retirement of the under-mentioned officers of the Indian Services:—Lieut.-Cols. and Brevet Cols. R. S. Simonds, of the Bengal S.C. (Feb. 23); C. B. L. Smith, of the Madras S.C. (March 1); Lieut.-Cols. J. P. Warlow (Feb. 25), G. S. B. Hewetson (March 1), H. T. O'Reilly (March 25), and E. W. Shaw (April 26), all of the Madras S.C.; Majors D. H. Thompson (Feb. 1) and F. R. A. B. Constable (Feb. 16), both of the Bengal S.C.; Brig.-Surg. H. Crocker, M.D., of the Madras Army (March 1).

The under-mentioned officer has been transferred to the Retired List:—Lieut.-Col. and Brevet Col. E. R. C. Wilcox, of the Bengal S.C. (Feb. 9).

BREVET.

The under-mentioned officers are granted a step of honorary rank on retirement:—

To be Major-Generals:—Lieut.-Cols. and Brevet Cols. E. R. C. Wilcox (Feb. 9) and R. S. Simonds (Feb. 23), both of the Bengal S.C.; C. B. L. Smith, Madras S.C. (March 1).

To be Colonels:—Lieut.-Cols. J. P. Warlow (Feb. 25), G. S. B. Hewetson (March 1), H. T. O'Reilly (March 25), and E. W. Shaw (April 26), all four of the Madras S C.

To be Lieutenant-Colonels:—Majors D. H. Thompson (Feb. 1), and F. R. A. B. Constable (Feb. 16), both of the Bengal S.C.

To be Deputy-Surgeons-General:—Brig.-Surgs. R. Dempster (Feb. 28) and H. Crocker, M.D. (March 1), both of the Madras Army.

Field-Marshal Lord Napier of Magdala, who, since he gave up the command of Gibraltar Garrison, has been sojourning in Egypt, will arrive in London on May 1.

The London correspondent of the Press Association has been at the trouble to get an actuary's opinion as to the amount of the "lump sum down" which would have to be given to Lord Alcester and Lord Wolseley. Taking Lord Wolseley first, and putting his age at 50, he says:—"An annuity of £2,000 per annum to a male life aged 50 could be got from a first-class annuity office for, say, £28,000. Something depends upon the age of Lady Wolseley, but, assuming that she is not likely to present an heir to Lord Wolseley, an annuity of £2,000 to a possibly unborn child would be only £1,000,—that is, £29,000 in all." In round figures, the grant to Sir Garnet Wolseley would have to be £30,000. Lord Alcester was born in 1821. His present age is 62. He is, therefore, a cheaper annuitant than Lord Wolseley. "A first-class annuity office would give him £2,000 a year for, say, £20,000. Lord Alcester is understood to be a bachelor. If so, the sum which an annuity office would charge to relieve the nation of paying the annuity during the lifetime of a possible child of his after his death would be not less than £3,000 or £4,000." In round numbers, he would get £25,000. But this would make an invidious distinction between him and Lord Wolseley; and if this were thought inexpedient, it would be necessary to pay a similar sum to both. £30,000 would be too much for one, £25,000 too little for the other. On the whole, the conclusion is that the hereditary pension will be cheaper than the lump sum.

LEWIS'S 2s TEA.—Send Postal Orders for 2s, and you will immediately receive, carriage free, delivered at your own house, 1 lb. of Lewis's 2s Tea, neatly packed in a box; or, if you have tried Lewis's wonderful Tea, and you know its merits, you can order 6 lbs., 12 lbs., 20 lbs., 60 lbs., or 100 lbs. Lewis's have these quantities packed in boxes ready to send, carriage paid, to any part of the United Kingdom. All remittances must be made payable to Lewis and Co., Ranelagh Street, Liverpool.

ARMY NOTES.

It has been notified from the War Office that the "Text-book of Military Topography," by Col. Richards, just published, will be the text-book for all examinations on this subject in the Army at the Military College, and of Militia candidates for Line commissions.

The inhabitants of Malmesbury have presented to each Malmesbury man—and there were several—who served in the Egyptian Campaign, a silver watch and five shillings. Lord Wolseley wrote saying that the exhibition of good-feeling elicited the expression of the Duke of Cambridge's unqualified approval.

There will be a field-day on Southsea Common on the 10th proximo. All the troops garrisoned at Portsmouth will take part in the proceedings, as well as the Post-Office Volunteers, who will leave the Metropolis by special train in the morning and return the same evening.

Cols. W. T. Chitty and T. M. Baumgartner, Bombay S.C., have succeeded to colonels' allowances, from April 1 and 4 respectively.

Major-Gen. G. B. Harman, C.B., has arrived home from Alexandria, to take up the appointment of Deputy-Adjutant-General at Head-quarters, in succession to Major-Gen. R. B. Hawley.

The Topographical Department of the Russian General Staff has just completed an elaborate map, on a two-verst scale, of the newly-acquired Turcoman territory beyond the Caspian. The topographical party compiling it started from Tchikishlar, at the mouth of the Atrek, and made their way, viâ Fort Tchet, Bami, and Geok Tepé, to Askabad and Sarakhs. It thus gives the whole of the new Russo-Persian frontier and the almost unknown Atock region lying along the Perso-Turcoman frontier beyond. The distance traversed by the party was 592 miles, or close upon 600 miles. Another important map just compiled by the same department is a 50-verst one of Asiatic Turkey, Persia, Afghanistan, and the North-West Provinces of India, embodying all the recent English and Russian surveys.

"Major-General" writes:—"In reference to your article in the issue of April 21, I beg to point out that if a General officer retires voluntarily, his retired pay remains for life at the rate on which he retires, whereas by waiting till he is compulsorily retired, he gets the full pension of his rank, on attaining the full age for retirement. For instance, if A retired now (age 55), he would be given £630 a year for life; whereas if he waited till retired (five years' unemployed), in two years' time, he would get £650 till he became 62, when he would draw £700."

The St. James's Gazette says:—"It is not long ago that there seemed to be a general disposition to admit that the Madras Army was destined to disappear as a distinct force within a very short period. Sir Frederick Roberts has devoted himself, with characteristic energy, to the task of disappointing these expectations; and the reforms instituted by him will go far towards restoring the efficiency of the Madras Army, and making it capable of sustaining its old reputation. In the first place, the cavalry, which was dressed and armed after an antiquated fashion, has now been assimilated, both in costume and in weapons, to that of Bengal. It is to have the Mackenzie equipment, and for the old straight cavalry sabre the men will carry the crooked tulwar in a scabbard of leather and wood. Perhaps a still more important reform is the removal of Army Head-quarters from Madras to Ootacamund, where they will remain throughout the year, with increased advantage to their health and a correspondingly greater capacity for performing their official duties."

A preliminary return of the British Army (prepared in anticipation of the general annual return) for the year 1882, with abstracts for the years 1863 to 1882 inclusive, has just been issued as a Blue-book. The return gives particulars in regard to effectives, establishments, and distribution; recruiting and casualties; courts-martial, crimes, and punishments; rewards and services; ages, heights, and chest measurements; and nationalities, religions, and education. It also deals with the Auxiliary and Reserve Forces. The average effective strength of the Regular Army, all ranks, during 1882, was 189,229. Of this number, 7,336 were officers.

It is the intention of the War Department to erect three forts in the neighbourhood of Ipswich for coast defence, one near Pakefield, another on Gunton Denes, and the third inland at a distance of three miles from either of the other two, thus forming a triangle, and situate somewhere on the rising ground near Oulton Hall, and not far from the railway cutting approaching the Somerleyton marshes. The plans are being prepared.

The Army prize of £20 for the best shot in the Army is no longer to be issued, but prizes for good shooting will be distributed as follows:—Cavalry and infantry—Best shot in regiment or battalion, second best shot in regiment or battalion, best shot amongst corporals (including paid lance-corporals) best shot among the private and unpaid lance-corporals in each troop or company when 40 men and upwards have been exercised in both parts of the course, best shot among the private and unpaid lance-corporals in each troop or company when 30 men and upwards have been exercised in both parts of the course. Marksmen—The badges for the serjeants of the best troop or company and of the prize-winners, as above, will be awarded as heretofore.

"Malwa" writes to the Standard:—"Decorations innumerable are being showered upon the troops who landed within certain dates in Egypt, a large proportion of whom never saw the enemy or his lines. During the much more critical time of the Indian Mutiny, the order was no one should receive the mutiny medal unless he had been actually under fire. I served during all 1858, and part of 1859, in Central India, received six months' full batta for service in the field, a share of prize-money, and an acknowledgment for services, with a detachment of infantry and guns under my command, from the Chief Political Resident, when ordered to intercept the rebels; yet I and some 300 men of my late regiment were denied the medal. I simply say to a paternal Government and a discerning public—How's this?"

Amusements.

The ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA will commence on Tuesday evening next, May 1, with Verdi's opera of "Aida," Madame Fursch-Madi, Mdlle. Stahl, Signor Cotogni, Signor Scolara, Signor de Resiche, and Signor Marconi (his first appearance in England) being included in the opening programme.

To-night will witness the 150th representation of the "Rivals" at the VAUDEVILLE THEATRE. This is the longest run on record of this charming comedy. The piece seems likely to hold the boards for many weeks to come. It certainly is a thing to be seen, and those of our readers who may be in town during the race and regimental-dinner season cannot do better than spend an evening at Mr. Thorne's comfortable little theatre in the Strand.

The little ROYALTY THEATRE in Dean Street, Soho, closed since the autumn for structural attractions, was reopened by Miss Kate Santley on Monday night, the appearance of the interior and the convenience of the approaches being greatly improved. The novelty provided is a new comic opera called "The Merry Duchess," written by Mr. George R. Sims, and composed by Mr. Frederic Clay. A whimsical story is set forth in a lively libretto illustrating a sporting subject in a humorous fashion, and the composer has enriched the drollery of the situations by exhilarating airs, bringing mirth and melody into harmonious combination. The scene is laid at Doncaster and its neighbourhood, and the love of the Duchess of Epsom Downs for the famous jockey, Freddy Bowman, who has never lost a race, and makes an income of £20,000 a year, furnishes the mainspring of the plot. Mr. H. Linden has painted two pretty scenes representing Muddleham corn-fields and Doncaster Race-course. Miss Kate Santley is Rowena, the wife of Brabazon Sykes, a broken-down betting-man, admirably embodied by Mr. Ashley; Miss Kate Munroe is the Duchess, Mr. Gregory is the jockey, Mr. R. Martin is Lord Johnnie, and, with the aid of some effective choruses, the opera attained a complete success.

The IMPERIAL THEATRE, first opened by Mr. Edgar Bruce seven years ago, when the house was known as the Aquarium Theatre, has again passed under his managerial direction, and the improvements made in the arrangements bear testimony to his knowledge of the best mode of securing the comfort of an audience. Miss Lingard has here repeated, in the adapted drama of "Camille," the success attained by her a short time since at the Gaiety, and her representation of the heroine, already played by so many distinguished actresses at various theatres, under numerous names, shows the skill at least of one thoroughly experienced in stage resources. Mr. George Alexander reappears as Armand Duval, Mr. Charles Sugden reappears, after four years' absence from the boards, as the Compte de Varville, and Mr. G. W. Anson as Gaston Rieux. Mr. Stephens affords valuable assistance as Madame Prudence, and until other prominent novelties can be got ready, the present programme will well serve the purpose of the management. A new play, by Mr. Wilkie Collins, founded on one of his unpublished novels, is intimated to be the next production.

The morning performances at the GAIETY have been again numerous during the week. On Tuesday afternoon, "The Hunchback" was played, Miss Walpole making a favourable first appearance as Helen, Miss Wallis acting Julia for the first time in London, and Mr. George Neville, Mr. Hermann Vezin, Mr. Charles Glenny, Mr. F. Charles, and Mr. Lionel Brough, representing Sir Thomas Clifford, Master Walter, Modus, Lord Tinsel, and Fathom. On Thursday, "The Hunchback" was repeated with Mrs. Alfred Maddick as Julia, Miss Kate Bishop as Helen, and Mr. Henry Neville as Master Walter. On Friday, Mr. Pennington appeared as Ingomar, with Miss Louise Willes as Parthenia; and on Monday and Tuesday next, Miss Le Thière and Mr. Edmund Leathes have special performances, the one giving the play of "Pygmalion and Galatea," afterwards introducing Miss Gertrude Kellogg as Lady Macbeth; and the other appearing in a new blank-verse play which he has written, entitled, "For King and Country."

After next week, the revival of "School" will give place at the HAYMARKET to Mr. Herman Merivale's English version of Victorien Sardou's new play of "Fédora," which will be produced on Saturday evening, May 5.

DRURY LANE will be reopened for a dramatic season this evening (Saturday), with the spectacular drama of "Youth," originally produced here on Aug. 6, 1881, when a consecutive run of nearly five months was obtained. Mr. Augustus Harris resumes his character of Frank Darlington, and Mrs. Alfred Maddick plays the French adventuress, Eva de Malvoisie, first acted by Miss Marie Litton, and afterwards by Miss Helen Barry.

On Thursday, at the STRAND THEATRE, Miss Ada Swanborough gave a morning performance, when a new romantic drama, in a prologue and three acts, was produced, under the title of "Veva." The author is Mr. Clement O'Neill, and the prominent characters were sustained by Miss Ada Swanborough, Miss Eleanor Bufton, Mr. W. H. Pennington, and Mr. A. Wood.

The FOLIES DRAMATIQUES THEATRE, Great Queen Street, will be reopened on Saturday, May 5, with a comic opera called "Prince Methusalem," the music being by Strauss, and the English libretto by Mr. Henry S. Leigh. "Prince Methusalem" was originally produced at Vienna in 1877.

The officers of the Woolwich Garrison gave on Friday evening at their pretty and commodious theatre a performance of the interesting little comedy of "Time tries All," followed by a new operetta, written by Mr. T. Watson, called a "Lesson in Magic," with music composed by the Cavalier Lavertal. To Miss Rosa Leo, Miss Morton, Mr. Rising, and Mr. Cattermole were assigned the prominent characters.

THE letter of Lieutenant-Colonel Chenevix-Trench, our Military Attaché at St. Petersburg, which appears elsewhere in our columns, will be read with interest by all those who desire to see the Short-service system carried to its logical conclusion, by promoting alike the welfare of the soldier and the interests of the State. Under our present system, the State demands of those who enter the ranks of the Army that they should make the greatest possible sacrifices in its behalf, as it calls upon them to give unreservedly the best years of their lives. And, in return, what does the State do for those who become its victims?—we use the word victims advisedly. Absolutely nothing. It is obliged to throw out some bait, in order to attract men to the ranks. It therefore offers a lump sum down on the termination of the period of Army service, in the shape of deferred pay, and a small pittance, which is barely sufficient to enable a man to keep body and soul together. When it has done this, it seems to imagine that it has done all that is required of it. Ministers in Parliament are never tired of telling the country how much has been done by successive Governments to improve the position of the soldier, and how happy and contented the rank and file now are. Much, doubtless, has been done, but at the same time the State has certain obligations to perform, and these it has hitherto shirked. In introducing Short-service, we simply copied from the Germans a system which was tried in the campaign of 1870, and was found to produce satisfactory results. But in copying the German system, Lord Cardwell overlooked certain points. First and foremost was the fact that, whereas in Germany every able-bodied man is obliged to give his services to the State, with us it is different, for we can only fill the ranks of the Army by making the terms of service attractive enough to secure men by voluntary enlistment. In Germany, soldiering is consequently understood by the nation at large. The fact of every man, whatever his position in life, having to pass through the military mill, naturally has the effect of raising the Army in the estimation of the public. In England, the soldier is still regarded with marked disfavour in some quarters. The Volunteer movement has done much, it is true, to remove the old prejudice which existed against the wearers of the scarlet tunic, but it is only in our large centres of industry that Volunteers are constantly to be seen under arms or in uniform. In isolated districts the feeling still exists that a man, to be a soldier, must necessarily be a ne'er-do-well. It follows, therefore, that the soldier in England, once his term of service with the colours is completed, starts in civil life at a serious disadvantage. Whilst he has been away soldiering, his brothers in civil life have been gaining experience in the workshop and at the desk. They have learnt a trade, or made for themselves a position. The time-expired soldier has, to all intents and purposes, to begin life afresh; and he has to face this great difficulty—that the fact of his being a Reserve man, liable at any moment to be called to the colours, militates against his chances of obtaining permanent employment. But what does the State, to help the individual to overcome the difficulty? To its lasting discredit be it said, it has hitherto left its victims to look after themselves, and get employment as best they can. It is against this one-sided arrangement that Colonel Trench protests, in the letter he addresses to us this week. The duty of the State must be apparent. Our hard-working officials at the War Office, however, are too much occupied in inventing devices for buttons and badges, and holding consultations with the military tailors, to find time to devote to the consideration of such a question as this. They have what they, in the multitude of their wisdom, consider more important business on hand, and until they have come to a final decision as to what uniform is best calculated to increase the confusion that now prevails, it is hopeless to expect them to give attention to what in their opinion are, after all, minor details. Nevertheless, we would again impress upon them that they have duties to perform as important, if not more so than those upon which they have been employed for the last few years. A fisherman usually catches his fish before debating as to how it shall be cooked and dressed. His first object is to see that his bait is sufficiently attractive; and having assured himself that this is the case, he waits patiently the result of his labours. If we may be permitted to add our advice to that of Lord Hartington's numerous counsellors, we would strongly recommend his lordship, if he really desires, as we believe he does, to promote the interests of the services over which he has been placed, to break up without a moment's delay all the Committees now sitting for the discussion of crude questions of military culinary art, and adopt the more practical tactics of the fisherman. Let him first catch his fish; it will be time enough, depend upon it, to go into the important matter of the dressing when the fish is fairly landed on the War-Office kitchen-table. It seems at present that the gentlemen who preside over the War-Office kitchen are principally remarkable for their qualities in one direction. As the Indian cook usually excels in the art of curry-making, they devote their undivided attention seemingly to the manufacture of hashes. Most people know what the old adage says with regard to a superabundance of cooks. We are almost afraid that Lord Hartington is suffering at the present time from the evil effects of a too heavily-weighted kitchen. At any rate, the nation cannot but feel disappointed, when it finds that the most important problems which its responsible authorities have to solve are being set aside, in order that battalions already to all intents and purposes invisible should be rendered even more so than they are—if such a thing could be—by means of a magician-like feat which would put invisible men into invisible uniforms. The attention of our War Minister surely should be directed to the duty of making the Army more, rather than less, visible. This object could not be secured more effectually than by the adoption of the course which Colonel Trench suggests, viz., the introduction of a system by which employment would be secured for every soldier of good character on his passing to the Reserve. By the carrying-out of so commendable a reform, Lord Hartington would have the whole service on his side. It is a crying disgrace to us, as the wealthiest community in the world, that our soldiers should be, what they are now in only too many instances considered, society's outcasts, and that this deplorable state of public feeling with regard to them should be countenanced, nay, even engendered, by the treatment meted out to them by the State they invariably serve so well. We ask, has any attempt ever been made by any Minister who has held office in Pall Mall to induce the large employers of labour to utilise the services of those who have served the State faithfully in the ranks of the Army? We have read on more than one occasion a half-hearted speech of some authority advocating the claims of the old soldier to the confidence of the public, but there has been no systematic endeavour made to obtain for him that recognition which he has a right to demand. Men like Colonel Trench, and Captain Walter of the Corps of Commissionaires, have done much to influence public opinion in favour of the soldier; but no amount of outside agitation will be of avail in securing the ends in view, unless the War Office comes forward and plays its part. Lord Hartington is a recognised leader of Liberalism. He, above all men, has it in his power to inaugurate a better state of things, for he can appeal to his political supporters both in and out of Parliament to assist him. He need ask for no money, all he need demand is that justice may be done to those who have remained too long neglected. Let him, then, enter upon a course of action for himself, and setting aside the usual official routine, stand up in the House of Commons and openly declare that it is his intention to espouse the cause of the country's defenders. The usual course of action would be for the subject to be submitted for the consideration of a War-office Committee. We know only too well what that means, and we strongly recommend his lordship not to run the risk of marring his reputation by following the customary routine. The nation, if properly appealed to, would, we have no hesitation in saying, respond to the call, and by this means the Army would be elevated to a position it has never occupied before. We hope and trust that there may be no further delay. The cards are in Lord Hartington's hands; all he has to do is to play them.

THE Assistant-Secretary and Principal Clerk of the Admiralty has drawn up a report on the first of the recent Naval scandals, the Cambridge frauds, to assist the Board in arriving at a definite conclusion as to the corruption shown to have existed in certain harbour ships of the Navy. Official documents of this nature are seldom, if ever, made public. We have published this report as affording direct evidence in support of the charge of incompetency we have so often brought against the Admiralty. For this remarkable document proves most conclusively that the Admiralty, as at present constituted, is entirely under the control of the civilian element; that the Board are as dependent on this element for information as to what is taking place in the Navy, as any ordinary family is on the baker for its bread; and that it is this civilian element which actually manufactures the "opinion of the Board." Incredible as such a statement, unsupported by evidence of the fact, must have appeared to those who read our previous comments on the administration of the Navy, it is now conclusively proved to be but too true. The Lords of the Admiralty rule—the Higher Division Civilian Clerks govern—the Navy. No wonder, then, that the service is mismanaged, or that the charge of incompetency and ignorance is repeatedly brought against the Admiralty. The report we now publish clearly proves the existence of both. Corruption has also been demonstrated to exist by the fact, recently made public, that 21,665 tons' weight of armourclads have been paid for by the country, and the money expended by the Admiralty, in excess of the actual tonnage constructed. Had the money voted for armourclad construction by Parliament been applied to its legitimate purpose, the country would be in possession of six ironclads of the Conqueror class more than have been built. What has become of this vast sum of money? To what conclusion can any man in his right senses arrive other than that this money has been misapplied? What has become of the Queen Anne plate and valuable paintings formerly in Greenwich Hospital? We do not for one moment mean to impugn the honesty or the integrity of the Lords of the Admiralty. The members of the Board are above suspicion. The Naval Members are officers who have reached the summit of their profession. But, as the remarkable documents we have published clearly prove, they are entirely at the mercy of their Civilian Staff, and are consequently lamentably ignorant of what really does go on both inside and outside the Admiralty. The Board, as a matter of fact, is bound hand and foot by the suckers of that monstrous octopus, the Permanent Officials and Higher Division Civilian Clerks. At the Admiralty, a species of dual control exists. The Board, the Chief Controller, is entirely dependent on its subordinates, without whom their Lordships can move neither hand nor foot. But the Junior Control, formed entirely of civilians, knows little or nothing, per se, of the Navy; yet it both rules and governs, while the Naval members of the Board are forced to sit like mutes, and obey the behests of their employés. For, in the framer of this remarkable report, with all its conclusions and recommendations, we have a gentleman who hardly knows the stem from the stern of a ship, has seldom been on board one, but who, nevertheless, takes upon himself to dictate to officers of the Navy in whose little fingers will be found more real knowledge of the service than could by any modern process be extracted from the whole brain and body of any civilian clerk. Nevertheless, these landsmen are supposed to be conversant with even the minutest detail connected with the Administration of the Navy. How does Mr. Swainson demonstrate that he has this knowledge? By informing the Board, in the very first lines of his report, that much is to be learnt from the facts brought to light by the Cambridge court-martial! There is, however, nothing new under the sun. Even old Mother Red Cap foretold the building of ironclads; and as to supposing there is anything new in the peculation of ships' stewards and messmen, why, the idea is simply absurd. If high officials are allowed to make money out of Government contracts, why not also their juniors, whatever may be their rank or grade in the service? If the Admiralty misapply the money voted to build 21,665 tons of ironclads; if the Admiralty screen contractors for a discount of 2½ per cent., and accept delivery of stores, meant for our seamen, against the report of the Board of Officers ordered to survey those stores; if the Admiralty sanction the adulteration of coal for political purposes; if the Admiralty divide amongst themselves the valuable plate and pictures belonging to Greenwich Hospital, and consequently to the Navy; and, if the Lords of the Admiralty are kept at the mercy of their Civil servants, how can the Navy be honestly and wisely administered? That the Admiralty is most unwisely administered, and that, as a result, a complete breakdown has occurred, is clearly proved by Mr. Swainson. The Navy may be likened to an old-established firm, and yet, after being in business for several centuries, it is suddenly discovered, and that quite by accident, in the years 1882-83, that in the important matter of the examination of the Paymasters' accounts of her Majesty's ships, as hitherto conducted in the Accountant-General's Department, it is impossible to detect such frauds as were perpetrated by the ship's steward of the Cambridge! And how long, may we ask, has this wonderful system of audit been in existence, which enables the Crown to be defrauded with impunity? Is no better system in vogue at the Treasury in regard to the money spent by the Admiralty? Surely, a stringent, a most stringent inquiry, by means of a Royal Commission, is now a matter of the most imperative necessity. For here we have corruption at the Admiralty, as well as in the Fleet, and both must be eradicated, before the Navy can be properly governed, and reforms introduced which will make all grades contented and happy. Parliament should at once take this matter in hand, for the Lords of the Admiralty are utterly incompetent to deal with the evil. They know it exists, but at every turn they are baffled in their search for a remedy by the self-interested crew who surround them; and in this manner gallant officers, who have not feared risking their lives in their country's cause, have now reason to feel alarmed lest they may lose their good name and fair fame from their mere connection with that Department to enter which has, during their whole lives, been the goal of their ambition. We do not intend to bring any charges against the Admiralty which we cannot substantiate. We have produced the Report of the Naval Pensions Committee, to prove that even the Board enters blindfold into engagements with a light heart, and without care for after-consequences or the pockets of the taxpayers. Thus, the additional liability incurred by the Crown when the Admiralty established the continuous-service system was never foreseen, or if foreseen, was carefully kept in the background, for, as the Committee state,—"It may be here remarked that the enormously increased liability for pension incurred by this measure does not appear to have been foreseen by the Committee recommending its adoption, since no estimate of its amount accompanied their report; the only reference to it being contained in a minute of Sir J. Graham, then First Lord, for a letter to the Treasury, in which he says, 'The increase on account of pensions will be remote, and not considerable.'" The Naval Pensions Committee were, therefore, forced to recommend that the Admiralty Circular of July 9, 1869, be rescinded, and the Order in Council of April 20, 1880, amended. These facts prove that the Admiralty really do not know what they are about. That the administration of the Navy is, in fact, made up of make-shifts; as it certainly appears, from the Report of Mr. Swainson, as if the Board, who are supposed to govern the Navy, were dependent on their clerks for the slightest information, and took no heed of anything going on in the service, beyond that which directly affects their own personal interests. Otherwise, why should it be necessary for the Assistant-Secretary to take upon himself to go through the documents of the Cambridge scandal, and make a special gratuitous report thereon, to "save their Lordships trouble"? We repeat, therefore, that the reports we have published clearly show a complete break-down in the administration of the Navy; and we maintain that this fact, coupled with the grave suspicion of incompetency forced upon the mind by the report we publish this week on the investigations of Mr. Martin and Mr. Laycock are reasons sufficient for the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into the origin and cause of, and to find a remedy for, the present mismanagement and maladministration of the Navy; and we sincerely hope that the House of Commons will, on Monday night, support Lord Henry Lennox in his demand for the appointment of a Royal Commission.

THE Naval Estimates will on Monday night occupy the attention of Parliament, and among the many points to be considered, we trust the case of the Warrant Officers of the Navy will not be overlooked. We adverted in a recent issue to a pamphlet in which the grievances of this very meritorious class of men were fairly and temperately set forth, and we feel sure that an impartial consideration by the Government of their claims will result in the concessions which the Warrant Officers petition for. The questions of pensions to widows and compassionate allowances to orphan children naturally hold a foremost place in the appeal, for in the treatment of their widows and orphans the Warrant Officers have a special cause for complaint. By some strange anomaly, their children are entirely deprived of any share of the country's solicitude. Every other rank in the Navy is entitled, in case of death in the country's service, to a certain amount of compassionate allowance for each child; but to the warrant officer this privilege is, for no earthly reason, denied, and a widower dying of disease, or by the hand of the enemy, has to leave his children destitute on the world. Even when the mother survives, she and her family actually receive less for their support than would be given to the widow and orphans of a petty officer. A Chief Gunner's wife, with a large family, perhaps, to support, receives but £30 a year, and nothing for her children, and yet the Chief Gunner is a commissioned officer. A petty officer's widow, under the same circumstances, would receive, with, say, six children, £37 4s. So that a man in the responsible position of a commissioned officer actually leaves his family worse provided for than men of inferior rank. This fact, so entirely at variance with the otherwise universal practice in the services, needs no further comment. In the pensions to widows, also, the Warrant Officers are at present very unfairly treated. It is a matter of common-sense that the older the recipient of a pension, the greater the boon bestowed. It is also only in accordance with common justice that the longer a man serves his country, the greater is his claim upon it, both for himself and those dependent on him. Yet, in spite of these considerations, the widow of a warrant officer of one year's service receives the same pension as though her husband had held his rank for twenty years. In the one case, she may be a hale and hearty woman, capable of maintaining the struggle for existence on her own account; in the other, she will, in all probability, be old and helpless, entirely dependent on a pittance insufficient for the common necessaries of life. It is only fair that in this matter the petition of the men should be acceded to, and that pensions to widows should be in proportion to their late husband's length of service. It is also urged by the petitioners that the Article No. 252 of the Queen's Regulations, avowedly inserted for their benefit, actually militates against them. The article provides for the promotion to Lieutenant's rank of Warrant Officers who may have distinguished themselves before the enemy. But this reward has never been accorded to any of the many deserving cases, whilst it is alleged that the existence of the possibility of promotion has been quoted as an argument against the granting of more real and tangible privileges. The Warrant Officers suggest its repeal, and we think with them that so shadowy a privilege, a dead-letter for seventy years, is just as well done away with, especially if its working is practically prejudicial to those whom it pretends to help. In the matter of pay, too, the same sort of anomaly exists. In every department both of military and civil life, the universal practice is that of increasing increments as service lengthens. But after serving for five years for an increase of 1s. 6d. a day, the warrant officer has to serve a second five for an advance of 1s., and a third five for 9d., when he reaches his maximum emolument of 8s. 3d. a day; and he may, if strong in constitution, continue for many years at this very inadequate rate of pay. It may be urged that he has the chance of promotion to the rank of chief, but this promotion can only be the happy lot of about five out of every hundred. Consequently, at a period in life when naturally the energies require more than previously the stimulous of prospective reward, whilst the tact and experience of many years render their possessor most valuable to the country, the warrant officer has to abandon all hope of advancement, and look forward to a dead-level of ill-requited duty. It is only a moderate request that the pay of the rank should commence at 6s. a day, with an increase of 1s. per diem for every five years up to twenty years' service, and the same amount for every succeeding three years up to twenty-six years' seniority. It is a common maxim also that reward should be proportionate to responsibility, yet neither in this, any more than in any other of the grievances for which redress is sought, is the warrant officer fairly treated. The store allowance in all classes of the ships of the Navy is the same—viz., 6d. a day—although the responsibility and risk of loss is infinitely greater in the large vessels than in the smaller ones; and, consequently, the extra work and danger of waste or loss in classes A and B, the armoured broadside and turret ships, is in no way recompensed. The Gunner, Boatswain, and Carpenter, to whom Warrant Officers' stores should be confided, ought, in common justice, to have their allowances apportioned to the class of ship, with, as the Warrant Officers suggest, a minimum of 6d. and a maximum of 2s. a day. The question of distinctive uniform may appear of no importance to the extremely utilitarian spirits of the present day; but those who know the soldier and the sailor well, are aware how much prized are the insignia of rank. For a stripe on the arm, a bit of bronze, a fragment of cheap enamel, men risk their lives in every war. To be distinguished among their fellows by some visible sign of their superiority, is very dear to Military and Naval hearts. Hence, the desire of the Warrant Officers to have their uniform enriched by a little distinction-lace should command the sympathy of all but the "Gradgrinds," who cannot soar above sordid fact, and nothing more. For this little favour, the Warrant Officers have petitioned at intervals for twenty years, and the further withholding of what will cost the country nothing, but will greatly increase the prestige and authority of the recipients among those under their command, will be an act of injustice and folly. The accordance of relative rank is another point to which the same remarks may well apply. It is an anomaly that Warrant Officers, ranking immediately after Sub-Lieutenants in the Navy, should have no defined position as to precedence or seniority when brought in contact with officers of the sister service. Surely it can harm no one that this state of things should be remedied, while it would go far to popularise and consolidate the position of the Warrant Officers, and thus encourage enlistment in the Navy. The question of retiring allowance, touching as it does the nation's pocket, is sure to provoke some opposition; but the cases brought forward by the petitioners show that, in justice, something ought to be done. A warrant officer, under existing Regulations, may be obliged to retire, through disease contracted on an unhealthy station, and after one-and-twenty years' service in the Navy, on £50 a year, while chief petty officers may, under similar circumstances receive a larger amount. It is the comparative injustice laboured under which is the strongest point in the case put forward by this very meritorious class. Apart from the reasonableness of their petition for a pension of £6 per annum for each year served as a warrant officer, and in the case of Chief Gunners, Boatswains, and Carpenters, £7 per annum, the superior rank of the warrant officer ought in every case to assure for him a higher rate of pension than that accorded under the same circumstances to his inferiors. The proposition that £60 should be the minimum and £200 the maximum pension is eminently moderate. When it is remembered that only the most deserving seamen, after long probation, can reach the position of a warrant officer, it will surely seem but fair, even to the least sentimental mind, that disablement in such a position should not mean absolute poverty, no matter how soon it may occur after promotion, whilst the man who has served his country for nearly half a century has a right to an old age of comfort and competence. Lastly comes the question of honorary rank and Naval pensions. This should present no difficulty, as the Chief Officers already hold commissions the same as do Lieutenants, and in the matter of the Greenwich Pension, we sincerely trust that the Warrant Officers will obtain an amelioration of their present position. As they point out, these rewards for good service are held by retired Lieutenants, each pension being worth £50 a year. Of the retired Warrant Officers, but one in fifty is in receipt of a Greenwich Pension—of £25 a year. We recommend this fact, which speaks for itself, to the consideration of the authorities, and hope that in a spirit of fairness and a desire to do justice, both this and the other points which we have commented on will receive their careful attention. It is the falsest possible economy to keep an important class, on whom to a very large degree the discipline and efficiency of the Navy of England depends, in a state of simmering discontent. The Admiralty has an opportunity of doing gracefully an act of justice, and of convincing the service that the welfare of every rank is of interest to it. We trust the opportunity will not be allowed to slip by, however great may be the pressure of perhaps apparently weightier matters. To improve and consolidate the highest position to which a young sailor can aspire, is to infuse into the junior ranks a spirit of emulation and competition for promotion, which is the greatest safeguard of discipline and good conduct.

Viscount Sidmouth's question as to whether it is the intention of the Admiralty to construct a vessel or vessels expressly for the purposes to which the Hecla has been converted; and whether, in the construction of vessels-of-war, the proposed draught of water, with reference to the depth of the Suez Canal, is an element of consideration, has been postponed till Monday.

The Channel Squadron arrived at Gibraltar on May 3. A correspondent, writing from St. Vincent on April 19, says:—"The mail arrived early this morning, and we leave this evening for Gibraltar, leaving a mail behind us. The steam-launches and pinnaces exercised at steam tactics on Tuesday, under the direction of the Flag-Captain. Yesterday, an officers' race was pulled. The Northumberland rowed in a six-oared whaler, the remainder in galleys. The Northumberland was first, Sultan second, and Minotaur third. This forenoon, the Squadron sent down lower and topsail yards, preparatory to steaming up against the trades. We are now unmooring."

We hear that over 1,000 men are being employed on the construction of the new dry dock at Sebastopol, which was taken in hand by the Russian Government early this year. The dock is being built on the site of the old one destroyed during the siege, and is intended to hold the largest man-of-war afloat. The undertaking will be finished by the end of the year, after which the long-projected task will be taken in hand of restoring Sebastopol to the position of the leading dockyard in the Black Sea.

The Admiralty have appointed Midshipman H.R.H. Prince George of Wales to the Canada.

The ships of the First Reserve have been ordered to their several dockyards, to refit, prior to assembling for the annual cruise of their Squadron, under Rear-Admiral Sir Anthony Hiley Hoskins.

The Novoe Vremya this week publishes a leading article urging the abolition of the Caspian Fleet. The fleet was founded in Peter the Great's time, when Persia was a powerful State, and maintained vessels of war in the Caspian. When, however, the Persians, by the Treaty of Turkmantchi in 1829, gave up all right to maintain vessels of war on the sea, all necessity for the retention of a powerful Naval force disappeared. Still, on account of the Turkoman pirates, no reduction was made; and although since the occupation of the mouth of the Atrek in 1870 these pests have also disappeared, no diminution of the Fleet has taken place. At present, all that is needed in the Caspian is a small police force to keep the fishermen and trading craft in order; and as it is extremely unlikely that any foreign power will ever penetrate close enough to the sea to place vessels of war upon it, the Novoe Vremya urges that it should be treated as an inland lake, and the Fleet entirely abolished. The Fleet at present consists of half a dozen steamers, capable of being armed if required, a few transports, and some cutters; the personnel comprises a full Admiral, 200 officers and officials, and about 2,000 men. The total cost of maintaining them last year was 687,000 roubles, or £68,700. Most of the steamers are so old and dilapidated that they are unfit for any serious active service, and the development of the petroleum trade in the Caspian has provided the region with plenty of powerful steamers for transport purposes, if military operations are resumed at any time beyond the Caspian. Hence there does not seem any particular reason for maintaining the Caspian Fleet any longer, and it is not at all unlikely that the suggestion of the Novoe Vremya will eventually be carried out.

The new plan of directing officers in the home ships to select mess-traps for ships about to be recommissioned abroad seems a somewhat clumsy one. If the newly-appointed officers cannot be got hold of—and it seems strange if they cannot—surely it could be made a rule that those abroad who, from their experience, would be the best judges, and some of whom would be sure to be going on with the new commission, should make out the demand and send it home in plenty of time. Naval officers are probably as ready to oblige one another as the ordinary run of mankind, but it is too much to expect that any officer casually ordered to choose some £100 worth of mess-traps for other people will take any interest in his task. Some curious incongruities in the articles supplied might result, from the hasty efforts of a careless or inexperienced officer to make up the amount. But why does not the Admiralty have a regular scale of mess-traps for each class of ship?

As the old Italian Royal yacht Esplonatope, which was launched at Blackwall in 1863, is beginning to show signs of decay, the Italian Government have laid down a new vessel, named the Savoia. This vessel is of the following dimensions:—Length, 252 ft. 6 in.; beam, 31 ft.; draft, 15 ft.; displacement, 1,705 tons. The Savoia will be constructed entirely of steel, and provided with powerful screw engines by Messrs. J. Penn and Sons. Though intended mainly for service as a Royal yacht, she will be armed with four 6-in. breechloaders and two Hotchkiss machine-guns, so that she may be utilised as a cruiser in time of war. It is expected that she will attain a very high rate of speed.

We understand that names are coming in fast for copies of the proposed new historical record of the Royal Marine Corps, and that there is, therefore, every prospect of the work being undertaken. About 300 subscribers are required to guarantee the cost of publication being met.

Messrs. Normand and Co., of Havre, have recently launched four vessels for the French Government, viz., the paddle avisos Ardent and Brandon, and the gunboats Lion and Scorpion. The dimensions of the former are:—Length, 164 ft.; beam, 24 ft. 6 in.; depth, 11 ft. 6 in.; draft, 6 ft. 8 in.; displacement, 486 tons; horse-power, 105 (440). They are built of wood, and carry an armament of three Hotchkiss machine-guns. The gunboats are of the following dimensions:—Length, 144 ft. 8 in.; beam, 24 ft.; depth in hold, 11 ft. 3 in.; displacement, 474 tons; draft, 9 ft. 8 in. The engines, of 440 indicated horse-power, were manufactured by the Government Works at Indret. The gunboats are built on the composite system, and carry two 5½-in. and two 4 in. guns. They were designed for a speed of 9½ knots.

Captain and Brevet Major Mathias, R.M.A., has been promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel, in recognition—tardy recognition, we should say—of his services during the bombardment of Alexandria, the promotion being dated back to July 11, 1882. The Admiralty having thus at last recognised the claims of an officer of the Royal Marine Forces, it is to be hoped that those of the senior Lieutenants of the Sultan and Inflexible to like advancement will no longer be forgotten.

The retention of the post of Secretary to the Admiralty, now that Mr. Hamilton has elected to remain in Ireland, will give general satisfaction throughout the Navy.

Mr. Draper, the well-known agent of the Royal Marines, closed his books on Thursday, May 3. The liabilities are estimated at £39,000, and the assets at £30,000. We fear that this failure—the largest since that of Messrs. Hallett and Ommaney—will prove disastrous to the families of many officers, and sincerely hope that this is not the precursor of failures of agents connected with the Navy, one misfortune often bringing others in its train.

The present system of starving the Navy is not, it seems, to be confined to the building and repairing of ships. It was stated, as the reason for the reduction some years back of men-of-war on foreign stations, that it was for the greater efficiency of the service, and that, instead, a Flying Squadron would be annually formed. Now, it would appear, we are to have no Flying Squadron.

The duties imposed upon the Navy in time of war in simply guarding our commerce are enormous, and far exceed the responsibilities of a similar nature imposed upon the Naval service of any other country. This will be readily understood after comparing the following approximate list of the merchant navies of the world:—Great Britain owns 22,500 merchant vessels; the United States, 6,850; Norway and Sweden, 6,408; Italy, 4,512; France, with a Navy equal to ours in strength, but 3,650; Germany, 3,400; Spain, 2,968; Greece, 2,036; Russia, 1,948; Holland, 1,368; Denmark, 1,320; and Austria, 730. England possesses 23 cruisers whose speed exceeds 14 knots, while France has 26 cruisers, of which seven exceed 14 knots, 11 steam nearly 16 knots, and eight average about 17 knots. It is surely not right for the Admiralty to allow the Navy to be thus severely handicapped!

During the whole of the four years that the Pegasus was in commission on the China station, prior to her being recently paid off and recommissioned, no shore water was allowed on board, except on one occasion, at Nagasaki, for washing purposes. The weather was extremely hot at the time, and some of this water was drunk by the men, with the result that a case of cholera supervened. Otherwise, not even a case of dysentery occurred on board, and the immunity of the crew from this disease appears to be solely due to the constant use of condensed water.

A derelict drifting at the mercy of the winds and waves exemplifies the present position of the Government. Or, perhaps, were we to say a weather-cock, slewing round with every shift of the wind of public opinion, we would be nearer the mark. It was the intention of the Government to grant Lords Alcester and Wolseley a pension of £2,000 a year each for two lives. The proposal has met with opposition from the Radical tail of the supporters of the Ministry, so Mr. Gladstone veers round, and is now going to propose that Parliament should vote a lump sum to each of these officers. There is no fear of the present Ministry "breaking," as it always "bends" to the storm, from whatever quarter it comes. Concession to popular fallacies, even to repealing Acts which have proved most beneficial, such as the C. D. Acts, and pandering to popular clamour, even when by so doing some of the most cherished institutions of Englishmen have to be abolished, such as the Oath of Allegiance, seem to be Mr. Gladstone's sole means of governing. So, at least, say the German newspapers, and they do not appear to be far wrong.

The first volume of "A History of the Russian General Staff" has made its appearance at St. Petersburg this week. The period dealt with extends from 1698 and 1825, and contains a mass of original historical matter derived from over 2,000 documents. The volume is rich in biographical details of the Generals of the reigns of Catherine, Paul, Alexander, and Nicholas, and is accepted by the Russian Press as the standard work on the subject. The author is Major-General Glinovtzski, of the General Staff.

Officers so well known as the late Principal Medical Officer at Netley, Surgeon-General J. L. Holloway, should not be relegated to the majority without a line of regret. A more genial companion, a more sparkling correspondent has seldom been found; a truer friend has never been known. As an amateur painter, he was far above par, and we believe that in the reorganisation of the Army Medical Department, his administrative abilities were fully recognised.

There are many officers who will hear with regret of the death of Mr. J. W. D'U. Freeth. Mr. Freeth was for many years Chief Clerk to the Military Secretary at the Horse Guards, and during his long connection with that department earned the good-will of everybody by his proverbial uprightness and integrity. He fell a victim some years ago to the mania for reform, his office being abolished, and he being retired, whilst yet there was any amount of work left in him. He passed away on Saturday last at his residence, Bedford Park, Croydon, at the age of 64, from pneumonia.

In consequence of the statement made by the present Secretary of State for War, in moving the Army Estimates in the early part of this Session, the officers of the Army Pay Department have day after day been anxiously expecting the issue of the new Warrant and other regulations, which are to remedy some of their grievances, and which the late War Minister promised to take into consideration in the autumn of last year. Both in the interest of the officers and in that of the service to which they belong, we strongly urge upon those responsible for the delay the advisability of an early response to the claims of these officers. There is a growing dissatisfaction amongst them, and a belief that they are not receiving proper support from those who are supposed to administer their department at Pall Mall. From the want of a representative to look after the interests of one of the most important branches of the public service, the officers find themselves sinking deeper and deeper into obscurity; their small allowances have been taken from them on the most shallow and unjustifiable pretexts, and knowing this, candidates will not come forward to recruit the strength of the Department, now thirty officers short of the full complement. The present Accountant-General has the reputation of being so eminently prompt and energetic, that we cannot believe the fault lies with him; there must be some obstructionist in the camp, whose measures are surrounded with a halo of secrecy and profound deliberation.

If the authorities insist upon the officers of the 63rd Regiment and 72nd Highlanders refunding the advance of war batta, given to them on their being ordered to the seat of war in Egypt, they will be guilty of a most shabby line of conduct. It is a fact that the pay and allowance of officers in India includes everything, and were the officers required to take the field in India, of course they would not be entitled to any extra grant. The case, however, is totally different in the present instance, as these two regiments were required to engage in hostilities many thousand miles away from India, and this necessitated the officers disposing of all their property at great sacrifice, upon being ordered to leave the country. Those who issued the extra batta to the officers of these two regiments ought to have known whether they were entitled to it or not. However, after the manner in which the deeds of our soldiers have been extolled, for their prowess in the land of the Pharaohs, it would come with but bad grace from the powers that be, if they make the officers refund. The country is lavish enough with regard to the two popular leaders in the late operations; let it, therefore, be generous to those who bore the heat and burden of the day.

On what principle does the India Office grant "Queen's India Cadetships?" It appears that many such are granted in a very hole-and-corner manner, where services and merit are virtually nil; but interest is triumphant. We are credibly informed that Indian cadetships are given under a recognised system of marks, under the following considerations:—1. Father's and family services. 2. Father dead, or killed in action. 3. Mother also dead. 4. Family circumstances. The above considerations are fair enough, if strictly and honestly adhered to. A distinguished Indian officer lately applied for a cadetship for his son, on the strength of his own and family services. He was told that his boy's chance was quite destroyed by others who were orphans, or whose fathers were killed in action. Now, we must bow humbly to this decision, if it is correct, but actual facts prove otherwise. We can name a dozen cases in which men have been given cadetships within the past three years, where both parents are alive, where the father never saw service of any kind, and others again where the father was never in the Indian Army at all. If the India Office can honestly boast of a mens conscia recti in the giving of such appointments, it would be interesting if a return was published giving the names of recipients of India cadetships granted during the past three years, with a statement showing the particular claims of each.

How comes it that Lieutenant-Colonel J. F. Murray, a retired officer, Government Secretary of the Royal Jersey Militia, is allowed year after year to perform the duties of senior Commissariat officer in Jersey? We are fully aware that our new military system is an anomalous one, but here is an anomaly which it would be almost impossible to justify or explain. If the Commissariat is so under-manned that it cannot provide officers to carry out the duties of the several stations, by all means let its establishment be increased; but it is really too absurd to allow an outsider to occupy the position which Colonel Murray does at Jersey, and we cannot think that the interests of the service are promoted by such an arrangement.

The author of "Prison Life" who appears to have been sentenced to eighteen months of compulsory retirement from the outer world, seems determined that society shall not forget his existence, else why advertise himself under such suggestive initials as "D—— S——, late —— Regiment?" It cannot surely be his intention to pose as a martyr to circumstances beyond his control. "Prison Life" has been so thoroughly brought to notice of the public by a far abler pen than that wielded by the ex-Captain, that there is but little more to be said about it. It is hoped that the author of the present brochure has returned to society a wiser, if not a sadder man.

The members of the Veterinary profession will be pleased to learn that, by resolution of the Senatus Academicus of the University of Glasgow, his native city, the degree of LL.D. was conferred on Mr. George Fleming, Army Veterinary Inspector, at the graduation ceremony there on April 27, in recognition of the services he has rendered to medical and veterinary science, and particularly to comparative pathology and sanitary science. We believe this is the first time that a University has acknowledged the claims of veterinary science to the highest honour the Senate can confer.

The Austrian autumn manœuvres this year are not to extend beyond divisional operations for infantry. The final manœuvres, towards the end of September, are to be carried on near those garrisons where two infantry divisions may be concentrated at one point. Two cavalry brigades are to assemble in the camp at Bruck from September 17 to September 28.

Our Aldershot correspondent has drawn attention to the want which exists at that station of a soldiers' institute, based on common-sense principles, &c., open to all denominations and uninfluenced by religious bigotry. He must be aware of the strenuous endeavours that were made to build an institution of this kind in the Camp some time ago, and how, from want of encouragement, the undertaking fell to the ground. The fact is that the Government should build secular soldiers' institutes in every large garrison town, and make them a gift to the Army. The money stopped from soldiers for fines for drunkenness might well go towards the expenses of these institutes, supplemented by monthly subscriptions from officers and soldiers and canteen funds. If the country wishes for a sober Army, let it do something towards giving the soldiers pleasant recreation in camp or barracks. In an article upon "Drunkenness in the Army," in the March number of the Army and Navy Magazine, the question of soldiers' clubs and institutes is fully entered upon by one who knows well what he is writing about. We commend the article in question to the notice of all those interested in the well-being of the rank and file of the Army.

The War Office has sanctioned the payment of a sum of money to the Roman Catholic Chaplain to the troops in the North Camp, Aldershot, to indemnify him for the loss he sustained in February last by the robbery of the communion plate from the church in which he officiates.

Marshal Bazaine is not satisfied with the way in which his book has been received. He anticipated better things from his explanations. However, he is so far of a forgiving character that he lays his sword at the feet of his country, in the following terms:—"The Venetian Republic, when on the point of succumbing to enemies who were already masters of its port, remembered that it could be saved by one of its countrymen, whom it had treated with cruel injustice. It made an appeal to his patriotism. He conquered, and lived gloriously. To conquer would satisfy me, for the only glory I am ambitious of obtaining is a death which should prove the patriotism of a soldier who has not won every grade at the point of the sword to end his career by treason. And if there be a nation which conceives me worthy of fighting and conquering, that nation is Germany." Napoleon I. made similar proposals to serve his country after Waterloo, but they were not accepted, and we see very little chance of the proposals of Bazaine being more favourably received, in spite of his hint that the Germans dread his return to France.

A correspondent writes:—"Field-Cornet Stephanus Roos, of Pretoria, was killed during some dynamite operations at Tappies, on the north-east of Mapochsstad, on the 27th, or early on the 28th, of February, by being shot in the forehead. Roos is supposed to have shot Sir G. Colley, at Amajuba, on Feb. 27, 1881. Extracts from Transvaal Advertiser, March 10, 1883:—'I wonder if there is any truth in the rumour which credits the late Stephanus Roos with the death of Gen. Colley. If so, it would be an extraordinary coincidence that two years after Amajuba Mr. Roos should be shot in the forehead, just where the late General was shot, on the same day of the month. I mention this because, in Pretoria, people who profess to know assert that Sir G. Colley was shot by Stephanus Roos.' The deceased was a brave, determined man, whose loss as a leader will be as severely felt as was that of the late commandant, Senekal."

It is reported that the Government of India has decided to take further action in the matter of cantonment law by appointing a committee to consider the question. This committee will, it is understood, consist of the Secretaries to Government in the Military, Home, and Legislative Departments, together with the Adjutant-General and Quartermaster-General as ex-officio members, and one stipendiary member. The officer chosen for the last-named post is Col. Moore, of the Bombay Army, who is known for much good work in connection with Cantonments in the Bombay Presidency, and is, therefore, peculiarly qualified for undertaking the present business. Col. Moore is at present on leave in England, but is expected to arrive in Simla next month, when the committee will be able to enter on its labours. It is expected to sit for about a year, and its report will then furnish the basis for any necessary legislation.

Cleeve, Royal Engineers, April 6 to April 27.

Surgeon-Major S. Flood, A.M.D., on return from leave, is posted for duty to the Citadel, Cairo.

Sir Archibald Alison has found Egyptian fever a more stubborn enemy than any he faced at Tel-el-Kebir. He had, as he thought, beaten the enemy, and was hastening to Cairo with all the celerity exhibited by Arabi, when he heard the first gun on September 13; but a second attack threw him back, and, after a gallant fight, he has had to adopt the unwelcome advice of his friends, and ask for leave. There is every hope that a very short stay in England may enable him to return and resume his command, provided that his numerous friends and admirers in England will abstain from feasting him, "not wisely, but too well." It should be remembered that Sir Archibald, having been the first General officer to arrive and almost the last to leave, having commanded in the first engagement of August 5, and led the charge of the Highland Brigade on September 13, has had his full share of labour and glory, and can hardly be considered entitled to share those greater and more arduous post-prandial triumphs which have been so generously and unselfishly accepted by his superiors. À propos of Sir Archibald, a correspondent in England asks me questions which, when the General goes home, he will perhaps be able to answer himself. They are as follows:—Was there any engagement at all on August 5? Was there any despatch written on the subject, and if so, was it ever published? As to the first question, I am able to say that I have a distinct recollection of having on the day named received a baptism of fire, with feelings which, I imagine, were very akin to those with which I received my baptism of water, though possibly less audibly expressed. As to the rest, I have reason to believe that the Egyptian Campaign is held to have commenced on the day that the Salamis entered Alexandria Harbour with the Commander-in-Chief on board, and that any officer who luckily escaped the fate of poor Howard Vyse was held to be merely going through a harmless parade on a temporary Mediterranean station. This is all the answer I can give, though possibly the whole series of questions is only akin to another, recently posed by a sceptical correspondent, as to whether the Condor was under fire, and if so, who was her captain? The inquirer says he thought he read something about it in the Times and the Graphic.

The question as to who is to succeed "our only diplomate" would hardly interest a service paper, were it not that among other random suggestions the name of Sir Evelyn Wood has been mentioned. I cannot say whether it is his success in managing Zulus which is deemed to give promise of success in treating with Cherif and his colleagues; but, at all events, less promising names have come on the tapis. I am afraid, though, that he would be too recklessly extravagant, in truth, for an Oriental diplomate.

(FROM ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.)

Before these lines reach England, Sir A. Alison will be away on leave. His daughters have already sailed in the Marœotis. Sir G. Graham also goes presently, the command of the Brigade devolving on Colonel Leith as senior officer, who gets nothing for it but trouble. Major-General Dormer leaves Cairo for Alexandria to confer with Sir A. Alison next week respecting the arrangements for the summer, and an examination of the barrack accommodation at the Citadel, Kasr-en-Nil, and Abbassiyeh has shown that there will be plenty of air, such as it is, and of cubic feet for the men. The opera season is about to close, and the foreign residents are preening their wings, or flying, or flown, away. Sir S. and Lady Baker and family are about to leave for Italy; Baker Pasha has taken up his quarters in a dahabeah on the river; Lord and Lady Charles Scott have left, on their way to Italy; and Lord de la Warr and Mr. Broadley have gone in a small yacht for Constantinople. Lord Dufferin and the members of the Embassy are to quit Alexandria Harbour in the Helicon on May 1, for Constantinople, en route for England; and Sir E. Malet is expected at Cairo on May 10, the work of the British Government in Egypt being superintended ad interim by Sir A. Colvin, who is to arrive on April 26, and by Mr. Cartwright. Major-General Sir F. Goldsmid, who is succeeded by Mr. Carmichael on resignation of his post at the head of the Daira, returns to London, to the regret of Cairo society, almost immediately. Colonel Synge, who has been ill from severe fever in the German Hospital at Alexandria, is reported somewhat better. Mr. Van den Nert, the Belgian Consul-General, just recovering from a sharp indisposition, will probably be obliged to resign. The German Consul-General, Herr Derenthal, has assumed charge of his office. There is a good deal of active work going on in diplomatic circles, if one is to guess at its existence from visiting and correspondence. Graham's Brigade have begun musketry practice at Abbassiyeh, and the artillery will follow suit next week. As there was some differences between the authorities with regard to the furnishing of guards,—Sir E. Wood's army not being quite ready, and Baker's gendarmerie, which hitherto gave them, not being intended for those duties,—it has been arranged that the Army of Occupation shall furnish a certain proportion of these "sentry-go" detachments. It has been decided also that the name of Baker's force is to be "Constabulary," not "Gendarmerie," which latter, it is supposed, indicated a greater similitude to a military body than is at all desirable. The British constable is like the British Constitution. It will not be easy to make the word "constabulary" do duty for "gendarmerie" in a country the official and civilised language of which is French.

H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief made his annual spring inspection of the Division on Tuesday, at short notice. A field-day for the Infantry Brigades had been already ordered by Sir D. Lysons for Tuesday, when, at a late hour on Monday, it was intimated by wire that his Royal Highness would see next day the whole of the troops composing the command. The Duke arrived by special train at 9.30 a.m., and was accompanied by the Quartermaster-General to the Forces, the Deputy-Adjutant-General Royal Artillery, the Director of Artillery and Stores, and other Horse Guards officials. They were received by Sir Daniel and the Head-quarters Staff of the Division, and at once conducted to the Queen's Parade, North Camp, where the three Infantry Brigades were drawn up in marching order, in line of columns of double companies, facing west. In rear, forming a second line, was the Army Hospital Corps, and still further in rear of the Division were paraded, by brigades, all recruits not fit for the ranks, in tunics and forage-caps, recruits not in regimentals being formed on the left of the other recruits of their regiments. After the usual inspection of the ranks, the Division formed up and marched past, in a manner which apparently gave the Duke much satisfaction. Particular mention may be made of the 84th. This splendid regiment, 839 strong, swept past with magnificent steadiness. The marching past of the 87th (the next strongest battalion on the ground, numbering 808 of all ranks), though good, was scarcely up to the usual form of this gallant corps. The other battalions, each a mere handful of men, acquitted themselves fairly. After the march-past, the Duke proceeded to inspect the new valise equipments issued for experimental purposes by the Equipment Committee. No field movements of any kind were attempted. His Royal Highness then proceeded to Eelmoor Plain, where the Cavalry Brigade—3rd and 15th Hussars—496 strong, under the command of Major-General Sir Frederick FitzWygram, Bart., were drawn up, the Royal Horse Artillery, Field Batteries, and Pontoon and Telegraph troops, Royal Engineers, forming a second line, in rear at half-intervals, facing east. Here, also, the inspection, march-past, and advance in line were soon over, and the troops back in quarters shortly after 2. His Royal Highness and party then proceeded to the new residence of the General commanding on the Farnborough Road, where they lunched, returning to town by the 3 p.m. train from Farnborough. Two officers and 50 men of the 7th Rifle Brigade (King's Own Royal Tower Hamlets Militia), from Dalston, arrived here yesterday (Friday), to draw camp equippage for the battalion, which will arrive on Monday, for the annual training, and will be encamped on North Cove Hill plateau, and attached to the 3rd Brigade. The 31st Regiment, on arrival from Gibraltar about the end of the month, will occupy the West Infantry Barracks, and be attached to the 2nd Brigade. The 2nd Batn. 18th Royal Irish, on arrival about the same time, will be quartered in the Centre Infantry Barracks, and also be attached to the 2nd Brigade. Major-General Willis's Brigade will then be up to its full strength (three battalions), which has not been the case for many months. Six officers and 120 rank and file of the Grenadier and Coldstream Guards arrived on Tuesday at the Camp for a course of musketry, and are quartered in the North Camp. The following officers have been examined in subjects (a) and (b), section 4, paragraph 28, Queen's Regulations, and have been found qualified:—Lieutenants Henry, 87th Royal Irish Fusiliers (for increase of pay of his rank); Harris, Sainsbury, and Kentish, 39th; Dawkins and Sitwell, 85th. The following detail proceeded on Tuesday to Hythe, for a course of instruction:—Captain Jackson, 3rd Hussars; Lieutenant Ussher and two serjeants, 26th Cameronians; Lieutenant Lascelles and three serjeants, 3rd Rifle Brigade; two serjeants, 39th; two serjeants, 85th; three serjeants, 84th. The Aldershot Divisional Polo Club has been established (Lieutenant Patton-Bethune, 3rd Hussars, honorary secretary). There will be games on the ground between the two Camps every Monday and Thursday afternoon. The Army Rifle Meeting, established, under the patronage of H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, K.G., to encourage and improve rifle-shooting in her Majesty's service, will this year be held at the Cæsar's Camp ranges, Aldershot, on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, July 26, 27, and 28. Major Burton, Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant-General for Musketry, is honorary secretary, as in former years, and the meeting will be open to the Army, Navy, Royal Marines, and Auxiliary Forces, with special matches for "all comers." The meeting was abandoned last year, owing to the withdrawal of nearly all the Regular Forces from the Camp. The programme will not be issued until the probable amount which will be at the disposal of the committee is known. In 1881, 272 prizes were offered for competition, the aggregate value of which amounted to about £557, for which there were 2,200 entries. The Officers' Club Gardens were opened for the season on the 1st inst. Bands play in the grounds three afternoons a week, and during the cricket and lawn-tennis matches. An excellent programme of cricketing events for the season has been arranged by the hon. secretary of the Divisional Cricket Club, Major P. H. S. Barrow, C.M.G. The first match on the list, the Division Eleven v. The Next Eighteen of the Division came off on the club grounds on Monday and Wednesday. Deputy-Surgeon-General J. Ekin, C.B., sanitary officer of the Division, has been ordered to Netley, for duty. Surgeon-General W. A. Mackinnon, C.B., visited the Camp on Wednesday, and inspected the classes of medical officers at present undergoing instruction in Army Hospital Corps drill. The Principal Medical Officer of the Division inspected, during the week, the recruits who joined the command last month, and at the same time inspected the hospitals and the men proposed for invaliding. At a marching-order parade of the Military Mounted Police, at head-quarters, on Wednesday, Colonel Clarke, C.B., A.A.G. of the Division, presented the men of the corps who served during the recent campaign with the bronze star, the medal having been previously presented by the General commanding. This corps, under the command of Provost-Marshal W. Silk, is composed of men specially selected for intelligence and smartness from the various Cavalry regiments at home. A finer body of men is seldom seen on parade. They perform their often unpleasant duties in a civil and temperate manner, are in all respects pattern soldiers; and, singularly enough, as policemen, are held in much esteem by all ranks. The strict discipline and true soldierly qualities which obtain in this corps are in no small degree attributable to the precept and example of their serjeant-major, McKeer, every inch a soldier, a veteran of many fights, who did good service in India during the dark days of the Mutiny, when medals were not so easily earned as they are now-a-days. Major Stevens, R.E., has been ordered to Harwich for duty. Lieutenant Farrer, 39th, has been ordered to join the Depôt at Dorchester, to relieve Lieutenant Elrington. The Valise Equipment Committee reassembled at the office of the Assistant-Quartermaster-General yesterday (Friday), at 10 a.m., and proceeded to inspect a number of non-commissioned officers and men from the Infantry regiments equipped in various ways with the old and new valise equipments.

The Western Morning News has the following:—"No wonder Lord Wolseley is so loudly applauded for managing details connected with a large army, when at home we invariably hear of breaksdown in the conduct of the smallest duties. Here is an instance of bungling—it can be called nothing else—which took place in the Western District on Thursday. Ammunition, about 160 rounds for a 64-pounder, was ordered to be taken from magazines to a certain place for embarkation and conveyance to an outlaying fort. The artillerymen duly executed the order, and the powder and shot were conveyed to the rendezvous appointed. When this had been done a message arrived that it must be taken back again, the steam launch could not be spared that day to go to Picklecombe. It would be interesting to know on what other duty the launch was employed."

The Civil and Military Gazette thinks that the decision against General Hardinge's proposal for dislocalising the Scinde Horse, and three Beloochee regiments is very much to be regretted. "The two regiments of Scinde Horse, though in no way a locally raised corps, are to be perpetually condemned to the effects of a Scinde climate; and one of them, at any rate, will be scattered about on police duties. On the other hand, the other Cavalry regiments of the Bombay Army are to be always kept down country; the Poona Horse will, for instance, be kept permanently in ease and comparative idleness at Sirur. It speaks badly for General Hardinge's chance of carrying out the reforms, which from his acknowledged ability he is thoroughly competent to initiate, when one of his first proposals, so desirable as it is in every way, is thus rejected, for such utterly inadequate reasons."

Col. Makins asked the Secretary of State for War on Thursday whether officers were included in the numbers of 6,256 deficiency in the Army, and 22,174 deficiency in the Militia, given by him on the 10th ult.; and what was the exact number of officers of all ranks now wanting to complete the establishment of the Army and Militia repectively (in the United Kingdom). The Marquis of Hartington was understood to say that the number of officers was 118 in the Army and 506 in the Militia, and of these 21 had since been appointed from among the rank and file.

The Morning Advertiser understands "that in the separate report made by Lord Morley's Committee on the Army Medical Department, a majority of the members strongly recommend the reappointment of one medical officer of standing to each regiment. At the same time, the evidence given before the Committee thoroughly exonerates both the administrative authorities at home, and the executive officers out in Egypt from any neglect. It will be remembered that some newspaper correspondents in Egypt made serious charges as to the condition of the hospitals and the treatment of the sick, during the first few days after the landing at Ismailia. The truth, however, is that everything that was possible was done at home to thoroughly furnish the field hospitals, and the Carthage was selected for her speed to convey medical necessaries of all kinds, the ship actually passing everything on the road, and reaching Alexandria before most of the troops. Owing, however, to the secrecy observed and the contradictory orders given at the time of the move to the Canal, the Carthage was lying in the harbour of Alexandria, and did not reach Ismailia until some days after the troops had disembarked and taken part in one or two engagements. The fault of the present system is clearly seen to lie in trusting entirely to field hospitals, and neglecting to provide medical officers who accompany regiments with the means of improvising even temporary attention for the sick and wounded."

A correspondent complains of what he calls the undue favouritism which is shown to the Highland regiments. "Why," he asks, "do they always get the best stations, viz., Glasgow, Edinburgh, Parkhurst, Portsmouth, Devonport, &c.? They only leave one chief town to go to another. Why do they not take a turn of service in Ireland? One Highland regiment in the south of England has been stationed there over two years; while regiments are now serving in Ireland which came from India direct, after being in that part of her Majesty's dominions for a period of 14 years. This is not the kind of treatment to induce a better class of men to join the Army. If the Highland dress is too good to spoil by service in Ireland, the sooner it is done away with the better. There is widespread discontent in other corps, because of the favouritism shown to Highland corps generally." There is no doubt but that our correspondent is expressing views which are held pretty generally throughout the Army, for it is a remarkable fact that of late years Highland regiments have enjoyed an immunity from service in any but the pleasantest of home stations.

Referring to the report that Gen. Hardinge's proposal to dislocalise the Sind Horse and Beloochee regiments has been overruled, the Civil and Military Gazette says:—"The only reason given—and it is anything but creditable to the authorities—is that there would be some expense in moving the regiments. The decision is very much to be regretted. The two regiments of Sind Horse, though in no way a locally-raised corps, are to be perpetually condemned to the effects of the Sind climate; and one of them, at any rate, will be scattered about on police duties. On the other hand, the other cavalry regiments of the Bombay Army are to be always kept down country; the Poona Horse will, for instance, be kept permanently in ease and comparative idleness at Siroor. It speaks badly for Gen. Hardinge's chance of carrying out the reforms which, from his acknowledged ability, he is thoroughly competent to initiate, when one of his first proposals, so desirable as it is in every way, is thus rejected for such utterly inadequate reasons."

The Army.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue). Lieut.-Col. Burnaby still continues to improve satisfactorily. The lung affection has subsided, but, owing to the weakness of the heart, the Colonel is obliged to remain in a recumbent position. It is hoped that in a fortnight's time he will be able to be removed out of town for change of air, but a consultation will take place between his medical men before deciding on such a course.

5th Dragoon Guards. Major Truman completes his five years' service as adjt. of the Warwickshire Yeomanry, on the 9th inst.

6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers). Lieut.-Col. Blake met with an ugly accident whilst playing polo in India, but by latest advices he had regained consciousness, and was going on well.

7th Hussars. Major J. Cook, half-pay, has been appointed paymaster, and ordered to proceed to Colchester by the 10th inst. to assume his duty.

10th Hussars. Truth says :—"Her Majesty has appointed Capt. Loftus, formerly of the regiment, to be Keeper of the Crown Jewels. Capt. Loftus is, no doubt, indebted to his relative Lady Ely for this piece of goodfortune. There were nearly one hundred applicants, including several very distinguished officers, who had real claims on the gratitude of the Crown, and it is a pity that one of them could not have been selected." Major Wood is en route from India in the Euphrates. Lieut. Hon. G. L. Bryan has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on private affairs.

12th Lancers. Lieut.-Col. Russell has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on private affairs.

13th Hussars. Col. Sir Baker Russell, K.C.B., K.C.M.G., and Lieut. MacLaren have been granted leave from India to England for six months, on private affairs.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Major Anderson's term as Brigade-Major to the Inspector-General, Royal Artillery, in India, expires on the 18th inst. His successor will probably be Major H. T. Lugard, who is at present stationed at Lucknow.

Lieut.-Col. A. Nairne, C.B., R.H.A., will command the Artillery Practice Camp at Okehampton during the coming season, and Lieut.-Col. Cumberland will command the camp at Hay. The following is the detail of batteries to practice at Hay:—1st detachment (B-B, and C-B, R.H.A., from Woolwich), under command of Lieut.-Col. A. K. Rideout, R.H.A., to arrive June 1; 2nd detachment (Q-4, R.A., from Sheffield, B-3, R.A., from Weedon), under command of Lieut.-Col. Sandilands, R.A., to arrive June 22; 3rd detachment (D-3 and E-3, R.A., from Ipswich, and Q-4, R.A., from Colchester), under command of Lieut.-Col. H. Percival, R.A., to arrive July 13.

M Baty. A Brig., R.H.A. (Lieut.-Col. Curzon), from St. John's Wood Barracks, embarked at Portsmouth on Tuesday, en route to Dublin.

Col. C. J. Tyler has been appointed a colonel on the Staff, to command the Artillery in the Northern District.

The Times says :—"Lieut.-Gen. the Hon. E. T. Gage, C.B., who recently vacated the command of the Woolwich District, will be awarded the Distinguished-service Reward which has been placed at the disposal of the Secretary of State for War by the death of Major-Gen. W. Barry, C.B., R.A., on the 19th ult."

The Simla correspondent of the Bombay Gazette writing on April 7 says :—"I hear on good authority that a decision has been arrived at with regard to colonels and lieutenant-colonels of the old Indian lists of Artillery. Officers of these ranks on the Royal lists are now, after five years' command, placed on the unemployed half-pay list, their brethren on the Indian lists continuing to hold their commands. The India Office has now expressed its willingness to accept the formation of an unemployed full-pay list for colonels and lieutenant-colonels of the Indian lists, after their five years of command expires, and in fact to consent to any arrangement not necessitating extra expenditure, or infringing the provision of the Henley clause. This, which is considered to be a just and very necessary proposition, will shortly become law. It will place the different lists on a more equal footing as regards commands."

Major J. R. Cooke is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Serapis, and Capt. C. Mayne and Lieut. E. J. H. Phipps in H.M.S. Euphrates.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Orders have been received at the School of Military Engineering, Chatham, directing a detachment of non-commissioned officers and men, who have completed their course of instruction, to be selected and held in readiness to proceed to Natal, where they are to be employed in making a trigonometrical survey of that colony. Lieut. H. D. Laffan embarks in charge of the party, who will be absent from England for a considerable time.

Capts. W. H. White and F. B. G. D'Aguilar are en route from India in H.M.S. Serapis, and Capt. H. Pilkington and Lieuts. W. H. Goldney and G. E. Shute in H.M.S. Euphrates.

2nd Queen's (Royal West Surrey Regiment). Lieut. Pain, 2nd Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Serapis.

4th King's Own Royal Lancaster Regiment. Col. Eccles, who recently vacated command of the 1st Batn., has been appointed to succeed Col. W. Armstrong in the command of the 101st Regimental District at Tralee. Lieut. and Adjt. Matthews, 2nd Batn., is en route from India in H.M.S. Euphrates.

12th Suffolk Regiment. Lieut. Medley, a probationer, officiating squadron-officer 3rd Bengal Cavalry, is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., from March 10, 1882.

13th Somersetshire Light Infantry. Col. Gilbert, C.B., having completed five years' service in command of the 2nd Batn., is to be placed upon half-pay from the 1st inst.

14th West Yorkshire Regiment. Col. Warren, C.B., is en route from India in H.M.S. Serapis, on vacating command of the 2nd Batn. Lieut. Lester is also a passenger in the Serapis.

17th Leicestershire Regiment. Lieut. and Adjt. Scott, 2nd Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates.

18th Royal Irish Regiment. Col. MacGregor completes five years' service in command of the 1st Batn. on the 22nd inst., when he will be placed upon half-pay. Lieut. Moore, a probationer, officiating wing-officer Mhairwarra Battalion, is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., from June 2, 1880. On arrival home from Malta at the end of the month, the 2nd Batn. will take over the Centre Block, Infantry Barracks, Aldershot.

20th Lancashire Fusiliers. Col. Edridge, 1st Batn., completes five years' service in command of the 1st Batn. on Friday next, when he will be placed on half-pay.

23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers. Lieuts. Lyle and Bright-Smith, 1st Batn., are on passage home from India in the Euphrates.

29th Worcestershire Regiment. Lieut. and Adjt. Hilton and Lieut. Hardisty are en route from India in the Serapis.

44th Essex Regiment will be moved to Aden about the end of the present year, to relieve the 65th Foot, proceeding to England. Lieuts. Watson and Brabazon are on passage home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates.

47th Loyal North Lancashire Regiment. Lieut. O'Brien is en route from India in H.M.S. Euphrates.

ROYAL MARINES.

Major W. W. Allnutt, R.M.L.I., has been promoted to the rank of lieut.-col. by brevet from April 23, 1883, under the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council, March 19, 1883.

The following promotion, dated April 14, 1883, has taken place in the Royal Marine Light Infantry, viz., Capt. Edwin Poole to be major at the Portsmouth Division, vice Broughton, promoted.

Major W. G. Armstrong, R.M.L.I., has been appointed gunnery-instructor at the Plymouth Division (dated April 14, 1883), vice Major J. J. Morris, who succeeds to the higher pay of his rank.

Lieut. A. G. Cochran, R.M.L.I., has embarked in H.M.S. Cambridge, to replace Major Armstrong, who has disembarked on appointment as gunnery-instructor at the Plymouth Division.

Col. 2nd Commandant Geoffrey Mairis, R.M.L.I., of the Royal Marine Depôt, Walmer, has been granted one month's leave of absence.

Lieut.-Col. A. H. H. Walsh, R.M.L.I., will command the Royal Marine Depôt, Walmer, during the absence on leave of Col. Mairis.

Major J. I. Morris, R.M.L.I., has been granted leave of absence until July 1 next, with permission to visit the Continent, and Lieut.-Col. J. D. Broughton one month's leave of absence in extension.

Qrmr. E. A. Syms has been granted one month's leave of absence on appointment.

51st King's Own Light Infantry. The Simla correspondent of the Bombay Gazette telegraphs on April 10 :—"Lieut. Fraser has been found guilty on several serious charges by a general court-martial at Bareilly, and sentenced to be cashiered and to imprisonment for one year. The sentence was confirmed to-day. The charges were : —Firstly, fraudulently misapplying public and regimental money when charged with the care of the same ; secondly, behaving in a scandalous manner unbecoming an officer and a gentleman ; and thirdly, deserting her Majesty's service."

52nd Oxfordshire Light Infantry. Lieut. Mansel is en route from India in H.M.S. Serapis.

59th East Lancashire Regiment. We take the following from the 5 and 9 Lilywhites' Gazette, published by the regiment at Chatham on the 1st inst. :—"We publish elsewhere a piece of news which, we are sure, will be hailed with the greatest pleasure and satisfaction throughout the battalion, viz., the early expected return to the corps of what we believe to be the Peninsular colours of the regiment, those, in fact, that have been carried through those brilliant and memorable scenes which have added lustre to British fame, and made a name for the old corps such as we have only to maintain, and which can scarcely be made more glorious. We allude more particularly to Vittoria, where our losses were eight officers (one killed, one died of wounds, two mortally wounded), 160 non-commissioned officers killed and wounded ; and to St. Sebastian, where the regiment lost 20 officers (eight killed and two died of wounds), 12 serjeants, 338 rank and file killed and wounded. On the latter occasion, Major-Gen. Robinson commanding the brigade, speaks in his report of the intrepidity of the regiment, and that it rushed forward cheering and fought muzzle to muzzle with the enemy for three hours, and afterwards at the siege of Bayonne that Major-Gen. Robinson reports the 59th out-did their exploits at Vittoria and St. Sebastian, not only in his opinion, but in that of Lord Wellington and Sir John Hope, who were spectators of the way in which the 59th who led the brigade, and with a shout charged and drove the enemy, not only entirely through the village of Anglet, but even to the batteries that protected the front lines of Bayonne. Capt. Fuller, of the Grenadiers, was brought specially to notice at St. Sebastian, he having commanded the regiment for a considerable time during the heat of the action. We presume this is the Col. Fuller to whose niece we are indebted for the return of these honoured trophies. . . . . . The following incident will show the strong esprit de corps which existed in the old 59th Regt., and we feel sure that this feeling is not extinct in the 2nd Batn. East Lancashire: Alexander Knight, 14, Cornhill, a tailor, formerly a serjeant in the Light Company 59th Regt., and severely wounded at the storming of St. Sebastian, having heard that Major Carmichael had lost all his money by the failure of Mackintosh's house at Calcutta, immediately found out his address, and wrote to Paris, requesting the major would not relinquish his continental tour for want of funds, but would draw upon him for £400, Major Carmichael being the only surviving officer of the company to which Mr. Knight had served with the 59th Regt. At the storming of St. Sebastian the Light Company of the 2nd Batn. 59th volunteered to form the forlorn hope for the whole brigade, but such a sacrifice the General would not allow."

62nd Wiltshire Regiment. Lieut. Justice, a probationer, wing-officer 13th Bengal N.I., is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., from June 16, 1880.

65th York and Lancaster Regiment. Major Lee completes his five years' service as adjt. of the 23rd Middlesex R.V.C., on the 11th inst.

70th East Surrey Regiment. Lieut. Bolton has been granted leave from India to England for 15 months, on private affairs.

78th Seaforth Highlanders. Col. Warren and Lieut Lund are on passage home from India. Lieut. Macintyre, a probationer, officiating wing-officer 2nd Goorkhas, is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., from Jan. 1, 1882.

81st Loyal North Lancashire Regiment. Lieut. Cracroft, a probationer, wing-officer 11th Bengal N.I., is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., from March 13, 1882.

91st Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. We regret to notice the following in the Western Morning News :—"The 50 men of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, who were landed at Plymouth last Monday evening from the Cape, were sent to Portsmouth on Friday night in the Irish boat from Millbay. It is no libel to say that Plymouth can well afford to be rid of them. Their behaviour was disgraceful during the few days they were in the town. Drunkenness has been accompanied by the coarsest conduct in broad daylight. Had the misbehaviour been indulged in in the most frequented thoroughfares, the excellent garrison police arrangements would have very soon curbed it. Another detachment of the same corps is due at Plymouth ten days' hence per the Drummond Castle. It is to be hoped that their conduct will be less deplorable while they remain in the Plymouth garrison."

Rifle Brigade. Qrmr. Hone, 4th Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Serapis.

Commissariat and Transport Staff. The companies at Woolwich paraded under the command of Assist.-Comy.-Gen. Parkyss, in marching order, on Thursday morning, and were inspected by Major-Gen. Smyth, R.A., upon Woolwich Common, and after marching past in columns of companies, ranked past, the inspecting officer expressing himself much pleased with the appearance of the corps. The Royal Artillery mounted band attended the parade.

Pay Department. The fourth annual dinner of the Army Pay Department will be held at the Freemasons' Tavern on Saturday, the 26th inst. Capt. R. Wilson, paymaster of the 1st Batn. 9th Norfolk Regt., has been ordered to York for duty in the District Pay Office, vice Capt. H. W. Bateman, who will proceed to Dorchester to take over financial charge of the 39th Regimental District. Sir A. Hayter, in reply to Mr. Muntz, said on Thursday that certain proposed changes in the conditions of service in the Army Pay Department had been approved by the Secretary of State for War, and a Royal Warrant would be issued as soon as they were approved of by the Treasury.

Medical Department. Brig.-Surg. E. H. Roberts and Surg.-Major G. W. McNalty have been appointed hon. surgeons to the Viceroy of India. The following officers are on passage home in H.M.S. Euphrates and Serapis, viz. :—Brig.-Surg. R. W. Carter, Surgs.-Major W. Gardener, W. G. Ross, F. Johnson, E. C. Mackey, D. C. G. Burns, and Surgs. J. L. Peyton, R. O. Cusack, H. K. Allport, and T. Cox. Lord E. Cecil asked the Secretary of State for War the other evening when the report of the Committee on the Army Medical and Transport Services would be laid upon the table of the House. The Marquis of Hartington said the Committee had nothing to do with the Transport service, but only with the Medical service. The report of the Committee would be in his hands in a day or two, and there would be no delay in laying it upon the table.

Veterinary Department. Vet.-Surgs. F. W. Going and A. C. Webb are on passage home from India in H.M.S. Serapis.

MILITIA.

BEDFORDSHIRE REGIMENT. The Duchess of Bedford will present new colours to the 3rd Batn. at Shorncliffe on June 12. The old Bedfordshire Militia was originally raised in 1796 by the Marquis of Tavistock, and its colours have been always presented by the Duchess of Bedford. If any further proof was wanting of the failure of the new system of recruiting, and of the unpopularity of the drilling of Militia recruits at the depôt on enlistment, this battalion can furnish it. For the last twenty years the average number of men "wanting to complete" at the annual training has been 36, this year it will be nearly 200.

The under-mentioned regiments are ordered to assemble for their annual training on Monday:—3rd Brig., Cinque Ports Division (Royal Sussex Artillery), at Eastbourne; 2nd Brig., Southern Division (Hants Artillery), at Gosport; 3rd Brig., do. (Isle of Wight Artillery), at Carisbrook Castle; 2nd Brig., Western Division (Cornwall and Devon Miners), at Pendennis Castle; 3rd Brig., do. (Devon Artillery), at Devonport; Anglesey Engineers, at Beaumaris; 3rd, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, at Stirling; 3rd, Bedfordshire Regt., at Shorncliffe; 3rd, Berkshire Regt., at Reading, in camp; 4th, Cheshire Regt., at Macclesfield; 3rd Devonshire Regt., at Plymouth; 3rd, Hampshire Regt., at Winchester; 5th, King's Royal Rifle Corps, at Huntingdon; 6th ditto, at Rhyl, in camp; 3rd Leicestershire Regt., at Whittington Heath, in camp; 3rd, Lincolnshire Regt., at Lincoln; 3rd, Norfolk Regt., at Norwich; 7th, Rifle Brigade, at Aldershot, in camp; 3rd, Shropshire Regt., at Shrewsbury; 4th, Suffolk Regt., at Ely; 4th, Royal Welsh Fusiliers, at Carnarvon; 4th, Connaught Rangers, at Boyle; 8th, Rifle Brigade, at Carrick-on-Shannon; 3rd, Leinster Regt., at Birr; and 9th, King's Royal Rifle Corps, at Buttevant.

Three regiments, the 3rd Cheshire, 3rd Essex, and 3rd Seaforth Highlanders, completed their training, the two former on the 28th ult., and the latter on Wednesday, so that, including those to assemble on Monday, the number out by that date in the United Kingdom will be 76.

The following corps of Irish Militia will assemble on Thursday:—6th, Rifle Brigade, at Longford; 9th, do., Mullingar; and 3rd, Munster Fusiliers, at Fermoy.

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

LANARKSHIRE. The Queen's Own Royal Glasgow are ordered to assemble at Glasgow on June 20, and proceed to Hamilton for ten days' permanent duty.

VOLUNTEERS.

23RD MIDDLESEX (LONDON AND WESTMINSTER) RIFLES. Gen. Lord Wolseley, G.C.B., has accepted the hon. colonelcy, rendered vacant by the lamented death of Sir Charles Russell, V.C.

The preliminary prize list of the forthcoming meeting of the National Rifle Association at Wimbledon has just been issued, and exhibits several important alterations. The Snider Wimbledon Cup becomes the Martini-Henry Wimbledon Cup, and the Chancellor's Challenge Plate (Oxford and Cambridge match) and the Rajah of Kolapore's Cup will both be shot for with the Martini. The Olympic is also transferred. The addition to the munificent gift of Mr. Mullens for the encouragement of field firing has enabled the Council to add another £100 to the competition, the total of £250 being now divided into seven prizes. The new competitions are a match for teams of Yeomanry, the "Bodine," standing at 200 yards, and the "Molineax," 500 yards, both with military breechloaders; the Grand Aggregate is increased to £300, 70 prizes being given instead of 50; the sporting rifle prizes (Gye and Moncrieff), and another for the best scores made in the first part of the First Stage of the Queen's disappear from the list, but with respect to the latter, it is notified that the same amount will be given by the Association, to be called the "Tyro." In the "Albert" there is a reduction of £100, the present amount being £275; the 800 yards is omitted in the contest for the Bass Prizes; and the United Hospitals Challenge Cup will be shot for at 500 yards, 15 rounds.

In accordance with annual custom, the spring muster and march-out of the City Volunteer Corps will be held this afternoon. The parade will be at Finsbury Circus at 5 o'clock.

Two other brigade drills are fixed for this evening, one in Regent's Park and the other at Wimbledon. At the former place, Col. Kent, commanding the Hounslow District, will have the West Middlesex and Harrow Corps out; and at the latter the brigade will be constituted as follows:—South Middlesex Rifles, London Scottish, 10th Middlesex, and Inns of Court. The line will be formed in each case at 6 p.m.

Nearly 40,000 out of the 70,000 Volunteers in the Northern District, Major-Gen. Cameron in command, are to go under canvas this season.

"One of the Compulsorily Retired" writes:—"I have lately been removed from the command of my Volunteer battalion because I am 60 years of age; yet I find, on reference to the Army List, that Lord Ranelagh, who is over 70 years of age, and the Hon. C. H. Lindsay, who is 67, are allowed to retain the command of the South Middlesex and St. George's Rifles. Why, I should like to know, are these two officers so exceptionally favoured? Because they are the fathers of the Force? I am a father, too. I took command of a regiment in the earlier years of the Force, and was one of those who advocated progress—that progress which Lord Ranelagh and Col. Lindsay resisted. I spent £12,000 on my regiment during the time I was in command of it. I was at work incessantly, and the condition of my regiment at the time I vacated the command is sufficient proof that I did my utmost. Yet what has been my reward? I am retired at 60, and two men who have spent little or nothing on their regiments, and have systematically opposed all change, are put forward as 'champions,' decorated, and allowed to hold on to their commands. I do not wish to be misunderstood. I have nothing to say personally against Lord Ranelagh and Col. Lindsay. In their private capacity I respect them very much indeed; but as Volunteers, their labours have, I consider, been in a large measure misdirected. However, be this as it may, the fact remains that certain officers have been removed under an age clause, whilst others have not. This, I contend, is unfair. The time has arrived for the Volunteers to be treated as soldiers. In the Army a hard-and-fast line is drawn. Then, let the same system be observed in the Volunteers. I dislike favouritism in any form. My name will, I hope, be sufficient guarantee that I do not write this letter in any carping spirit, but simply in the interests of the service with which for the last 22 years I have been connected, and in which I am, I believe, as well known as the two officers to whom I refer."

It has been decided by the War Office not to proceed further in the formation of mounted riflemen in connection with Volunteer Corps, but to await the result of the experiment in the case of regiments of the kind already in existence.

A District Order issued from the Horse Guards, Whitehall, states that the following Volunteer Corps in the Home District are authorised to form regimental camps at the place mentioned below, on the understanding that the numbers of all ranks are not to exceed those entered opposite each regiment:—

Corps.	Numbers.	Encampment.
3rd Middlesex Artillery	420	Sheerness Barracks.
7th Middlesex Rifles	262	Wimbledon.
14th ,, ,,	130	Richmond Deer Park.
17th ,, ,,	525	Ealing.
1st Oxford ,,	145	Headington Hill.
1st Bucks ,,	716	Bucks.
1st Surrey ,,	83	Guildford.
12th Middlesex ,,	250	Old Deer Park.
25th ,, ,,	53	Old Deer Park.
1st London Engineers	155	Hendon.

Camp equipage according to the authorised scale will be issued for the actual numbers in camp, on the clear understanding that this boon will give no claim whatever to the issue of camp allowance in excess of the numbers stated. At the conclusion of the various regimental camps, a return is to be forwarded to the Home District Office, showing the actual number of men who attended the camp and giving other details.

A general meeting of the Committee of the Egyptian War Fund was held at the offices, Carteret Street, Queen Anne's Gate, on Thursday. Gen. Sir R. C. H. Taylor, Governor of the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, presided, in the absence of Lord Wemyss. A detailed account of the expenditure was given, and it was shown that, besides giving assistance to the widows, mothers, sisters, and children of deceased soldiers, wounded men have been assisted into the Corps of Commissionaires, and with other means of obtaining a livelihood. Col. Snell moved the adoption of the report. Col. Geary, R.A., asked if it was proposed to hand over the balance to the Patriotic Fund. The chairman said he understood that it was proposed by the Government to take up the question of amalgamating all the patriotic funds. The trustees of this fund would be ready to fall in with the scheme, should it be matured. The Mayor of Windsor expressed the hope that the fund would not be handed over to the administrators of the Patriotic Fund, for he thought the public were not satisfied with the manner in which that fund was administered. Mr. F. Cox, the hon. treasurer, stated that steps were being taken to consolidate all the funds, but that it would be premature to take steps at present to close the fund. The report was unanimously adopted, as was another nominating Lord Wemyss and other noblemen as trustees of the fund.

As it not unfrequently happens that soldiers are confined in the guard-room who might with propriety be permitted to remain in their barrack-rooms pending the disposal of their cases, the Commander-in-Chief has decided that the question of whether a soldier shall be confined or not shall depend upon—"Whether the interest of discipline demands his separation from his comrades, i.e., when he is drunk, disorderly, insubordinate, or has committed a serious offence, such as an act of disgraceful conduct; and whether for safe custody he requires to be placed under charge of the guard." Generally speaking, if neither of these conditions applies, the offender may safely be simply confined to barracks pending disposal. Commanding officers must use their own judgment in issuing such detailed instructions as may be applicable to the circumstances of the corps, it being the duty of a general officer to see that the orders given are in accordance with established principles.

"J. L. S." writes:—"I have noticed that, in your issue of April 14, you comment very properly on the want of respect to her Majesty's service shown by the Secretary of State for War, when on a recent occasion distributing medals to troops at Shorncliffe. But is it in accordance with the constitution of the Army that the Member of Parliament whom the convenience of the political party for the time in power submits to the Sovereign as her adviser on military matters, should also be one of the channels through which honour, of which her Majesty is the fountain, should be conferred on officers or soldiers? If such a duty as distributing decorations were reserved, in cases when it may be inconvenient for her Majesty to perform the pleasing task, as the privilege of members of the Royal Family or of the military officers to whom the troops look up as their chiefs, there would be no need for a politician to have to study military etiquette, in addition to the many novel subjects he has to learn when differences within a Cabinet or the pressure of outside caucuses induce a Premier to put a square man into a round hole."

THE SERJEANT-INSTRUCTORS OF MUSKETRY.

SIR,—I trust, for the sake of the unfortunate adjutants of regiments, that you will continue strenuously to advocate the reappointment of serjeant-instructors of musketry, which rank has been abolished by G.O. 51, of March 29. The adjutant has now in addition to his duties that of conducting all the correspondence on musketry subjects, the compilation of the monthly diary and annual return and the checking of registers, he is in charge of all the musketry plant of the battalion, and is required to see that the range is kept in proper order, and to exercise supervision over the permanent rangemen. Does it not stand to reason that he will require to be assisted by some subordinate, whose duty it will be to attend solely to these matters, and to assist him, the adjutant, in the preparation of the returns, for it is impossible that this should fall to the orderly-room clerk, who, in these days of short service, frequent courts-martial, transfers, and desertions, has his time fully occupied. A non-commissioned will have to be, therefore, told off for this duty, and I would ask whether it would not be better to have a man specially instructed, like the serjeant-instructor of musketry, than one whose only qualification is probably a company certificate?—I am, &c.,

CANADA AND THE MOTHER-COUNTRY.

SIR,—As a constant reader of the Army and Navy Gazette, I was gratified to note in its issue of Jan. 27, a paragraph referring to a proposition offered by the Canadian Military authorities, relative to augmenting the strength of the Imperial Forces (as occasion might require) by a Canadian contingent of 10,000 men. I was also pleased to see that the project in question was so favourably received and commented upon by the leading military organ, whose comments thereon have been most favourably received, and are duly appreciated in Canadian military circles. Regarding the allusion to the 100th Regt. (late Royal Canadians), and your admirable suggestion to restore its former title, I may say that since July 1, 1881, when, by virtue of the new Territorial Scheme, it was legislated out of existence (as a Canadian regiment), it has been a matter of comment and regret in Canada that no effort was made to retain to that corps its original title of a Canadian regiment. Looking back a period of some twenty-five years ago, the writer recollects very well the circumstances connected with its formation, and with what zeal and enthusiasm its first commanding officer and his staff entered upon their task of adding a Canadian regiment to the roll of the British Army. A leading spirit upon that occasion, whose dash and skill as a soldier were acknowledged throughout the service (the late Col. A. R. Dunn, V.C.), has long since passed away; but Col. De Rottenburg, its first commanding officer, still survives, and from whose quarters at Windsor (as a military knight thereof) there doubtless exists, in that gallant officer's declining years, a regret that the corps raised by him in his Canadian home of many years should be obliged to change its "maple leaf" for the (in no way appropriate) badge of the "shamrock." Surely, in their mania for reform, the authorities could have found some method by which the one Canadian regiment could have been retained to the service, and whose strength, if required, could be augmented by the addition of one, two, or three additional battalions from Canada. The gallant commander of the recent expedition, having passed some years of his Staff service in Canada, has in his correspondence with Canadians been wont to express his strong sympathies with the Dominion, its people, and military resources. Also, in his admirable work the "Soldier's Handbook," his lordship speaks of the splendid Militia of Canada, &c. Now, it would be an interesting subject for reflection as to how far his lordship's sympathy for Canada is sincere, particularly when considering the fact that to England's only General (?) can the Dominion mainly attribute the action which has reflected upon her honour, and has written off the Army List her contribution of the Mutiny days of 1857-58.—I am, &c.,

Ottawa, Feb. 20. A CANADIAN MILITIAMAN.

The Egyptian Gazette of April 23 says:—"We regret to learn that the medical advisers of Lieut.-Gen. Sir Archibald Alison, Bart., K.C.B., commanding the Army of Occupation in Egypt, have decided that the gallant General must return home on a short spell of sick-leave. Sir Archibald Alison has not been able to completely shake off the effects of the malignant fever from which he has been suffering; and, in order to restore complete restoration to health, a thorough rest and change of air has been deemed indispensable. Major Hutton, Military Secretary, was granted a personal interview with his Highness the Khedive on Saturday morning (April 21), to express on the part of the Lieutenant-General Commanding the deep appreciation he felt for his Highness's kind inquiries and sympathy during his illness, and to convey the expression of his deep regret at not being himself able to wait personally upon his Highness."

"A Company Officer" thinks that "It would be a great boon to commanders of companies and a benefit to the service if Major Bannatyne, or someone who has made a speciality of such things, would publish a pamphlet giving a sort of syllabus of the subjects to be practised and lectured on during the six weeks' course which each company of infantry has to go through annually. The pamphlet," he says, "need not be too diffuse; but to insure some sort of system and uniformity, it should give a syllabus of the subjects to be dealt with, both practically and theoretically, with the probable time occupied by each, and a short summary of the heads to be lectured on in each subject, leaving it to the officers themselves to fill in the required padding. Such a pamphlet would insure a wide sale, both in the Line and the Auxiliary Forces, and would be of great benefit to the service generally."

PRESIDENT.
H.R.H. the DUKE of CAMBRIDGE, K.G.
CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE.
OFFICE—40 CHARING CROSS, S.W.

This Asylum was opened in February, 1854, to provide a home for the widows of non-commissioned officers and privates of the Army of not less than 50 years of age.

There are 65 widows in the Asylum.

Each widow has a furnished room, and receives seven shillings weekly, besides a monthly allowance of two shillings and sixpence for coals.

The House is capable of containing 70 widows, and the Committee appeal to the public for funds to enable them to admit the additional number, the present subscriptions being insufficient.

The funded income of the charity yields only £830, with an additional £50 from the Princess Mary's Fund for Nurses, to meet an estimated expenditure of £3,000 per annum.

An annual subscription of half-a-guinea, or a donation of five guineas, entitles to one vote at each election, with the right of nominating a candidate.

Army & Navy Gazette.
LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 5, 1883.

IN regard to the new seven years' tenure of command Order in the Indian Army, a trifling concession has been made, it having been ruled that officers who have not qualified for the thirty-two years' pension shall be allowed to hold their commands until April, 1884, instead of April, 1883, "in consideration of the suddenness with which the change has been made." No one will deny that officers suddenly and unexpectedly deprived of their commands are entitled to consideration. Yet, strange to say, no notice has been taken of those officers who have more than thirty-two years' service, and who are, in like manner, short of the time for their colonel's allowances. They have at least as much right to be allowed to wait in England for their colonel's allowances on the reduced pay that is left to them, as their more fortunate brethren have to hold on for an extra twelve months to their regimental commands. But how are they treated? It has to be remembered that if they wait in England, they can only draw half the pay of their rank, i.e., half of the half to which they have been reduced. To draw the whole of even the half-pay, they must remain in India, although they do no duty there. Surely, then, it would not be a great stretch of liberality to let them remain in England on the pay of their rank; in other words, on about half what they drew with their regiments? The Order with respect to them, as it stands, looks like an attempt to compel these Colonels to take the lower pension, in which attempt the India Office can hardly hope to be successful, for officers within a short time of qualifying for £1,127 a year will scarcely accept £796 as their retirement. Seeing that the officers have been so suddenly and unexpectedly deprived of their appointments, without any compensation whatsoever, they have a right to claim a little more liberality. If officers who have not completed the necessary service to entitle them to the thirty-two years' pension are granted a year's grace, why should not the same privilege be extended to those who have not completed their time for the colonel's allowances? Considering that the officers whose cause we plead are to do no more duty, it would be a very small concession to them were they compensated for the losses they incur, whilst it would prevent much heartburning and disappointment. It is ruled that officers may reside in England on half-pay till their colonel's allowances are due, but such is not the case. The truth is they are reduced to half-pay, more or less, when deprived of the command of their regiments, and are now offered only the option of remaining in India on that sum, or in England on half of it; that is to say, in England on half of a half, or in other words on quarter, not half, pay. When some regiments were recently disbanded, the officers were granted eighteen months' Staff salary. But in what did their position differ from that of the officers now deprived of command? "They have had seven years' command," it will be said. True, but so had many of those who received a bonus of eighteen months' Staff salary, and who, moreover, had the option of a pension in proportion to their length of service. The India Office has evidently acted on no principle in arriving at its decision, and the case is one of such palpable hardship that we feel certain it will be reopened, as we fail to see any good that is likely to accrue from the present ruling.

We have reason to believe that, owing to the large number of appointments made to the Order of the Bath lately for service in the field, there will be no general distribution of this coveted honour on the approaching anniversary of her Majesty's birthday, as it is not desired to make the Order too cheap. There may be a few Crosses given, but they will be reserved only for those who have exceptional claims.

We understand that Major J. A. Fergusson, Rifle Brigade, has resigned his appointment as Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant-General of the Local Forces in South Australia, which he has held, with great credit to himself, for the last few years, and is now en route to England. Major Fergusson is succeeded by Lieutenant J. Jervois, Royal Engineers, lately Aide-de-Camp to Major-General Sir William Jervois, at Adelaide.

His Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief made his spring inspection of the Aldershot Division on Tuesday. Although the parade was ordered "as strong as possible," which meant that all orderlies, &c., not attending ordinary parades, and every man available, should be in the ranks, the total strength was but 4,722 men, 1,194 horses, and 40 guns,—about the poorest turn-out for spring inspection that Aldershot has ever seen. The Infantry Division, of three brigades, numbered 2,935 of all ranks. This strength, or rather weakness, is explained by such "battalions" as the 26th, 307; 39th, 412; 85th, 260; 3rd Rifle Brigade, 309. This is a pretty result of the present system of feeding the linked battalions abroad, and maintaining a reliable reserve at home. The candle is being burned at both ends, with a vengeance! When the Queen visited Aldershot in May, 1882, for the purpose of reviewing the troops, the Division turned out some 10,000 strong. Now we have only sufficient troops at our principal instructional station to carry on the ordinary routine work at the Camp, and furnish the necessary guards, &c. If a pressing necessity arose for additional troops in the metropolis—a not improbable contingency—not a man could be fairly spared from the Camp for this purpose. As regards the summer drills and exercises, unless the strength of the Division be considerably augmented, it will be impossible for Sir Daniel Lysons to carry out any practical instruction. The force now at his disposal is the skeleton of a division, and would be barely sufficient to furnish outposts for the real division, for which barrack accommodation is provided at Aldershot. The Aldershot command, with its permanent Staff, is a very expensive establishment, and of late years, from a business point of view, it has not been a paying concern.

Lieutenant H. Lysons, V.C., 90th Light Infantry has been appointed aide-de-camp to his father, General Sir Daniel Lysons, K.C.B., commanding the Aldershot Division.

The work of revising, and supplementing, and explaining the General Orders of April 1, which proclaimed the new system of training, has begun. The scheme seems to have been devised without much consideration, detailed without much care, and announced without any method. The shortest way to render it clearly intelligible and practical, would be to write it afresh, and with a different pen. If this be not done—and we are sure it will not—the task of explaining some parts, and explaining away others, will be a heavy one. We can afford to wait for the solution of many of the puzzles presented to us, but we long to know why, in the practice at the "figure target" only, all ricochets will count," while a large proportion of the direct hits are to be disallowed; and we are in a state of feverish impatience for the revelation of the mystery of dividing "the daily work of a battalion" on a range "into two daily periods !"

The Secretary of State for War has decided that officers and soldiers are exempt from payment of messing contribution or ration stoppage for any period they are under medical treatment on board any sort of vessel, for wounds received in action, or disease contracted on active service.

The Secretary of State for War, by War-Office letter, has drawn attention to Sec. 5 of the Army (Annual) Act recently passed, and dated 26th April, 1883, which so extends Sec. 80 of the Army Act, 1881, as to bring within its effect duplicate attestation-papers; and he directs that from the date of the passing of the Army (Annual) Act of this year, the payment to justices' clerks for the attestation of a recruit may be limited to one shilling, as the requirement of a duplicate attestation-paper does not give any claim for extra payment. This will settle a matter long at issue between the military and civil authorities. At Aldershot, for instance, an extra charge of sixpence has hitherto been paid, on demand, under protest, to the justices' clerks for the duplicate copy of the attestation of a recruit.

The officers of the Commissariat and Transport Staff are anxiously awaiting the decision of the Committee upon the question of Supply and Transport, but it is much to be feared that this important branch, upon which depends in a large measure the comfort and efficiency of troops when taking the field, will be allowed to go on in the same hand-to-mouth way, and be again found wanting when the next occasion arises for it to be tried.

It is announced that permission will be granted to a limited number of time-expired men to volunteer for service in the Egyptian police on very favourable terms. No soldier will be selected who is not of good character and of less than 5 ft. 6 in. in height. In the interest of Egypt it is to be hoped that this appeal will be answered, and that the Government will give a liberal interpretation to the term "limited." The pay will probably be £6 a month. The excessively hybrid character of the gentlemen who now lounge about the streets of Cairo and Alexandria, the utter ignorance of their duties and complete inability to enforce respect for anything but their talent in finding any one weak enough to employ them, must be gall and wormwood to the new chief of police, General Latouche. It would not be an exaggeration to say that fifty English policemen in each of these towns would do more to preserve order and restore confidence than the entire police rabble as it now exists. We might even go further, and say they would indirectly confer more benefit on Egypt than the united Consular staff of about the same number, than as many Blue-books and as many contradictory Ministerial utterances in the House of Commons.

In Hart's Army List for the current year, "Dettingen" appears among the honours of all the regiments to which that name has been granted, except the Household Cavalry. If such an omission occurred in the War Office Army List, or indeed in any other official military publication, we might almost assume that it arose from that carelessness of which we have such clear and frequent proofs. But Hart is so carefully compiled that we incline to the belief that the omission is intentional. The claim of the Life Guards to the honour of "Dettingen" has been so fully disproved that the question need not be entered into again, unless some further attempt to establish that claim should be made. The Foot Guards have got "Dettingen," in Hart, though they were unable to take an active part in the battle, and had no casualties. They were in the field, and their claim is not more slender than those of some other regiments to the names of certain other victories.

We notice that the band of the Coldstream Guards took a prominent part in the great Liberal meeting at the Westminster Aquarium on Wednesday. The Army has, we know, lost almost all its traditions and esprit de corps, but it might at least be kept clear of politics. Surely the band of one of her Majesty's regiments of Guards should not be employed in giving éclat to the proceedings of Mr. John Morley and the Committee of the new Liberal Club.

Volunteering for the Army Reserve to the extent of twenty men per Cavalry regiment serving at home who have completed five years' service has just been thrown open, and what is the result? Regiments serving in Ireland have volunteered three and four times over, so desirous are the men to quit the service and the country. These men are about the most efficient soldiers in their respective corps, both as regards age, physique, and knowledge of their duties; and yet they gladly avail themselves of the earliest opportunity to quit the service, though it is next to certain that, ere many months have elapsed, they will many of them be starving. The authorities certainly do not go the right way to work to make the service popular. Why should Cavalry regiments be kept five years in Ireland, and when there, more than a year and a half in one place, considering that most of the out-stations are little better than penal servitude?

We would call the attention of the Horse Guards authorities to the length of service of the six junior Captains of the Royal Irish Rifles, as compared with that of the five senior subalterns of the Royal Irish Fusiliers. Further comment is needless.

We have received a "duty state" from a regiment in Ireland, showing that on the 1st inst. there were 32 duty men available for parade purposes. And with these 32 men the commanding officer and adjutant are expected to train a body of young officers.

Some time last year we called attention to the difficulties besetting any attempt to group the badges of the 88th and 94th, which are about as incongruous as the historical associations of these two regiments, now called the "Line Battalions" of the Connaught Rangers. There were grave objections to representing the Indian Elephant as carrying the Irish Harp, surmounted by the Crown, on his back; or as standing on that instrument without crushing it to atoms; or as drawing sweet music from its strings with his trunk. We find that all these difficulties have been evaded, and the awkward conjunction prevented. The Harp and Crown adorn the helmet, while the Elephant grazes peacefully on the patch of grass-green on the collar of the tunic. We are careful in acknowledging the ingenuity shown in this instance, because it is quite exceptional.

Owing to the very short service of the Lieutenants of the following Territorial Regiments, it would appear to be only fair to equalise promotion in the Army by promoting some subalterns of longer service to companies in these regiments, as vacancies occur. Some regiments have greatly suffered as regards promotion in the subaltern ranks by the amalgamation on July 1, 1881. This could now be justly equalised by following this suggestion; while the subalterns of the following regiments, owing to short service, could hardly complain:—Northumberland Fusiliers, Liverpool Regiment, Norfolk Regiment, Lincolnshire Regiment, Leicestershire Regiment, Yorkshire Regiment, Royal Scots Fusiliers, South Wales Borderers, The Cameronians, Gloucestershire Regiment, East Surrey Regiment, the Welsh Regiment, Essex Regiment, Loyal North Lancashire Regiment, Northamptonshire Regiment, Berkshire Regiment, Wiltshire Regiment, York and Lancashire Regiment, Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders, Royal Irish Rifles, Leinster Regiment.

A report reaches us that a Captain of a popular Metropolitan Volunteer regiment, being on a visit to an Irish station, applied to be attached to a certain distinguished regiment. His application was made through the proper channel, and after the usual delay, reached the officer to whom it was addressed. The reply was suggestive. It was somewhat to the following effect:—"I regret exceedingly that I cannot entertain this officer's application. It would be unfair to him if I did. I command a battalion, but my command exists only in name. Having no men to drill, how can I be expected to impart instruction to outsiders?"

Colonel C. Warren, C.M.G., R.E., on return from special service in Egypt, is to resume the duties of his old appointment as Instructor in Surveying, at the School of Military Engineering, Chatham. Lieutenant W. F. H. Stafford, R.E., has been selected to succeed Captain J. du T. Bogle, R.E., as Assistant-Instructor,

The Navy.

EGYPT MEDAL.

Department of the Accountant-General of the Navy and Comptroller of Navy Pay, Admiralty, Spring Gardens, May 3, 1883.

Alecto, Lieut. and Com. Harston, was inspected on Monday at Sheerness by Capt. D'Arcy, of the Duncan, when everything was found to be in a very satisfactory state. The complement of the Alecto is 46, all told, to be increased by 22 Kroomen on arrival on the West Coast. The Alecto is ordered to be convoyed out by the Opal, the two vessels to make their six hours' full speed trial in the Channel and touch at Plymouth to fill up with coals. As the Opal is not ready, we are surprised the Alecto is not sent forward to Devonport.

Alexandra, Capt. H. H. Rawson, C.B., flagship of Vice-Admiral the Lord John Hay, K.C.B., returned to Malta from the coast of Sicily on May 2.

Ariel, Lieut. and Com. Charles R. Wood, tender to the Coastguard ship Repulse, is undergoing very extensive repairs in the steam basin at Sheerness, and the cost is estimated at £1,200.

Boadicea, Capt. Church, flagship of Rear-Admiral Salmon, V.C., Commander-in-Chief on the Cape of Good Hope and West Coast of Africa station, was at Simon's Bay up to April 10; left Lagos March 7, visited Brass River, left Fernando Po March 16 for Congo, arrived there March 20, left 21st, and reached St. Paul de Loando; left March 28, called at Walfisch Bay April 3, and reached Simon's Bay April 9. Briton at Simon's Bay; has been ordered by telegraph to proceed as soon as convenient to Zanzibar. Starling was at St. Paul's de Loando March 28, and was to leave March 29 for St. Helena and Simon's Bay. Algerine was at St. Paul's de Loando March 28; ordered to proceed to various ports in the neighbourhood of the Congo, and thence to Gaboon and Cape Coast Castle; will remain as senior officer's ship on the West Coast until the arrival of the Opal or Flirt, and will then proceed to south sub-division. Mails to Cape Coast Castle to May 19. Bullfrog expected at St. Paul's de Loando March 30; to remain on south sub-division until about May 10; then to proceed to St. Helena and Ascension. Mails to Cape Coast Castle. Pioneer at Fernando Po March 16; to proceed to the Cameroons, Old Calabar, and Cape Coast Castle, and will remain in the Bights sub-division. Wrangler at Cape Coast Castle; to proceed to Ascension and Monte Video on arrival of Stork.

Devastation, Capt. Markham, of the Vernon, in command, has been experimenting during the past week at Spithead with new torpedoes and torpedo fittings. Torpedoes launched by air-guns from the upper deck have also been tried.

Dryad, Com. Charles Johnstone, was at Tamatave on April 14. Admiral Letimbre, commanding the French Squadron on the Madagascar coast, was shortly expected. The excitement among the natives had not abated.

Falcon, Com. Pringle, landed a party of seamen and marines, with Gatling gun, at Port Said on April 29, to quell rioting going on between Greeks and Arabs in the town. The Greek Consul had to seek refuge on board the Falcon.

Firm, Lieut. and Com. F. H. E. Crowe, tender to the Lord Warden, Coastguard ship at Queensferry, is undergoing repair at Sheerness, and the expenses are estimated at £1,100. Some time will elapse before she will be ready to enter upon her duties.

Flirt, Com. R. F. Hammick, arrived at Ascension on April 9. The ship's company have been sent to Green Mountain for ten days, to recruit their health, after their Niger and Oil Rivers expedition. The Flirt will probably remain at Ascension until the middle of May, and will then proceed to Sierra Leone and Cape Coast Castle. On March 7 the Flirt embarked W. H. Hewett, Esq., H.M.'s Consul at Old Calabar, and left to meet the flagship Boadicea off the Brass River. The Commander-in-Chief, Rear-Admiral Nowell Salmon, C.B., V.C., with his flag-lieut. and secretary, proceeded on board the Flirt, on March 9, and started to pay a visit to some of the Oil Rivers, calling in at the Brass, Bonny, and Old Calabar. It was but a flying visit, as the Flirt only remained a day in each river. At the Brass some palavers were held to settle differences between the white traders and native chiefs. Everything was found to be quiet at the Bonny, King George having resigned his kingship, owing to some dispute with the other chiefs as to the payment of dues. His loss will not be felt, as he never had any real power, Oko Jumbo having been for a long time headman, but he cannot become a king as he is not free born. All the chiefs went on board to visit the Admiral and the Consul. Their costumes were of the queerest, and their retainers—who had scarcely any costume to speak of—swarmed all over the ship, with eyes and mouths agape. At Old Calabar the same thing happened, only on a larger scale. The chiefs there turned out en grande tenue, coming off in huge canoes, each paddled by about 50 men, with a full band on board. The din they made is indescribable, the instruments used being neither wind nor string, but of the tin-kettle order. It was noticed that the principal performer was shaking a large bag, apparently half filled with stones. He seemed greatly pleased with his crashing, and added to his amusement by dancing in a most grotesque way on a platform about 2 ft. square. The rigs of the chiefs were gorgeous,—flaming dressing-gowns and coachmen's hats, with all the gold lace they could pile on, being apparently the favourite head-dress. After leaving Old Calabar, the Flirt proceeded to Fernando Po, and transferred the Admiral and his staff to the Boadicea on March 15, after a most pleasant and interesting trip.

Inflexible, Capt. Seymour, returned to Malta from Corfu on May 2.

Neptune, Capt. Maxwell, after steering circles on Saturday, left Spithead in the evening for a four days' trial of her machinery in the Channel. She returned to Spithead on Thursday, and will hoist the flag (temporarily) of Rear-Admiral Wilson, and afterwards proceeded to join the Channel Squadron.

Northampton, Capt. Digby, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir John Commerell, V.C., Commander-in-Chief on the North-America and West Indies station, was in dock at Bermuda on April 13. The Garnet, Griffon, and Fantôme were with the flag, the latter ship awaiting the arrival of the Humber to pay off and recommission. The Flamingo had been ordered by telegram from Jamaica to Bermuda. The Dido remained as senior officer among the Windward Islands.

Opal, Capt. Arthur T. Brooke, has been detained at Sheerness for some weeks on account of defective machinery, but has been ordered to be ready this day to proceed to her destination, the Cape of Good Hope and West Coast of Africa station, where she is to relieve the Briton, which will proceed to the East Indian station. The Opal will convoy the Alecto to the West Coast of Africa, to relieve the Pioneer on the River Congo, parting company at Sierra Leone.

Raven, Lieut. and Com. Ross, which was commissioned at Sheerness last week for the Australian station, was put into No. 3 dock at that dockyard on Wednesday afternoon to be thoroughly examined, before being taken over from the Steam Reserve officials by the commanding officer. She will leave for her station about the end of the present month.

Satellite, Capt. Theobald, which was commissioned at Sheerness last week for the Pacific, was put into the steam basin at Sheerness Dockyard on Wednesday morning. Her engines were tested and found to answer exceedingly satisfactory. She will run her usual steam trials on the Maplin Sands before being turned over to her regular officers. She is to have a four days' cruise in the Channel before finally leaving England for her station, and if any defects should be discovered, they will be attended to by the Dockyard staff at Sheerness.

Seagull, Lieut. Rae (in charge), arrived at Gibraltar on May 3, and will leave for Devonport on Tuesday.

Thalia, Capt. Brackenbury, C.M.G., left Colombo on May 2 for Aden.

Trent, tender to the Duncan, flagship of Vice-Admiral E. B. Rice, C.B., Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, left Sheerness on Monday for Greenwich, where she is to be engaged in connection with the Royal Naval College.

Triton, Staff Com. T. H. Tizard, left Sheerness on Monday morning for surveying duties in the River Thames.

Vernon, Capt. Albert H. Markham, is to be replaced by a larger ship, and it is also in contemplation to establish a branch of the Torpedo School at Plymouth.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, accompanied by Lady Harriet Grimston, Gen. Lord Wolseley, representing the British Army, Vice-Admiral Lord Clanwilliam, representing the British Navy, and Lieut.-Col. Clarke, will, it is stated, leave Charing Cross by special train on the 15th inst. for Moscow, to be present at the coronation of the Czar.

Orders have been received at Portsmouth for the Active to be supplied with her poop and forecastle 64-pounder guns at once, as it is not intended to provide her with a bow and stern armament of breech-loaders until the result of the sponson batteries which have been fitted to ships of the Amphion class has been practically ascertained.

The Russian frigate Minin, which is now being fitted out at Cronstadt for the Pacific station, will take with her to Vladivostock, we understand, a scientific exploring expedition, under the control of Potanin, a veteran explorer, to penetrate to unknown parts in Mongolia. If not interfered with by the Chinese authorities, the expedition will endeavour, after completing the survey of Western Mongolia, to make its way to Thibet.

The Government have resolved to meet the wishes of the subscribers to the Crimean Graves Fund, by making a substantial increase in the sum annually included in the Estimates for the care of the cemeteries.

The Lancet writes so sensibly on the subject of Mr. Stansfeld's motion, that we are induced to give its views insertion:—"The largeness of the majority by which the motion was supported is somewhat surprising, when we consider that the recent report of the Select Committee was entirely in favour of the continuance of the Acts, and even favoured their extension, and that this report was approved by a majority in the proportion of ten to six; whilst the minority was composed of those members only of the Committee who were known to be active members of societies for promoting the total abolition of the Acts. It is very significant that the name of no Member for any place which is under the provisions of the Acts is to be found among those who voted for Mr. Stansfeld's motion. Those who are best acquainted with their working evidently do not desire their repeal, or that their efficiency should be reduced to a minimum, as must now happen. If the majority of the inhabitants of the districts in which the Acts are in force had not formed a decided opinion in their favour, the persistent and unscrupulous agitation which has been so pertinaciously carried on for their abolition would have influenced them even more strongly than those people who only know of their operation from a distance. They can exercise their own judgment on the facts before them, and cannot be imposed on by prejudiced misstatements or the fervid eloquence of fanatical partisans. We need not refer any further to the sanitary value of the Acts; the evidence before the committee showing this was so decided that the Judge Advocate-General, who had, as he himself expressed it, 'everything to lose and nothing to gain by the course which from a sense of duty he felt himself compelled to take' could not help himself in protesting against the adoption of the motion of the Member for Halifax, as an attempt to impair the efficiency of a system which had done much to check the progress and alleviate the severity of one of the most terrible scourges of humanity. We shall now see with what success those who have taken upon themselves the responsibility of removing the compulsory provisions from the Acts will be able to maintain the diminution of disease, the rescue and reclamation of the women, the deterring influences on the minds of the vicious, and the improvement in the morality of the towns which have resulted whilst the Acts formed part of our police legislation."

EMPLOYMENT FOR ARMY RESERVE MEN.

SIR,—At the present time, recruiting prospects do not appear to be very bright, and the popularity of the service throughout the country would appear to be at a somewhat low ebb. Under these circumstances, therefore, we cannot afford to lose any chance which may present itself of enhancing the attractions of the Army, or of rendering men who are in it, or who have passed into the Reserve, contented with their lot. I venture, therefore, to ask you for space to bring forward in your columns a scheme which I have advocated from time to time during the last seven or eight years, and which has for its object to render it far easier than it is at present for Reserve men of good character to obtain regular employment in civil life. That it is desirable that some such scheme should be put into operation has long been recognised by all who have the welfare of the Army at heart. The first step towards effecting such an object would be to set on foot a widespread organisation and machinery which should be thoroughly decentralised and spread over the whole country. It might seem, at first sight, that any such organisation would necessarily cause a large increase of expense. But on reflection it will be seen that in the seventy brigade depôts that are now established, the requisite machinery is ready to hand, and that putting it in motion under proper management need hardly cost the State anything at all. For instance, a registry office might be established at every brigade depôt. There might be registered the names and addresses of all pensioners and Reserve men of good character residing within the limits of the district who were anxious to obtain situations; lists might be kept of all vacant situations throughout the district, and information collected of all openings and opportunities of employment. It might from time to time be officially notified to all large employers of labour within the said limits, and to the public generally, that trustworthy men for various situations could always be obtained by application to the registry office at the depôt. In order to defray the expenses which would, in carrying out these arrangements, be necessarily incurred, every man on obtaining a situation should pay a certain sum, say the equivalent of the first week's wages, towards the expenses of the office. A similar regulation to this exists in the Corps of Commissionaires, and is found to work well. The business of the office could easily be managed by the orderly-room clerk of the brigade depôt. The whole of the fee paid by a man on obtaining a situation should be awarded to the orderly-room clerk as his remuneration for doing the work of the registry office. The latter would thus have a direct interest in making the system work efficiently, and in using every means to procure employment for men in need of it. There need be no difficulty in recovering this fee, as it could, in the case of a pensioner, be recovered from his pension, or in the case of a Reserve-man, from his Reserve pay. If some such organisation as this was set on foot, and pains were really taken, by careful selection of men, to make it a success, there would be every probability, as the system became developed and known, that a very large number of Reserve men throughout the country might be provided with employment every year. There are, of course, various beneficial rules which might be made as to choice of men for employment, which would readily occur to any one who might be entrusted to draw up regulations for working out the scheme. For instance, the first preference would naturally be given to non-commissioned officers, and then to men who had left the colours with good-conduct stripes. Taking the number of brigade depôts at 70, if, when the system was fully developed, each of these placed only 50 men in good situations every year, the total number of Reserve men thus provided for every year would be 3,500. In addition to this, London and its suburbs would absorb at least 1,000 annually with ease. This would make a total of 4,500 annually. As a matter of fact, a far less number of berths than this would amply suffice for the working of the scheme at first, for it would be very difficult at present to find among the soldiers who are annually passed into the Reserve anything like that number whose characters and qualifications would bear the necessary scrutiny. If, as is probable, the brigade depôts which are situated in the more sparsely populated districts of Ireland and Scotland did not succeed in providing for this number of men, their deficiencies in this respect would be far more than counterbalanced by those depôts which are situated in the manufacturing districts and near great centres of industry, such as London, Manchester, Birmingham, Sheffield, Bradford, Glasgow, Belfast, &c., which would, I think, probably be able to provide places for any number of men. That I am justified in making so confident an assertion may be inferred from the success which has already attended such agencies whenever they have been set in motion by private individuals and societies. Leaving aside the well-known case of the Corps of Commissionaires, which requires no comment from me, I would point out that the detachments of this corps which have lately been organised in provincial towns, such as Liverpool, Glasgow, and Nottingham, have met with great success. Is there any reason to suppose that the case (ceteris paribus) would be otherwise at Manchester, Leeds, and Belfast, or that the towns and neighbourhoods of places like Northampton, Halifax, Worcester, Bristol, &c., would not each annually furnish employment for at least 50 or 60 trustworthy and intelligent men? Let me quote another instance, showing how much it is possible to achieve in this direction when the work is taken earnestly in hand. I refer to the Army and Navy Pensioners' Employment Society, which has its head office at Charing Cross, and branch offices at Dublin, Glasgow, and Manchester. This society, in spite of its usefulness being much restricted by scanty funds, has long been quietly doing good work for the two services. Turning to its annual reports, I see that the number of men for whom it has provided employment during the last three or four years has been as follows:—1879, 1,125; 1880, 1,323; 1881, 1,713; 1882 (up to end of October), 1,408. Such facts as these speak for themselves, and seem fully to bear out what I maintain. Let similar agencies be multiplied over the length and breadth of the land, by making use of the official machinery which is ready to hand, and the result will soon be that Reserve men of good character will always have an opportunity of obtaining employment and work. In conclusion, I would remark that it is more than ever necessary now to set on foot some organisation of this kind, inasmuch as the Reserve has been unfortunately diverted from its proper use, and the plan of having recourse to it on all occasions, whether the war on hand be small or great, in order to render our regiments fit for service, has unfortunately come into vogue. This abuse of the force has robbed short service of one of its main attractions, and has naturally had the effect of heavily handicapping Reserve men for the future in their quest for work in civil life. Many employers will not care to have a man in their service who is practically, as well as technically, liable to be called away by obligations from which he cannot free himself, and which he was justified in thinking, when he enlisted, that he would only under extraordinary, and not under ordinary, circumstances be called upon to fulfil. It is, therefore, all the more advisable to enable Reserve men to counteract this disadvantage as far as possible, and I have long maintained that no better, or simpler, or cheaper plan for doing this is likely to be devised than by decentralising the work and making use of the existing official machinery to assist deserving men to obtain their livelihood in domestic service, in workshop, factory, and farm.—I am, &c.,

ANOTHER UNPUBLISHED LETTER OF LORD NELSON'S.

SIR,—In your issue of March 17, I see an interesting letter of Lord Nelson's, written from this city. Allow me to enclose copy of another unpublished letter, which can be seen at the Quebec Garrison Club.—I am, &c.,

(COPY.) "Merton, February 2, 1802.

"SIR,—There are so many prints of me that it is not in my power to say which is most like the original, for no one of them is like the other, but I rather think a little outline of the head, sold at Brydon's, Charing Cross, is the most like me. With many thanks for your good wishes, I am, Sir, your obedient servant, NELSON AND BRONTE."

"Thomas Forsyth, Esq."

We learn from Cairo that on the 19th ult. a native battery, served entirely by Egyptians, was taken to the Palace of Abdeen, for the inspection of his Highness, by Col. R. S. Duncan, commanding the Egyptian Artillery. The bearing of the officers and men, the clean appearance of the guns and horses, and the faultless condition of the uniforms and trappings caused general admiration among the few spectators, many of whom were Egyptian officers who happened to be present at the march round Abdeen Square. The excellent appearance of the battery was the more noticeable, as no English officers had been near it previous to its being brought before his Highness the Khedive by Col. Duncan. The officers and men forming the battery had simply followed the instructions laid down by Gen. Sir Evelyn Wood Pasha, V.C., commanding the Egyptian Army.

"An Abolished I. of M." writes:—"Will you allow me, through the medium of your valuable paper, to give the civilian public a little insight into the most recent move in the direction of economic reform in the Army. I joined my regiment full of zeal, and determined that I would show my commanding officer that I was fit for a staff appointment. I did so, and was gazetted Musketry Instructor, and performed the duties satisfactorily for two years, until a few days ago, when I am informed by a General Order that I am 'abolished.' Thus, for no fault of my own, and with no notice, my income is suddenly reduced nearly one-third, my horse, which my duties obliged me to provide myself with, is left useless on my hands, I am unable to get rid of him except at a great sacrifice, and I am even refused an allowance of forage for him. Being a soldier, I must, of course, obey what I am told, 'by order;' but I do not think the stingiest of ratepayers would say that this is a fair way of reducing his taxes."

The Morning Post says:—"An important step has just been taken towards the complete reorganisation of the new Egyptian gendarmerie and police force, Baker Pasha having established a permanent clothing and store department, of which Lieut.-Col. Kelly has been appointed the director. In addition to ensuring uniformity in the dress and equipment of the force, the establishment will save great expense to the country."

The Queen has approved of the 13th Bengal Lancers being in future designated the 13th (Duke of Connaught's) Bengal Lancers, in commemoration of the appointment of the Duke of Connaught as honorary colonel to that regiment.

It is reported that Major E. Baring will replace Sir E. Malet in Egypt.

The Martini-Henry rifle, it is stated, will cease to be the service arm directly a more satisfactory breechloader has been approved.

Officers of the Army or Navy on Half-pay, or Retired Civil Servants just home from India, have the opportunity of purchasing, on reasonable terms, direct from the owner,

A MOST COMFORTABLE and ELIGIBLE MARINE RESIDENCE, which is held on a lease for 999 years, at only £2 per annum. The house commands extensive views of the Atlantic coast, offers ample accommodation for a large family, and is in thoroughly good repair, having coach-house, stables, a lock-up yard, &c. All standing on an acre of good grass land, well enclosed, and within a few perches of the tide-way. The air is celebrated for its purity, salubrity, and restorative quality, especially to those debilitated after long residence in the East. The bathing here is unrivalled. There is a daily postal and market delivery. The fishing and shooting cannot be surpassed. Meat and poultry are cheap. At a mile distant is a church, and at a mile and a half an excellent school. The district is perfectly peaceable, and there are many resident gentry in this favoured locality. Railway communication with Ennis is daily expected to be established. N.B.—The furniture at a valuation, if required.—Application to,

JAMES B. MOLONY, Esq., Solicitor,
Bindon Street,
Ennis,
County Clare.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS. — COUGHS, INFLUENZA.—The soothing properties of these medicaments render them well worthy of trial in all diseases of the lungs. In common colds and influenza the Pills taken internally and the Ointment rubbed externally are exceedingly efficacious. When influenza is epidemic, this treatment is easiest, safest, and surest. Holloway's Pills and Ointment purify the blood, remove all obstructions to its free circulation through the lungs, relieve the overgorged air tubes, and render respiration free without reducing the strength, irritating the nerves, or depressing the spirits. Such are the ready means of saving suffering when afflicted with colds, coughs, bronchitis, and other complaints, by which so many are seriously and permanently afflicted in most countries.

BEDFORD MODERN SCHOOL. Rev. R. B. POOLE, B.D., Head Master; 26 Assistant Masters; 450 Boys. Large Endowment; Annual Exhibitions. Army, London University Matriculation, Business, &c. Fees to residents, £4, £6, or £9 per annum.

PRIVATE TUITION at SEA-SIDE.—The VICAR of a small parish (charmingly situated on the South Coast), late Scholar and Honours Graduate of Oxford, assisted by experienced French and German Professors, TAKES a limited number of PUPILS, for Army, Universities, and Public Schools. Individual teaching and care. Every home comfort. Good sea bathing, yachting, &c. Backward pupils not objected to, and would receive special attention.—Prospectus and full particulars on application to S. PERCY STREET, Esq., Solicitor, Weymouth.

PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—DOLMHOE, CRIEFF, PERTHSHIRE.—Mr. W. E. FROST, for ten years of Trin. Coll., Glenalmond (three as Sub-Warden, seven as Master of the Junior School), will OPEN a PREPARATORY SCHOOL in CRIEFF, in SEPTEMBER next. Crieff is a well-known health-resort, and Dolmhoe has special advantages for delicate or Indian boys.—Prospectus, list of references, &c., on application to W. E. FROST, Trin. Coll., Glenalmond, Perth.

MR. ST. JOHN BOULTBEE, the Priory, Croydon (late Captain Massie and Boultbee), assisted by a Staff of Graduates of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, RECEIVES a Limited Number of PUPILS to Prepare for the Competitive Examinations for Sandhurst, Woolwich, and for the Militia. The number of Pupils is limited to 12. Five pupils out of six were successful at the last Sandhurst Examination (July, 1882).—Terms, references, and other information sent on application.

MILITARY EDUCATION, GERMANY.—Colonel BERDOE WILKINSON, late R.E., formerly in charge of the Ordnance Survey in Ireland, and Lieutenant-Colonel WILKINSON SHAW, M.A. (Staff College), late Garrison-Instructor at Aldershot, prepare Candidates for Sandhurst and Woolwich, and for Line Commissions through the Militia.

At the last Militia Competition, which took place on March 8, for which 31 Commissions in the Line have been awarded, the under-mentioned officers passed from this Establishment, out of 18 sent up:—

Lieutenant	E. G. Wynyard	8th
"	H. J. Morphy	11th
"	I. H. W. Southey	14th	(Bracketed [with 13th)
"	N. G. Woodyatt	15th
"	J. H. Heycock	16th
"	D. S. A. Cosby	22nd
"	F. K. O. Peile	26th

This completes a total of 32 commissions secured by Colonel WILKINSON and Lieutenant-Colonel SHAW at the last four Military Competitive Examinations, the total number sent up for these competitions being 77. The names of the successful pupils have already been published.

The results obtained at the last SANDHURST EXAMINATIONS have added to the general score, which amounts altogether to Fifty-nine Successes, achieved by pupils during the past 18 months.—Address, DARMSTADT, GERMANY.

SANDHURST, WOOLWICH, C. S., MILITIA, PRELIMINARY, &c.—CAREFUL PREPARATION for any of the above. Upwards of 130 successes during the past four years. Highest places in lists, Nos. 5, 8, 9, 15, 18, 29, 34, 37, 38, 52, 61, 63, &c. More Preliminary successes in February and March, 1883.

MILITARY COMPETITIVE for MILITIA OFFICERS.—Special Course, in charge of Colonel STORY, late South Lancashire Regiment. 8 years' experience as Garrison Instructor. In 1882-83, with a total of Twenty-four Candidates, Six were successful, an average of one in four.

LIEUTENANTS of MILITIA desirous of competing for Line Commissions can be received by the Rev. WALTER BAKER, M.A., at Batcombe Rectory, Evercreech, Bath. They will be thoroughly prepared in all Military Subjects by Major Dickens (late 11th Foot), Staff-College Graduate, formerly Assistant Royal Engineer, S.E. District, and Colonel Palmer, late R.A., formerly Instructor at the R.M.A., Woolwich, and two of whose pupils obtained special mention from the Examiners at the last September Examination.

Great individual attention is given, as few pupils are taken, and steady work is insisted on. Since the introduction of the Military Competitive, out of Forty-two Lieutenants of Militia sent up, Twenty-six have been successful, several taking high places in the list. There are opportunities for healthy country amusements and games, a cricket and football ground, lawn-tennis courts (grass and asphalte), a private billiard-room, &c., and in all other respects a liberal and gentleman's establishment is kept.

A Large Staff of Experienced Tutors, all resident, assist in preparing for the Qualifying Examinations, and for the Sandhurst and Woolwich Competitions.

References to parents of pupils successful at all Examinations, INCLUDING THE LAST SANDHURST AND RECENT MILITIA COMPETITIVE.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

Bloomsbury, London.

Dear Sir,—We embrace this opportunity of congratulating you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine, Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne, has earned for itself, not only in Hindostan, but all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported into the country, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff), discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of

BRONCHITIS,

EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC,

PALPITATION, HYSTERIA, and is the true Palliative in

TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

GREAT SPECIFIC for

DIARRHŒA,

CHOLERA, DYSENTERY.

IMPORTANT CAUTION. The immense sale of this remedy has given rise to many unscrupulous imitations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE.

A correspondent writes:—"The more one considers Dr. Thorburn's case, the more mysterious appears the action of the military authorities. He, hitherto an honourable man, is accused of a dishonourable act, which a special court of inquiry, assembled by the Commander-in-Chief in India, acquits him of. A court-martial is asked for; this is not granted, for the admitted reason that there is no evidence against him. The authorities in England offer him a gratuity of £2,500, a sum of money given to medical officers who retire voluntarily. All the above circumstances prove him to be innocent. Then why must he accept the gratuity, and retire from the service in which he distinguished himself? Until some better and cogent reasons are forthcoming than those advocated by Lord Morley in the House of Lords are produced, Dr. Thorburn will appear to the British public an ill-used man."

The Government (says the Standard) have, with the concurrence of Lord Alcester and Lord Wolseley, agreed to commute the proposed pensions to these noble lords into the payment of lump sums computed on the actuarial value of two lives. The sum in Lord Alcester's case will be about £25,000, and in the case of Lord Wolseley, between £29,000 and £30,000.

The Royal Italian Opera season commenced on Tuesday evening. The house has been tastefully redecorated, a new chandelier fixed in the grand saloon, improved communications made for the greater comfort and security of the public, and a central passage has been formed directly through the centre of the stalls to the front of the orchestra, reviving the memory of that convenient avenue known to the old frequenters of Her Majesty's Theatre as "Fops' Alley." On the opening night was performed Verdi's fantastic opera of "Aïda," ably interpreted under the direction of Signor Bevignani, who has the control of an excellent orchestra and most efficient chorus. Madame Fursch-Madi as Aïda and Mdlle. Stahl as Amneris once more secured the favour of their audience. Signor Cotogni was the Ethiopian monarch, and Signor Reszke again exerted with effect his fine voice as the High Priest. Nervousness evidently prevented Signor Marconi, who made as Radamès his first appearance in this country, from doing full justice to his powers; but the impression he made was decidedly favourable. Flotow's melodious opera of "Marta" was given on Thursday evening, and Meyerbeer's grand opera of "L'Africaine" will be performed this (Saturday) evening, with Madame Pauline Lucca as Selika.

At Drury Lane, the spectacular drama of "Youth" has been effectively reproduced by Mr. Augustus Harris, who retains his original character of the hero, Frank Darlington. The piece is embellished with additional effects, and seems likely to renew its attraction for a considerable time. The changes in the cast include Miss Lydia Foote, who now plays the matronly Mrs. Darlington; Miss Sophie Eyre, as the deluding Eva de Malvoisie; Miss Fanny Enson as Mrs. Walsingham; and Mrs. Alfred Maddick as Frank's cousin, Alice Wenlock. Mr. Herbert Standing in this revival represents the wicked Major Randal Reckley, and Miss Fanny Brough the lively young "swell," Willie Spratley. Mr. John Ryder, Mr. Harry Jackson, and Mr. Harry Nicholls advantageously preserve their former positions. A four-horse coach is now introduced into the second act, with all its appointments complete, and the battle scene, vigorously carried out, has been transferred to Egypt, the exploits of the Drury-Lane army reflecting great credit on their military instructor, Captain Riddell.

Morning performances at the Gaiety have included Miss Le Thiere's matinée on Monday, when "Pygmalion and Galatea" was followed by four scenes from "Macbeth," with Miss Gertrude Kellogg and Mr. Hermann Vezin in the prominent parts. On Tuesday, Mr. Edmund Leathes had a special performance, producing a blank-verse drama, written by himself, called "For King and Country," a story of the old Cavalier and Roundhead days. On Thursday, Miss Kate Vaughan took her annual benefit, appearing on this occasion as Amy Robsart, in the historical drama of that name, founded by the late Andrew Halliday on Sir Walter Scott's novel of "Kenilworth."

"School" was acted for the last time at the Haymarket on Thursday night, and the house was closed on Friday for a dress rehearsal of "Fedora," to be produced this evening (Saturday).

The Lyceum season will terminate on Saturday, July 28, and Mr. Henry Irving and his London company will then be absent from the metropolis for a period of ten months. "Much Ado about Nothing" will be played nightly during the present month, except on three Saturday evenings, when "The Bells" will be substituted.

At Her Majesty's Theatre, Mdlle. Limido, an Italian danseuse, who appeared not long since at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, has been engaged, and in the grand "snow ballet," which forms the effective climax of the showy operatic spectacle of "A Trip to the Moon," her graceful movements excite the warmest admiration.

After this week, the evening performances at the Imperial Theatre, Westminster, will be discontinued, and afternoon representations will be substituted. Mr. Burnand's excellent comedy, "The Colonel," is to be revived, with Mr. Edgar Bruce in his original character. Those who have not seen the piece should avail themselves of the opportunity of doing so.

Lovers of music who have a spare hour at their disposal cannot do better, should they be in the neighbourhood of Piccadilly, than drop in at the Piccadilly Hall, where Paganini Redivivus offers twice daily a musical entertainment of the highest order.

The following letter, which appeared in the Madras Mail, is not, of course, to be considered the genuine production of an India Native officer. Those who have served in the Madras Presidency will be best able to appreciate the fidelity with which the peculiarities of native English are represented. It may be accepted, on the whole, as significant of the effect likely to be produced on the minds of Sepoys by the extremely injudicious legislation with which India is now threatened:—"To Honorable Filbert, Governor-General's Lawyer. Respected Sir,—All natives very glad your goodness arrived to this country. God making great difference between black people and white men, but your Honor making all same. Therefore your majesty more powerful than Almighty Dollar even. Sepoys very glad that soon this country magistrates can punish the Europe gentries, because they are bad lot, and always kicking up bobbery, beating and damning with bad words the poor native people who never do anything wrong. Now Europe gentlemens will be fraid of the native police; that is why all Aryan brethren got much joy in the heart. I hope master soon making some new order for native officers. We are very good peoples, and plenty use to the Ranee. If got doubt, yor Honour can see what the English people at Madame Tussaud saying about Indian Contingent. All native officers got commissions same like Europe officers and not common warrants like conductors and them fellows. It very proper, therefore, for all Europe soldiers to salute native officers; but they never doing cos they got white faces. One day I say to Tommy Atkins, 'Why you not salute native officers?' and he say (he was rude man), 'Ullo, my cockywax, don't you wish you may get it?' But now we thinking we shall get it. Your Honor must also order that native officers can pay companies. We will never make any humbug business, as we are all respectable gentlemens. As we got Commissions we must also sit on court-martial for trying Europe soldiers and officers. If we got commissions all same like Europe officers, why so much difference? Therefore your Honour must please give order that native officers all same Europeans, and that Europe soldiers must salute us, and that we must try Europe soldiers and officers. Sometimes Europe court-martial taking presents when trying their own countrymens, but native officers never can do that sort business. If Governor-General and your Honor will make this law, all Sepoys praying your Honor's seeds may be multiply like fleas on the sea-beach.—I have the honor to be, &c., Subadar-Major Bahadoor, Madras Native Yenfuntry."

"One of Them" writes:—"À propos of the account which appeared in your last issue of cadets quitting the Royal Military College in May, 1853, can you find space for the detail of my term which passed out in June, 1870? It originally numbered 79, of these only 34 are now in the service, viz., 16 in Queen's regiments and 18 in the S.C.; 12 are dead, two were not granted commissions, and the remainder have retired from the service. Of the dead, one fell in action, two were accidentally killed in India, and two died on service. The first and second cadets on the list have passed the Staff College. None have yet reached the rank of major, but all have obtained their company, with, curiously enough, one exception, viz., the cadet who took the first place; and what is stranger still is that the cadet passing out last on the list was the first to get his company, but the poor fellow did not live to enjoy his good-fortune, for he took his own life on the very day on which his promotion appeared in the Gazette."

RECENT NAVAL SCANDALS.

REPORT OF MR. MARTIN AND MR. LAYCOCK ON THE VICTUALLING ACCOUNTS OF H.M.'s SHIPS.

COPY OF ADMIRALTY ORDER.

Admiralty, Oct. 4, 1882.

ACCOUNTANT-GENERAL,—With reference to the Courts-martial held in June last for the trial of the paymaster, ship's steward, and ship's steward's assistant of H.M.S. Cambridge, on various charges connected with a deficiency of fresh beef discovered on board that ship, and with reference to your observations of July 15 last thereon, I am to acquaint you that my Lords desire you will carefully consider the question of the audit of the victualling accounts of her Majesty's ships, as it appears to their Lordships that the examination of the Paymasters' accounts, as hitherto conducted in your Department, would not have detected such frauds as were perpetrated by the ship's steward of the Cambridge, inasmuch as the existing system of audit does not necessitate an examination of the books containing the entries on which the paymasters' accounts are made up. My Lords desire that, after the further inquiry ordered in this communication, you will recommend such changes in the existing system as you may consider desirable or necessary.

2. As my Lords do not consider it likely that the frauds on board the Cambridge commenced only with the period which formed the subject of the courts-martial, they desire that the victualling accounts of H.M.S. Cambridge may be thoroughly examined for the preceding three months, in the same manner as the accounts subsequent to Oct. 1 last were examined by Mr. Martin, Deputy-Judge-Advocate, and Mr. Onffroy, of your Department, previous to the preparation of the charges in the courts-martial which have been held.

3. My Lords also desire that a similar scrutiny shall be made of the books of H.M.'s ships Duke of Wellington, Royal Adelaide, and Excellent, for the quarter preceding the date of the courts-martial in the case of the Cambridge.

4. My Lords have desired that the leave-books of H.M.'s ships Cambridge, Royal Adelaide, Excellent, and Duke of Wellington shall be sent into office, and also the lists of officers absent upwards of forty-eight hours, as it would appear that the directions contained in Article 1,597 of the Queen's Regulations are not sufficiently observed. These books are also to be examined, and a full report made to their Lordships thereon, with any suggestions for securing a system under which all persons on leave shall be duly checked, in accordance with the regulations in the leave-book, mess-book, and ship's ledger, which does not appear to have been the case on board H.M.S. Cambridge, the consequence being that the Crown suffered loss, either by the issue or payment of savings on account of officers and men not entitled to receive them, or by the misappropriation of accrued surplus.

5. As Mr. Martin was employed with Mr. Onffroy in investigating the accounts of the Cambridge, my Lords consider that it would be well that they should also be employed on this further inquiry; and a ship's steward may be employed to assist them, if desired.

6. A copy of this memorandum has been sent to Mr. Martin, and the Commanders-in-Chief at Portsmouth and Devonport have been directed to afford every facility and assistance in the matter.—By command of their Lordships,
(signed), G. TRYON.

NOTE.—By a subsequent order, L, Oct. 23, 1882, A.G. $\frac{8157}{1882}$, Mr. Laycock was directed to be employed, instead of Mr. Onffroy.

REPORT.

Admiralty, Feb. 21, 1883.

SIR,—In pursuance of the Order of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, dated Oct. 4 last, L, 1,416, copy of which is annexed, we beg leave to make the following report of our examination of the books and accounts :—

2. An examination of the victualling accounts of H.M.S. Cambridge, for Michaelmas quarter, 1881, shows that frauds on a large scale had been perpetrated during this quarter, similar to those which formed the subject of the inquiry by courts-martial; and a manipulation of figures, making the accounts, as sent into office, wholly unreliable. For example :—The total number of rations claimed by abstract of ship's ledger is 90,464, and the number entitled to victuals by victualling account and savings voucher sent into office, 90,468; rations by mess-books (from which the savings voucher is directed to be made up), 89,311; the the number of rations overclaimed, 1,157. This is assuming that all leave and other checks have been properly entered —a matter which we are prevented from ascertaining, as will be explained hereafter.

3. The above 1,157 rations overclaimed represent 1,446 lb. of biscuit; and as it might have attracted attention in office to have shown so large a surplus when no issues of that article had been made, it is falsely represented in the victualling statement that 1,118 lb. were issued during the quarter; and a surplus, equally fictitious, is shown of 400 lb., making a total of 1,518 lb., or a difference of 72 lb. only, which, not being material, escaped notice. These rations also represent an overclaim of 1,157 lb. fresh meat.

5. The account of vegetables, on the other hand, shows 6,714 lb. less than appears by the daily account-book to have been issued. There is a surplus of 1,895 lb., and an overpayment in savings of 5,214 lb., as referred to in pars. 14 and 21.

6. It being reported that the weekly account-book could not be found, it could not be examined on these points.

7. A comparison of leave shown in the leave-books, checked in the ledger, shows only a total of 215 rations omitted to be checked on the ledger; but there are no means of ascertaining whether any checks are omitted from the leave-books.

8. To the ward-room mess issues have been made, and savings paid for, 3,885 lb. fresh meat in excess of the proper proportion, as follows :—

July	686	486	200	1,480	486	1,480
Aug.	682	484	198	1,484		1,000
Totals	2,043	1,464	579	4,863	486	3,885

9. The 3,885 lb. fresh meat over-issued, at the savings price (4d. a pound) is equal to £64 15s.; but as the messman stated at the court-martial that he landed his surplus beef for sale or exchange at his butcher's, it may be estimated at double that sum. This does not appear to have been covered by short payments to the ward-room mess on other articles saved, and therefore points to collusion between the messman and the ship's steward.

10. We would draw attention to the deductions from the above table that for the month of July, while the whole quantity of fresh meat is actually paid for as savings, the messman was supplied with double the quantity he would have been entitled to had no savings been paid. He thus received for that month, either in quantity or value, three times as much as he was entitled to, while for the following two months he received more than twice as much as the proper proportion. It is scarcely conceivable that such glaring frauds were not discovered before the account left the ship.

11. An examination of the other parts of this account shows that all the ship's company's messes were defrauded of a portion of their savings, by which means the over issues to the ward-room messman were, in part, adjusted.

12. The total short payment for salt meat amounts to 4,122 lb., which added to 886 lb. fresh meat, also short paid to some messes, gives a total of 5,008 lb. for disposal, of which 3,885 lb. are accounted for by over-issues to the ward-room mess before referred to, and leaving 1,123 lb. for further appropriation.

15. We find that the number of rations, as claimed by the mess-books, has been made to agree with the number claimed by the ledger, by increasing the numbers in the savings voucher in the last month of the quarter in the messes of the Foudroyant. In the messes from Nos. 7 to 14, 1,123 rations are added in this way, and for this purpose.

16. By the victualling account, 67,072 lb. fresh meat have been expended; but 64,902 was the number entitled to fresh-meat victualling. There was therefore an excess expenditure of 2,170 lb. fresh meat on the fresh-meat victualling alone.

17. Again, by the victualling account, 68,777 lb. fresh-meat victualling are claimed, but 64,902 is the number entitled to it; so that there was an excess claim of 3,875 lb. fresh meat. On the other hand, a corresponding short claim of salt meat has been made of the same quantity.

18. It was ascertained at the Cambridge courts-martial that this was the only ship on the Devonport command which rendered accounts showing a claim for salt-meat rations, and it was done without the authority required by Admiralty Instructions, Art. 1,600. It seems singular that this irregularity does not appear to have been inquired into, on the account being sent into office ; but it is understood not to be the province of the audit branch to make inquiries into matters of this kind, as the instructions do not require the transmission of this authority into office.

19. As before observed, the weekly account-book was not found. No agreement appears to exist between the daily account and mess books and victualling account. In many messes no particulars of transactions are entered in the mess-books ; but the columns are left blank, being in no respect better than those books which were examined in connection with the courts-martial. The victualling account appears to have been made up without regard to these books, and such quantities entered as seemed requisite to make the account complete; for example, salt pork received was 2,200 lb. ; do., remaining at the end of the quarter, 1,170 lb. ; balance expended, 1,030 lb. ; but only 28 lb. are shown by the daily account-book to have been issued to one mess (No. 32).

20. The savings voucher shows that in the case of the Gorgon tender, instead of the money being paid to the caterer of each mess (11 in number), the whole was paid to the ship's steward's assistant ; and in the case of the Foudroyant tender, it was paid to the gunner for the whole 22 messes, their names being inserted as being the persons appointed to receive it, and the column "name of the person paid, if not the caterer," is left blank. It also appears in this voucher that 24 messes (from No. 4 to No. 36) are each shown as having saved vegetables :—July, 32 lb. ; August, 32 lb. ; September, 32 lb. ; without any regard to the number victualled. If these suspicious entries in the savings voucher had been at once inquired into, on being received at the Admiralty, and an inspection of the accounts from which it was compiled ordered, it is more than probable that it would have resulted in an exposure of the whole system of frauds ; but the details of this voucher do not come under official scrutiny, which, it is understood, is confined to the abstract of the voucher showing the quantity saved and the money paid on the account.

22. There was also an over-issue of 65 lb. of tea and 96 lb. of sugar to the ward-room messman, as shown by the figures recorded in the mess-books.

23. An examination, as far as practicable, of these accounts shows them to have been satisfactorily kept, except as regards the leave checks in the ledger, for which see paragraph 28.

24. The daily account-books have been correctly kept, and the remains, day by day, properly carried forward. The quantities issued by the daily account-books have been inserted in the mess-books, and the savings cast up correctly from them.

25. The quantities expended by the daily account-books have been entered in the weekly account-book, which has throughout been correctly totalled, and the remains carried forward week by week.

26. The savings voucher is correctly made up from the mess-books, with two exceptions, due probably to clerical errors, where the number victualled in No. 31 mess is 351, but should be 251; and in the Fire Queen the salt pork saved is 145 lb., but payment was made for 45 lb.

27. The victualling account has been correctly made up, and agrees with the documents sent into office, with the exception of the stoppages of spirit, for which tea, sugar, and chocolate have been issued in lieu. The account debits 3,983 rations, but the mess-books show only 1,601. The former is probably correct, and the discrepancy due to a clerical omission.

28. We are precluded from examining an important part of these accounts by the imperfect state of the leave-books, which, besides being kept in an unsatisfactory manner, have had several pages removed, so that it cannot, for a portion of the time, be ascertained whether all the checks for leave have been entered in the ledger; and if any are omitted, an overclaim of rations must have ensued.

29. The general rule appears to have been merely to enter in the leave-book the man's name, number on ship's books, and number of mess, without showing the date of his going or returning; so the leave checks could not have been entered in the ledger from this book (as directed by the Instructions), and we have, therefore, no means of seeing if any, and what, checks have been omitted. In the long leave-book the pages are removed from Dec. 23, 1881, to Feb. 10, 1882, and from Feb. 10 to March 22, 1882 (pages 44 to 64, 66, and 70 to 77). In the ship's company's divisional leave-book, the pages are removed from March 4 to 18; and there is no leave entered from March 18 to May 20. In the ledger there only five men checked as on leave between March 4 and 31.

30. The Marines' leave-book commences on Jan. 14, 1882, and from that date to March 31 there are only eight entries of leave of over 48 hours, three of which are omitted from the ledger, and there is one entry of leave in the ledger not in the leave-book; but the time of return is entered in all cases, and it is a more satisfactory book than the one for the ship's company.

31. The victualling accounts of H.M.S. Excellent for Lady quarter, 1882, could not be examined, as ordered, as the daily and weekly account and mess books are stated to have been lost, as also the books for Midsummer quarter; but those for Michaelmas quarter, 1882, having come to hand, have been examined, with the following result :—

32. The mess-books agree substantially with the savings voucher; but for July, No. 37 mess is overpaid for 70 lb. fresh meat, while the next mess is short paid 72 lb.

33. The first was, perhaps, due to a clerical error, and the second might have been, unless made to correct the former error, not discovered. There are about a dozen minor mistakes in the savings voucher, which would have been corrected, had it been compared with the mess-books before the payments.

34. The checks in the ledger have evidently not been taken from the leave-book sent into office, as directed by Art. 1,597 (4) of the Admiralty Instructions, as the dates of the checks differ in many instances, and, indeed, are rarely found to agree. Checks have been entered in, and erased from, the ledger, although they appear in the leave-book; and a few checks in the leave-book, of above 48 hours, have not been entered in the ledger.

35. We received instructions on the 17th ult. to extend our examination to the accounts of the Royal Adelaide for Lady quarter, 1882. It was ascertained that the weekly account-book could not be found, but one has now been made up from the daily account-books.

36. The victualling accounts of the crew are well kept; but in the Harpy tender the ship's company's mess was overpaid 178 lb. fresh meat, and in the Vivid tender the ship's company's mess overdrew 87 lb. fresh meat and 31 lb. vegetables, and were paid for savings 90 lb. fresh meat and 46 lb. vegetables, making a total issued and paid for in excess 177 lb. fresh meat and 77 lb. vegetables.

37. The leave-books of H.M.'s ships Duke of Wellington, Excellent, and Cambridge have been in some degree dealt with while reporting on the victualling accounts.

38. It was reported from H.M.S. Excellent that until Christmas, 1882, it had not been customary to enter the Easter or Christmas leave in the leave-book; and as these are the times of year when long leave is generally given to the crew, this would of itself have made it an imperfect record. The names of 29 men entered on Christmas leave, but not appearing in the ledger, were lined out in pencil prior to the transmission of the book into office, and several pages appear to have been removed. A few names appearing in the leave-book have been omitted from the ledger. The leave-book for the period between July, 1880, and Sept., 1882, is called a "fair copy," and is imperfect in essential particulars. Throughout the book the "leave granted" has not been filled in as required by the form, nor the "time of return;" three columns being left blank.

39. The leave-book of H.M.S. Royal Adelaide is a "victual and check"-book, and it has not been without much trouble that an examination has been made to ascertain if all the checks in it have been entered in the ledger. We find they have been; but there are also ten names, with 127 days' victualling in the aggregate, that are in the ledger and not in the above book. This would seem to imply that the entries had not been made from this book, but an inspection of them tends to show they were inserted after the victualling in the ledger had been completed and totalled. When it was found that, owing to some clerical error, the checks fell short of those shown by the savings voucher, the above checks were improperly entered, doubtless to avoid claiming a larger number of rations by the ledger than were shown by the savings voucher. The victual and check-book only commences on Jan. 27, so that an examination from the 1st of the month (which would have included a portion of the Christmas leave) could not be made. So far as we can learn, it appears that the leave-book containing this portion was transmitted to the Admiralty in May, 1882, and, not being required in office, is believed to have been destroyed.

40. A list of officers absent upwards of 48 hours is directed to be kept by the Admiralty Instructions, Article 1,597 (3); but no form is given, or book supplied. Sometimes the officers' names are entered alphabetically, so that it can hardly be supposed that the checks would be entered from this book, as ordered, and some of the checks are omitted. It appears desirable that a form of book should be printed and supplied, and that all leave-books should also be paged, so that, if any pages are removed, it can at once be seen.

41. The Admiralty Instructions, Article 748, direct that all leave granted to petty officers, seamen, Marines, and boys is to be recorded in the leave-book, which book is directed by Article 733 (14) to be kept by the master-at-arms. It appears to be customary for a separate leave-book for Marines to be kept by the senior non-commissioned officer. If it is desirable that this book should be distinct from that kept by the master-at-arms, instructions to this effect might be given.

42. The leave-books are, for the most part, kept unsatisfactorily and incorrectly. In very many instances the checks in them do not correspond with those in the ledger, although they are directed to be entered from them into the ledger.

43. The only instructions on this head are for the master-at-arms "to keep the leave-book," and this only contains the names of men on leave. It would be better, in our opinion, if this were to be an "absent-book," containing, in addition to the above, the names of all men absent without leave, and of men remaining on shore at their homes, under the advice of the surgeon, sick at hospital, or out of the ship from any other cause, and whose provisions ought, in consequence, to be checked.

44. Only persons who go "on leave upwards of 48 hours" are checked, in accordance with Article 1,597 (4) of the Admiralty Instructions, but it appears worth consideration whether this might not be altered to "48 hours' leave and upwards," as directed by Article 733 (15).

45. There is reason to believe that the crews of British men-of-war are the only class of persons known who are paid the value of provisions which they have not consumed owing to their being on leave of absence.

46. We would also draw attention to one of the anomalies in the victualling. Taking the three accounts before us of the Royal Adelaide, Excellent, and Cambridge, we find the proportion of biscuit is 321,762 lb., of which only 1,753 lb. were actually issued, or only a consumption of one-half per cent.; and that was to prisoners who had no option but to take it, as it is so laid down in the Regulations. The question arises, Why should the crews of harbour ships not be supplied with soft bread, which they do want, instead of with biscuit, which they do not want? The Duke of Wellington is not included in the above, because it has been the practice for the last twelve years to make soft bread on board. It might be supplied either from the victualling yards or by contract cheaper and better than men can obtain it for themselves, or by authorising canteens similar to those which afford so much satisfaction and comfort to the Marines in barracks.

47. We have been informed by the Accountant-General that the question of the audit of the victualling accounts, as conducted in his Department, is not committed to us to investigate and report on, but is to be left for him to deal with personally; but we would venture to observe that the books and accounts which are the foundation of the victualling account are kept by the master-at-arms and ship's steward respectively, and are not sent into office for inspection; so that if these books are incorrect, it is clear that the accounts themselves must be wrong, although accepted in office. It is in this way that the accounts of the Cambridge came to be passed as correct, although rendered so inaccurately.

48. As before observed, the audit of the victualling accounts now relies upon data obtained from these books, which, being retained on shipboard, are not subjected to examination in office; so that if the deductions drawn from them are incorrect, no method now exists of discovering it, either by comparing in office the original documents with the victualling account rendered, or by inspecting them on shipboard by a gentleman from the Accountant-General's Department. Probably great advantage would arise from the adoption of either of these systems; that is to say, for these books being sent into office from the Home Ports, or for a local inspection to be frequently had recourse to.

49. Few of the victualling-books and none of the leave-books that have come under our inspection would have been kept as they have been, had it been thought likely they would have been called for at the Admiralty, or subjected to inspection by some one from that office.

50. It would appear as if the audit were too closely confined to an examination of figures only; for example, no practical person, looking at the entries in the savings vouchers of H.M.S. Cambridge that have come under our notice, but would have seen that they were "cooked accounts," or were, at any rate, so suspicious that a personal inspection of the books from which they were compiled was necessary before they were passed as correct. Again, if a ship's account for a whole commission fail to show any officer or man on leave for 48 hours, it seems to us that it would be sufficient to excite attention and call for inquiry. Much might be done by practical examination of accounts outside the present audit.

51. If, for example, one ship at a home port shows no general leave among the ship's company throughout the year, while other ships enter regular leave at certain periods, we may presume that the accounts of the one ship are at fault, and attention being officially called to this would serve to prevent similar omissions being attempted in other ships. A comparison of the accounts of different ships by practical examination would do much to prevent irregularities, which are carried on as "the custom of the ship" for many years, and escape detection.

52. There is reason for believing that the steps which were taken on the discovery of the Cambridge frauds, supplemented by the examination in office of other ships' victualling accounts, has already been productive of great good, in drawing the attention of the executive officers to the importance of leave-books as a record, and to the imperfect way in which they have generally been kept. It has also caused paymasters to review their position, and examine the victualling accounts with more care before transmitting them into office.

53. Having this in view, we would suggest for consideraation whether advantage might not arise from the present No. 12 Branch of the Accountant-General's Department being supplemented by a paymaster-in-chief or paymaster, an Admiralty clerk and a ship's steward being appointed to examine the accounts of ships and compare them with the ships' stewards' books and leave-books, in the same manner that we have been employed. If the accounts are honestly rendered and correct, the examination of each ship's account would take but a short time, and they would then pass into the victualling-accounts branch, for further clerical examination. We are disposed to think that if this were tried for a year, the result would probably be a continuance of the method. By sending for each ship's books as required, as has been done in this case, it would tend to keep all on the alert, and it would not be necessary to examine in this way all accounts for every quarter. When anything in the accounts is not clear to the examiners, and the ship is at a home port, we would suggest that, instead of endeavouring to clear up the matter by correspondence, it should be done by proceeding on board the ship, and making personal inquiry on the spot.

*54. Article 1,666 (2) of the Admiralty Instructions directs that savings of fresh meat and vegetables in ships on Channel and foreign service are not to be paid beyond one-third of the ration, in order to prevent injury to the health of the men while on fresh-meat victualling. It has incidentally come under our notice that this order has not always had the effect intended.

55. It has happened that the officers' messes having left for savings the greater part of their fresh meat has caused the proportion of one-third of the total quantity saved to be exceeded, and official attention from the Accountant-General's Department has been drawn to this being contrary to the Instructions.

*56. In consequence, general authority to have one or two salt-meat days per week has been asked for, and obtained, under Article 1,600, not for the purpose of eating the salt meat, but for leaving it as savings, and thereby eluding the order in question, which it does at the cost of additional figures for entry and examination in the victualling accounts.

*57. As it appears the individual messes are not checked in office to prevent their leaving more than the due proportion, so long as it is not exceeded in the aggregate, and as it is seen it can be evaded as above described, we would suggest for consideration whether this order might not be rescinded; and also Article 1,600, authorising the issue of salt meat in harbour when fresh meat is to be obtained, as it cannot be so desirable for consumption as fresh meat, and is far more expensive; while, now that savings of this article are allowed to be paid for, it is unnecessary for the purpose of adding to the savings. If this Article be rescinded, the Regulations would stand as directed at Article 1,599, and at Appendix, page 753, of the Admiralty Instructions, viz., that "whenever practicable, ships are to be supplied with fresh meat and vegetables." If Article 1,666 (2) be retained, or if modified in the form directed by Board Minute of June 23, 1882, officers' messes will be compelled to take up two-thirds of their allowance of fresh meat, which may cost the Crown eightpence a pound, even when it might suit them better to be paid for it at the savings price of fourpence a pound. It would be considered a boon by the crews of her Majesty's ships if split peas for soup were supplied one day in each week when on fresh-meat victualling. At present this article is only supplied with salt pork, and it is probable that on this account H.M.S. Duke of Wellington now claims in the victualling account one day's salt meat per week, although a harbour ship.

58. As requested by the Accountant-General's minute of Jan. 23 last, we have perused the reports received from the Commanders-in-Chief at the Home Ports as to the means taken to ensure the checking of officers and men on the ships' books when proceeding on leave, and we find that in scarcely any instance is the leave-book treated as the document from which the checks are to be entered into the ship's ledger, although it is from the entries in the leave-book that the paymaster is directed to check the provisions of men absent. The custom has grown up for a "victual and check-book" to be made up in the ship's office, and the checks entered into the ledger from this book, instead of from the original leave-book. In no instance have we seen the abstract of leave filled in for which a form is ruled at the commencement of the leave-book.

59. It is difficult for us to suggest what means should be adopted to ensure the leave-book being kept correctly by the ship's police, as it is rather a question for the executive. In one ship it is stated that during the whole commission no officer or man was absent upwards of 48 hours, which it is difficult to realise. In another, that it had been the "usage of the ship" up to the present for the provisions to be issued (or savings paid) when men were absent on long leave. In some, the usual Christmas leave of from six to ten days each man was either entered imperfectly, or not at all. Directions will have to be given for the proper keeping of this book, and for its correctness to be certified daily by the commanding officer.

60. And we would also make the following suggestions:—(1.) The present form of abstract of leave is understood to be for the guidance of the executive officer; but if it is not used, as appears by the leave-books that have come under our notice, it may be abolished. (2.) The leave-book should only contain the names of all persons who ought to be checked of their provisions, and a column should be added after "remarks" for "number of days." This column should be totalled every month in the ship's office, and compared monthly by the accountant officer with the checks in the mess-book, and at the end of the quarter with the checks in the ledger. The addition of the column would render the comparison of this book an easy matter, and most useful as a check upon the correctness of the entries in the ledger. The leave-book should then be considered a permanent record, and treated as such. (3.) Art. 1,714 (2) of the Admiralty Instructions directs the ship's steward to record the issues in the daily account-book at the time of their being made, and not to use any rough-issue book or slate; but the size of the present daily account-book, and the difficulty of taking pen and ink at all times on deck, especially in bad weather, have made the use of a rough-issue book universal and necessary. We would therefore suggest that such a book should be admitted, and supplied, with pages numbered; that it should be examined by the accountant officer, with the daily account-book, and be retained in his custody, in the same manner that the other victualling books are now directed to be kept. We attach great importance to this recommendation. (4.) Article 1,717 states that the mess-book is for the entry of the quantities of every article of provisions taken up or saved daily by each mess, but the form of the book is printed only for provisions daily issued. It would tend to uniformity and correctness in keeping this book, if the words "or saved" were cancelled. (5.) The victualling account, Form S. 90, and the clothing account, Form S. 107, have now been amalgamated in one Form, S. 90, Form S. 107 being abolished as a separate form. As some of the Regulations apply equally to the victualling and the clothing sections of the account, it appears desirable that chapter 43, on Victualling Instructions, should be cancelled, and a new chapter written, which should include all recent alterations and approved suggestions affecting it. (6.) We think it would be desirable that the words "with care and diligence, and that he is sober, trustworthy, industrious, and fully competent in every way for the duties of his situation," which are now printed on the certificates (Form S. 120) of the ship's stewards and their assistants, should be omitted, and the character to be awarded left to the discretion of the officer who signs the certificate, and inserted in his own handwriting. It might often happen that a paymaster would hesitate to strike out words of commendation already printed which he would not feel justified in inserting himself; and this idea seems to be recognised in the Admiralty directions for certain parts of the certificates of officers being in the handwriting of the officer signing them. A duplicate of the certificates given to ship's stewards and assistants should be forwarded to the director of victualling for his information. (7.) Article 1,713 of the Admiralty Instructions directs the daily account, weekly account, numbers and contents, and mess-books to be kept by the accountant officer; and Article 1,714 (2) states that the issues are to be recorded by the ship's steward in detail in the daily account-book. We would suggest the insertion of instructions authorising these books being kept by the ship's steward under the superintendence of the accountant officer, and directing all other victualling accounts to be kept by the accountant officer himself.

61. With respect to 60 (2), it would probably be considered by the executive desirable to record the usual night leave, or other short leave, in a "gangway book," but this book would not be required for any purpose connected with the victualling.

62. The certificate on the first page of the ledger seems to need amendment on this point. It now says that the entries have been verified by the leave-book. It would be more to the purpose were it to state that all the entries in the leave-book have been posted from it into the ledger.

63. The Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth considers that sufficient care is now exercised in keeping and supervising the leave-checks. It should be recollected that this opinion is formed from the reports received from each captain as to the amount of care exercised on board his own ship; but some of these reports transmitted by him state the fact that the checks for long leave have not been entered at all, while nearly all of them show that they were not entered into the ledger direct from the leave-book, as directed by the Instructions. The Commander-in Chief at Devonport considers that very much depends upon the ship's police for the correct checking of men, and is unable to report decidedly whether sufficient care is exercised in keeping and supervising the records of leave without a searching inquiry on board each ship. He does not think it practicable to record in the leave-book the names of all men going on nightly leave, because only two leave-books are allowed for the year; and he suggests that the leave-book should contain:—1. An abstract of all leave granted. (2.) Names of men checked on account of absence without leave. (3.) Names of men granted more than 48 hours' leave, involving their being checked in the ship's books. (4.) And that the established allowance of leave-books be increased. The Commander-in-Chief at Sheerness considers that the records of leave are left too much to the chief of the police. The remedies that suggest themselves, he states, vary with the circumstances of sea-going, harbour, depôt ships, and naval barracks. He recommends that the question should be considered by a small committee, and that inquiry might be made into some of the automatic arrangements in use in various manufacturing establishments, which record actual time when men leave and return, and which might possibly be used to supplement the present system, for which the chief of the police is primarily responsible. The Admiral Superintendent of Naval Reserve suggests that the chief of the police should attend at the ship's office at nine o'clock every morning, with a list of absentees, or of men granted 48 hours' leave.

64. It was in 1871 that authority was given for men absent on leave for less than 48 hours not to be checked. This, we are informed, was the first official recognition of not checking all leave on the ships' books. We see no reason why all persons absent 24 hours and upwards should not be checked of their provisions.

65. By Article 733 (15), directions are given for ensuring those who have been granted "48 hours' leave and upwards" being duly checked for their provisions; but by Article 1,597, those are to be checked who are "absent from their ships on leave upwards of 48 hours." The former Regulation was authorised by a circular in 1881, and it is probable that the latter wording is due to inadvertence; but as a great deal of the leave is for 48 hours, it makes an important difference, and if so ruled, it would considerably increase the numbers checked, both of officers and men.

66. It would materially assist in the comparison of the victualling in the mess-book with that of the ledger, if columns were added to the former book for number on ship's books and ratings. At the column "date of commencing victualling" should be added, "and whence," so that a man may be at once traced, whether he is from another ship, or only from another mess in the same ship. And we would suggest that directions should be given forbidding unnecessary changing from one mess to another, except on the 1st of the month. This would remove a frequent cause of the discrepancies which occur in the victualling.

67. In carrying out the Instructions, Article 748 (2), leave tickets are granted to men going on leave for more than 48 hours. It would greatly assist the verification of leave, if these tickets were issued in future numbered, and with a counterfoil, as in a cheque-book. These tickets should always be made out in the ship's office, and never, as is generally the case, by the ship's police.

68. By this means, the men going on leave would be known in the ship's office in the first instance, instead of being wholly dependent upon the information furnished by the ship's police. Liberty tickets should be initialled in the ship's office, before being signed by the executive officer.

69. The Excellent reported that, up to the present, it had not been the custom to check men absent on the usual Christmas leave; and if the ledgers in office were consulted, it would probably be found that this practice has been the rule rather than the exception. In a ship such as the Excellent class, this would represent an over-payment for savings of about £160.

70. The returns from the Home Ports concur in stating that the leave-book for officers is compiled from the official application for leave of absence (Form S. 259) directed to be forwarded to the Commander-in-Chief; but the Admiralty Instructions, Article 1,597 (3), direct a list to be kept of all officers absent from a ship upwards of 48 hours, which should include officers absent from other causes, including sickness, absence on committees, on other duty, or not required for duty. If an absence book were kept, as directed in the Instructions, instead of only a record of leave granted by the Commander-in-Chief, it is probable many checks would be found in the ledger which do not now appear, the messman having the benefit of their omission.—We are, Sir, your obedient servants,

G. P. Martin.

SPECTACLES v. BLINDNESS.—"Spectacles can only be perfectly adjusted by those having a thorough knowledge of the anatomy of the eye, combined with optical experience."—We have the highest medical authorities confirmed by daily experience, that imperfect glasses, together with the haphazard plan of selection generally employed by the mere vendor, is the cause of most cases of blindness and defective vision. Sir Julius Benedict writes:—"I have tried the principal opticians in London without success, but the spectacles you have adapted suit admirably. The clearness of your glasses as compared with others is really surprising." The Rev. Professor W. A. Hales, M.A. Cantab., 2 Minford Gardens, West Kensington Park, writes:—"The spectacles are perfect, and a most decided boon. I had occasion on Monday to write to Lord ——, and took the opportunity to mention your name and the wonderful power of your spectacles." Dr. Bird, Chelmsford, writes:—"I could not have believed it possible that my sight could have been so much improved and relieved at my age (82). I can now read the smallest type, although suffering from cataract on the right eye." Testimonials from Earl and Countess Lindsay; F. D. Dixon Hartland, Esq., M.P.; the Venerable Archdeacon Palmer, Clifton; Rev. Mother Abbess, St. Mary's Abbey, Mill Hill, Hendon; C. J. Alford, Esq., Gas Light and Coke Company, Horseferry Road, Westminster, &c. Mr. HENRY LAURANCE, F.S.S., Oculist Optician, 39 OLD BOND STREET, W. (late 3 Endsleigh Gardens, Euston Square), personally adapts his Improved Spectacles daily (Saturdays excepted), from 10 to 5. Special arrangements are made for invalids and others unable to wait on Mr. Laurance. Pamphlet, "Spectacles: their Use and Abuse," post free. City Branch, 6 Poultry, Cheapside.

Grouse Disease. By Dr. Duncan MacDonald. (W. H. Allen and Co.)

Some few months hence, when the London season has unwillingly expired, and both Houses of Parliament are clamouring for the moors, there will, as a matter of course, be a rush to the Highland shootings, and those who join in it might do worse than force into their knapsacks copies of Dr. MacDonald's work on grouse disease. They will there find some valuable hints as to the causes and remedies of this puzzling malady, and some very interesting information as to the extraordinary demand for moors which now exists in Scotland, and the unprecedented increase in the amount of yearly rents which are cheerfully submitted to. For example, in 1836 the shootings of Glen Urquhart were let for £100, they now produce a rental of about £2,000. The Glen Morison Moors were rented in 1835 for £100. They now bring in nearly £3,000. In fact, in the counties of Perth, Inverness, and Ross, Highland properties have doubled in value within the last forty-five years. The Duke of Sutherland's extensive shootings and forests, which are so well known, are already all let. It is a remarkable fact that fifty years ago the very names of the greater part of the places which now fetch fabulous prices were unheard of beyond their own immediate neighbourhood, and the game made no return whatever to the proprietor of the land. Since then, rents have gone on steadily increasing. The author of this treatise mentions a very interesting fact bearing upon the past and present prices obtained for Highland shootings. The late Mr. Snowie, of Inverness, had been in the habit for years of publishing an advertisement-sheet of places to be let. His first list was published in 1836. It contained only eight advertisements, but the demand for shootings in the North has become so great, that there are hardly any now in the market, although higher and higher rents are given year after year; and, moreover, the moors and forests are now taken so much on lease, that there will be fewer to be let by the season hereafter. In short, it will be difficult to get any by the season. These facts afford conclusive evidence of the attraction offered by the northern moors; but yet there are not a few drawbacks, the most important being the prevalence of grouse disease. Dr. MacDonald takes a rather reassuring view of this insidious malady; he refuses to believe that it is a mystery incapable of solution, but, on the contrary, thinks that the moors are in many cases sacrificed by carelessness, indifference, and the unwise policy of destroying all birds and beasts of prey alike, and by not burning the old heather periodically. Another vicious practice is the mismanagement of the grouse ranges, by allowing the growth of unwholesome food for the birds, and "upsetting the organisation of nature, instead of being guided by her unerring laws." The author impresses upon his readers that inasmuch as grouse are found only on moors, feeding almost entirely on heather and wild-grass seeds, it becomes obvious that it is downright necessary that the moorlands should be properly managed, by keeping the evergreen shrub in sound condition. This is chiefly effected by judicious draining of the wet land and burning the old heather. It is also to be observed that grouse never hatch in long heather, if they can avoid it, neither do they lie in it. The author affords a good deal of information as to the advantages of burning wild plants, the proper drainage of grouse lands, and the experiments tried from time to time as to improving the stock of grouse by the introduction of new strains of blood, effected by exchanging their eggs. This is, however, an operation which requires particular care, as otherwise the sitting birds may be scared. Dr. MacDonald draws the particular attention of all true sportsmen to a great and growing evil in the management of moors. It is the erection of miles upon miles of wire fences, especially when made entirely of iron. Grouse in their flight do not always see them, and are killed in large numbers. Old birds know them, but young ones run against them, and are literally decimated. In the fifth and sixth chapters of his treatise, the author enters most fully into the question of grouse disease, its causes and remedies, citing the rival theories that have been propounded, and arguing the whole question from point to point. Dr. MacDonald's treatise possesses the merit of being instructive, as well as entertaining. It is written in a sparkling, cheery style, which can scarcely fail to bring before the reader's imagination what the author so cleverly describes.

The Edinburgh Review for the April quarter contains a very interesting paper, in which is noticed the recently-published work by Jules Simon, "Dieu, Patrie, Liberté." The writer observes that the most important result of the policy of the nineteenth century, as affecting the intercourse of nations, is that for nearly seventy years the ancient hostility of France and England has ceased, that they have been united for the most part by cordial ties, that the two States have followed in the main the same broad lines of conduct and have defended the same liberal principles; that their arms, which had been opposed for ages in frequent and desolating warfare, have been united on more than one field of battle, always in defence of the liberties of Europe; and that when transient difficulties have arisen, they have been overcome by mutual consideration and forbearance. Having by these observations proved that in discussing the political state of France he was actuated by no unfriendly spirit, the same writer proceeds to point out how signally she has failed to attain permanently the objects she had in view, prosperity, freedom, and good government, and to inquire into the causes of this failure. A retrospective view of the vicissitudes of the past century, during which France has lived under three forms of constitutional monarchy, three Empires and three Republics, shows plainly that none of them possessed the elements of stability, and that each of them perished more by its own faults than by the fault of the people. "It is a curious characteristic of France that she has been singularly submissive to the worst Governments, but fractious and insubordinate to the best; while, at the present time, the great majority of the nation would rather submit to almost any form of government, than pay the price of another revolution." During the course of his observations, the Edinburgh reviewer sketches in striking colours the career of M. Gambetta, a man "too much lauded by his adherents, too much feared by his opponents, too much honoured in opportunitate mortis. He was a man of low extraction, more of Italian than French in character, imperfectly educated, and of a coarse, sensual nature. But he had the energy and impetuosity of the Southern races. He obtained notoriety just before the fall of the Empire by a vehement harangue at the Bar, and on the universal collapse of men and institutions which followed the siege of Paris he sprang into fame; he escaped in a balloon, and from Tours exercised a dictatorship over France; he succeeded in prolonging the war, he organised resistance in the Departments of the West, but he entirely failed in his design to raise the siege of Paris, and some of his measures only enhanced the misfortunes of the country. Yet he unquestionably showed an undaunted patriotism, and his spirit in a great emergency, joined to remarkable gifts of popular eloquence, made him the most conspicuous personage in France." In referring to the state of the French Army, a subject imperfectly known to the world, the reviewer mentions some interesting facts, amongst others, the extraordinary effect produced on the population by the law of compulsory and universal service. It has produced, instead of an army eager and ready for war, an army and a people passionately desirous of peace,—a result which has singularly enervated France. The popular demand embodied in a Bill now before the Chambers is the reduction of the service to three years, and the suppression of all exemptions and limitations in favour of the educated classes. Even the priest would have to shoulder his rifle for three years, and, from 21 to 24, every man in France would have to live in barracks. This law of conscription takes the lawyer, the priest, the doctor, the artist, the man of letters and of thought, to make him a common soldier in the very years in which his training for a career in civil life depends; and still, the army must be a bad one. For an army of three-years men have been declared by the highest military authorities to be one which could never attain to perfection. M. Jules Simon thus declares his opinion on this question:—"We want soldiers that shall be soldiers to protect us against our enemies without and our enemies within. It was supposed that a good soldier was a man who knew his drill, who could shoot straight, and ride and march and run. That was a mistake; a soldier requires more than dexterity and strength; he wants the soul of military life, which is the creation of habit. Without that, our Army is a band of schoolboys or a Militia." The reviewer in the Edinburgh proceeds to discuss at some length the question of the foreign policy of the recent French Administration, and several other interesting subjects which we have not space to notice.

Colburn's United Service Magazine. (Simpkin, Marshall and Co.)—The editor in the current number concludes his practical and sensible article, "Money's Worth in Our Army." He proposes a reduction in numbers and an increase of strength in our Line battalions, with a slight alteration in the rank of the officers. Each regiment would form a war battalion, consisting of four service companies and a depôt company, commanded by a colonel, with a lieutenant-colonel as second-in-command. The five companies would have a major, a captain, and two lieutenants apiece, with the usual staff. He argues, very justly, that 520—the strength of some battalions—is quite inadequate, as, when the sick, absentees, men on duty, servants, band, &c., are deducted, a corps of that description cannot put one-half its number on parade. In the "Navies of the World" we have an excellent paper descriptive of what our German cousins are doing in the ironclad line, which is followed by the continuation of the "Historical Records of the Household Cavalry," which brings these annals down to the battle of the Boyne. Here we are told, in a fresh, pleasant style, all that happened on that eventful day, when two kings in person, each at the head of an army, fought for three kingdoms. This article is alike an entertaining and an instructive one. Lieut. Low, R.N., gives a description of "Naval and Military Peerages;" while the "Infantry Battle Tactics," "The Major's Ghost Story," "Military Forces of the Balkan Peninsula," "Editorial Notes," and "Record of Naval and Military Events," make up a most readable number.

Capt. S. Edge, R.M.L.I., has been appointed to the temporary charge of the military gymnasium in the Chatham District.

Epps's Cocoa.—Grateful and Comforting.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Made simply with boiling water or milk. FRIDAY EVENING.

WAR OFFICE, PALL MALL, May 4, 1883.

ARMY.

STAFF.

Col. C. J. Tyler, R.A., to be a Col. on the Staff, to command the Royal Artillery in the Northern District, vice Col. P. Bedingfeld, R.A., who has been placed on the Unemployed Full-Pay List (April 17).

Lieut. G. P. B. Molyneux, the Duke of Wellington's (West Riding Regt.), has been appointed Aide-de-Camp to Major-Gen. R. White, C.B., commanding the Troops in the Eastern District (Oct. 16, 1882).

African Commissariat—Assist.-Comy. J. J. Crooks to be Deputy-Comy., vice J. C. Gore, seconded (April 1).

BREVET.

Capt. and Brevet Major V. D. Mathias, R.M.A., to be Lieut.-Col., in recognition of his services during the attack on the Forts of Alexandria on July 11, 1882 (July 11, 1882).

INDIA OFFICE, May 4, 1883.

The following appointment to his personal Staff has been made by the Governor of Bombay:—Capt. J. Boyle, Royal Irish Fusiliers, to be Aide-de-Camp, vice Capt. H. J. Fergusson, Rifle Brigade, who has resigned his appointment (March 30).

The following appointments have been made to the Staff of the Army in Madras:—Major J. G. R. D. Macneill, Madras Infantry, to be a Deputy-Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen., vice Capt. W. A. Yule, appointed Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen. (Dec. 17, 1882); Major A. Chaplin, Madras Infantry, to be Deputy-Judge-Advocate, vice Col. Hands, appointed Judge-Advocate-Gen. (Jan. 7, 1882).

The appointment of Major St. V. A. Hammick, Oxfordshire Light Infantry, to be a Garrison-Instructor, has effect from Oct. 31, 1882, and not as stated in the London Gazette of Jan. 5, 1883.

The Queen has approved of the following admissions to the Staff Corps made by the Governments in India:—

BENGAL STAFF CORPS.

To be Lieutenants:—Lieuts. A. H. Wilmer, from the York and Lancaster Regt. (dated Aug. 23, 1881, but to rank from Oct. 6, 1876); F. B. W. Richardson, from the Lincolnshire Regt. (dated Aug. 16, 1880, but to rank from May 17, 1879); T. G. Johnson, from the Wiltshire Regt. (dated March 30, 1881, but to rank from June 9, 1879); J. B. Edwards, from the Liverpool Regt. (dated Nov. 27, 1881, but to rank March 11, 1880); G. F. Rowcroft, from the Dorsetshire Regt. (dated Nov. 16, 1881, but to rank from July 1, 1881).

BOMBAY STAFF CORPS.

To be Lieutenants:—Lieut. C. E. Peirse, from the 1st West India Regt. (dated Dec. 19, 1879, but to rank from Nov. 13, 1875); 2nd Lieut. P. H. Saulez, from the Royal Munster Fusiliers (May 10, 1880); Lieuts. R. W. Sherard, from the East Yorkshire Regt. (dated Sept. 24, 1881, but to rank from July 1, 1881; W. J. R. Wickham, from the Manchester Regt. (dated Nov. 30, 1881, but to rank from July 1, 1881).

The special correspondent of the Daily News, writing on the eve of the departure of Gen. Hicks from Khartoum up the White Nile, says:—"The men attached to the six Nordenfelts who joined us last week under Capt. Walker seemed to know nothing whatever of their drill. The practice was absurd. They ran against each other, scattered the ammunition all over the ground, and made several very wild shots at a target they did not hit. We steamed down at daybreak to see their practice, which at Cairo was declared to be admirable; but Gen. Hicks stopped it, and sent them to perpetual drill."

The following additional Instructions, connected with the working of General Orders 51 and 52 of 1883 (musketry), have been issued from the War Office by the Adjt.-Gen. of the Forces, Lord Wolseley:—"With cavalry the volley and independent firings should be carried out as laid down for infantry, except that cavalry (as long as they are armed with the carbine) when firing volleys at 300 yards, and at independent firing at 400 yards, should be in single rank (kneeling). In the case of both recruits and trained soldiers who are transferred from one regiment or battalion to another regiment or battalion, or from one troop or company to another troop or company, and who, on the date of their transfer, have not concluded their recruits' course, or their annual course, their performances in target and judging-distance practice will be transferred with them, and will be shown only on the returns of their new regiment, battalion, troop, or company."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL.—ITS UNEQUALLED EFFICACY IN CONSUMPTION AND DISEASES OF THE CHEST.—The Medical Profession of all countries now consider Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil as incomparably the most valuable remedy for consumption and diseases of the chest. No remedy so rapidly restores the exhausted strength, improves the nutritive functions, stops emaciation, checks the perspiration, quiets the cough and expectoration, or produces a more marked and favourable influence on the local malady. Dr. Waudby, Physician to the Hereford Infirmary, writes:—"I can take Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil without any difficulty or dislike, and with as little inconvenience as water alone. Not only in my own case, but in many others I have seen, it has caused an improvement of chest symptoms and an increase of weight, so soon and so lastingly, as to be quite remarkable. I believe Dr. de Jongh's Oil to be the most valuable remedy we possess for chronic and constitutional disease." Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil is sold only in capsuled imperial half-pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s; with his stamp and signature and the signature of his sole Consignees on the capsule and the label under wrapper, by all Chemists. Sole Consignees, Ansar, Harford, and Co., 77 Strand, London.

ARMY NOTES.

The Government of India have obtained a ruling from the Secretary of State for India, regarding the appointment of officers of British regiments in India as adjutants of Volunteer corps. It has been decided that no officer above the rank of captain may be proposed for such an appointment, and that all officers appointed may be called on to vacate on promotion to the substantive rank of major, and be absorbed in the strength of their regiments.

The Bombay Gazette says:—"We hear a great deal about the anxiety of everybody that the native soldier should shoot better, yet one very obvious remedy appears to be overlooked, and that is to give him more practice ammunition. He fires in the course of the year 110 rounds of ball ammunition, which is thus divided:—Individual firing, 63 rounds; volley firing, 5; firing at a moving object, 5; field firing, 17; special collective firing, 10; matches, 10. Now, experience has pretty well proved that the special collective firing and the firing at the moving object are not attended with any great practical results; and if the rounds thus expended, namely, 15, were added to the 10 already allowed for matches, the sepoy would have 25 rounds per annum at his disposal with which to improve his skill in firing. We think if this were conceded, a great improvement would be apparent in the men's shooting. Regimental rifle clubs are most useful institutions, and they are established in most regiments now, but they labour under the great disadvantage of having to pay heavily for ammunition, and having to give a great number of prizes to induce the men to shoot. We think our suggestion in regard to the better distribution of the ball ammunition is worth the attention of the authorities."

An examination for cadetships at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, will take place at the University of London, Burlington Gardens, W., by permission of the Senate, on Monday, June 25, 1883, and following days; the first day being devoted to the medical examination. The subjects of examination, the limits of age, and other conditions will be those specified in the Regulations issued with G. O. 113 of 1880. There will be 107 cadetships to be awarded in order of merit, of which 7 will be for West India regiments. Twelve cadetships will also be offered for competition by university candidates, as provided for in the Regulations. The successful competitors will be required to join the Royal Military College, as gentlemen cadets, on Sept. 1, 1883. Applications cannot be received unless made in strict accordance with the Regulations, May 15 next being the latest date on which applications can be received. Candidates who have been previously examined, should forward with their applications a certificate of good conduct for the intervening period. If intending competitors wish for any further information relative to the examination, they should apply by letter to the "Military Secretary," Horse Guards, War Office, S.W.

According to the Calcutta correspondent of the Times,—"The object of Sir Robert Sandeman's late visit to Simla was to discuss the proposed changes in the military outposts in Beloochistan, which is now in a partially settled state. It is expected that a temporary occupation of Gulistan, Kutch, and Kushdil will be effected, as soon as the troops are ready to move. The site for the central station in Pishin is still under consideration."

"One of Them" writes:—"I am under the impression that the field allowance to the British portion of the Indian Contingent was withheld because the Indian Government had it in contemplation to issue batta to the Contingent. We had our Indian establishments of servants, who had to be paid very high rates to leave India. The Contingent will, I think, be pretty disappointed if they do not get batta, especially after so successful a campaign."

Some experimental trials have been carried out at the School of Military Engineering, Chatham, with a new description of water-cart for the use of troops when on active service in the field, the invention of Capt. J. Jones, R.E., the same officer who has utilised balloons for carrying messages and information to troops engaged on active service. The new water-cart is composed of galvanised iron, 4 ft. in length, and 3½ ft. in width, the sides being 10 in. high, and the capacity of the whole 119 gallons. The advantages claimed for the invention are facility of cleaning, without dismantling or taking out the head, which, in the present service water-cart is seldom done, whereby there is an accumulation of vegetable and other matter, to the consequent deterioration of the health of the troops drinking the water. There are also greater facilities provided for filling water-bottles, by which waste of water is prevented, while the cart is also available for the transport of a pump, forage, &c. Experiments made with the tank forming the water-cart proved that the tank formed a good raft, capable of carrying a weight of 5 cwt., thus rendering it highly useful for that purpose when required to be so utilised.

A correspondent draws attention to the case of military bandsmen. In all the sweeping changes that have been made within the last few years, this unfortunate class has, he says, been totally, or almost totally, forgotten. "I will take, for example, the band of my own regiment. Besides the band-serjeant and corporal, we have two lance-corporals. One of the latter has 13 years' service, and the other very nearly as much. Both have held second-class certificates of education for the last eleven years, and have excellent characters. Behold the reward,—3d. per diem! We have several privates with services varying from three to 14 years, all very good characters, and mostly holding educational certificates, qualifying for any non-commissioned rank. Still, their pay is not a farthing more than any ordinary private soldier. Now that promotion is so rapid in the ranks of a Line regiment, it is naturally mortifying to bandsmen of good character to see younger, less intelligent, and more inexperienced soldiers promoted whilst they stand still. When Mr. Childers increased the pay of almost all ranks in the service, this neglected class was left out in the cold. But it is to be hoped that their claim to a little consideration will come forcibly before the eyes of the military reformers before long." Our correspondent has brought forward a grievance which undoubtedly deserves to be gone into.

We hear that this season the Russian clippers Vestnik and Plastoon and the Atlantic cruiser Africa will return home from the Pacific, being replaced by the half-armoured frigate Minin and the clippers Opritchnik and Razboinik. In the Mediterranean, the clippers Djigit and Zabiaka and the cruiser Asia will be replaced by the wooden frigate Svetlana, the corvette Bayan, and the clipper Strelok. The home squadrons will be made up as under:—The Evolution Squadron, commanded by Rear-Admiral Schmidt, the double-turret frigate Admiral Spiridoff, the floating battery Ne Tron Menya, the ironclad turreted gunboat Smertch, the monitors Bronenosetz and Latkin, the gunboats Ersh, Grad, and Tutcha, and eight torpedo cutters. The Artillery Squadron will comprise the batteries Pervenetz and Kreml, the turreted gunboat Rusalka, the monitor Lava, and the gunboats Vikhr and Stchit. The Torpedo Squadron will consist of the three-turret ironclad frigate Admiral Lazareff, the battery Tcharodaika, the clippers Isumrud and Jemtchong, the sea-going torpedo boat Vzrif, the gunboat Opeet, and eight torpedo cutters. A new feature in connection with this squadron this year will be the appointment to it of the steamer Vladimir, fitted up as a floating workshop, to undertake repairs. The Marine School Squadron will be made up of the corvettes Askold, Bogatyr, and Variag, the sailing clippers Boyarin and Giliak, the schooner Zabava, and the tenders Gorlitza and Cadet. All the squadrons will rendezvous at Cronstadt during the Coronation.

"Sapo Carbonis Detergens" is a physician's name for a remedy prescribed for the past quarter of a century for every variety of skin disease. The public have found that as a preventive of small-pox, scarlet fever, and measles, it is unequalled. See that the Latin name described above, and the words "Wright, Southwark," are on each wrapper, and branded on each tablet, without which none is genuine.

NAVAL NOTES.

The under-named men have been awarded the medal for long service and good conduct:—James Clift, chief capt. of the forecastle, of the Adelaide; William Tickell, boatman, of the Coastguard; Charles Wright, boatman, of the Coastguard; Herman Piggeley, stoker, of the Valorous; George Lord, tailor, of the Agincourt; Richard Benson, serjeant, of the Tourmaline; William Hillen, corpl., R.M.A., of the Woodlark; John Henry J. Smith, capt. of the forecastle, of the Boadicea.

The Admiralty have awarded the Lieutenant's Naval Pension of £50 a year, vacant by the death of Retired Commander Robert Amyett Newman, to Commander Charles Arthur Lodder, on the reserved list.

The following engineering appointments, already announced in these columns as about to be made, are ordered to take effect from May 1:—Mr. A. J. Durston, chief engineer, and Mr. R. H. Barrett, assistant to chief engineer, will go to Portsmouth from Sheerness; and will be succeeded at Sheerness by Mr. A. Morcom and Mr. J. T. Corner, from Portsmouth. Mr. Richard Sennett, first assistant to the chief engineer at Devonport, and Mr. T. Soper, lecturer on engineering at Greenwich, have been appointed to assist the engineer-in-chief at the Admiralty; and Mr. Charles Rudd, of Greenwich College, will proceed to Devonport.

The Russian Admiralty has issued an order this week that the furnaces of the sea-going torpedo steamer Batoum, which was added to the Black Sea Fleet a short time ago, are to be altered so as to adapt them to be heated by petroleum refuse, instead of coal. In a few days' time, the Batoum and Baku Railway will be regularly opened for traffic, and this fuel, which is as cheap as dirt at Baku, and is often thrown into the sea as waste, will then be conveyed to Batoum in tank cars, for the use of steamers there. All the steamers in the Caspian use the petroleum refuse as fuel, and it promises to become the fuel of the Black Sea Fleet, if the experiments on the Batoum are satisfactory. The fuel has the immense advantage of requiring no stoking, making no dirt, and being under control like gas.

Lord Alcester presented on Saturday last the Egyptian medal and star to the officers and men of the Royal Marine Artillery who served through the Egyptian campaign.

For some time past a commission has been sitting at the Russian Admiralty for the purpose of reorganising the personnel of the Navy. It is now confidently stated that the commission has decided upon recommending to the Government the adoption of the following scale of officers for the fleet:—Six vice-admirals, 12 rear-admirals, 300 captains of the first and second category, 500 lieutenants, and 325 midshipmen. The rank of lieutenant-captain is recommended to be abolished, and the existing officers of that grade made captains of the second category. Lieutenants are to serve four years afloat before being made second-class captains. They are to be of two grades, and if on reaching the age of 48 they have served the specified term afloat, are to be retired and pensioned. The number of midshipmen to join the fleet every year is fixed at 51.

Lieut. Francis G. T. Cole, of the Briton, has been sentenced to be fined the sum of £20, or three months' imprisonment, by the Cape of Good Hope resident magistrate, for boarding the Russian man-of-war Plastoun, before pratique was granted by the port officer, and for leaving the ship again when forbidden by that officer, notwithstanding that Lieut. Cole was officer of the guard at the time. Surely this action of the civil authority is in excess of its powers.

The Russian Admiralty have decided in principle upon limiting the age of rear-admirals on service afloat to 63, and in the administrative service to 65. The limits of age of vice-admirals are fixed respectively at 65 and 68. It is not intended, however, to apply the regulation practically for some time to come. The limits of age fixed for captains of the second rank, 54, and for captains of the first rank, 57, are expected, on the other hand, to be enforced without delay.

The Sphinx, a composite paddle-vessel of 1,130 tons, recently launched from Messrs. Green's yard, at Blackwall, and intended for service in the Persian Gulf, was taken for her six hours' full-power trial between Sheerness and the Gull Light ships on Wednesday. The engines, which are of the compound-oscillating] type, were constructed by Messrs. John Penn and Son, of Greenwich, and during the whole of the trial worked in a satisfactory manner. There was an entire absence of priming, and no hot bearings. The contract indicated horse-power is 1,000, but a mean power of 1,138 was obtained with the greatest ease; the pressure of steam was 74·8, vacuum, 26·5, mean revolutions 35, and speed of vessel 12·633. The consumption of fuel was 1·85 lb. per 1-horse power per hour. The engineer contractors were represented by Mr. John Penn and Mr. G. F. Fairles, who conducted the trial; the Steam Reserve by Mr. F. H. Hodd, R.N., Chief Inspector of Machinery; and the Dockyard by Mr. A. J. Durston, R.N., Chief Engineer.

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS.—The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks, avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies, are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda water, will be found the least objectionable. Eno's Fruit Salt is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the powers of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use Eno's Fruit Salt, therefore no family should ever be without it. CAUTION.—Legal Rights are protected in every Civilised Country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d. Directions, in Sixteen Languages, how to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at Eno's Fruit Salt Works, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. Eno's Patent.

Printed and Published for the Proprietors, at the Office, No. 16 Wellington Street, Strand, London.—Saturday, May 5, 1883. Letters on business and Remittances should be made to Mr. Richard James Wood.

THE vaunted schemes of Army Reform which were inaugurated on July 1, 1881, have undoubtedly failed. There is no use in any longer denying, or attempting to explain away, failures, the proofs of which are so many and so evident. When the British troops in India are 5,000 below their establishment; when the deficiencies abroad and at home, in Regulars and Militia, are great and increasing; when we hear of a battalion on home service having only thirty-two men for parade; and when, to set against a l these alarming proofs of failure, we have only an Army Reserve which would be inadequate to completing two Army Corps for active service,—it is surely time to inquire into, and to remove, the causes of this inefficiency. We shall never have a really efficient Army till we recognise these two principles,—that every Cavalry regiment, and every Infantry battalion, should be a complete unit, available for the duties of war or peace without subtracting from the efficiency of other similar units; and that the Active Army should be the first consideration, the Reserve being only secondary and subsidiary. As long as regiments or battalions at home are treated as depôts, to supply at short notice the deficiencies of those abroad, so long will the Army remain what it is now, a cumbrous and expensive establishment, incomplete in all its parts, and inharmonious as a whole. It by no means follows, even if the views and opinions we have expressed were adopted, that all cavalry regiments, or all infantry battalions, should be kept at a uniform establishment. If each battalion of the Army Corps first for active service was kept up to 800 rank and file, all fairly trained men, it would be an effective unit, available for war at the shortest notice. It might be increased to 1,000 after a declaration of war, or before it if there was time, by volunteers from its Militia Battalions or from the Army Reserve. It would be better not to "draft" men from the Reserve till they were required to replace casualties. Battalions at home, not belonging to the Army Corps first for service, might be kept at lower establishments, but in no case so low as to be useless as battalions, as so many are now. The remedies for the present deplorable state of the Army are apparent and easily applied. But, as we cannot expect an administration which has made sweeping changes at once to undo its own work, we can only hope that the destructive labour of "reforming" will be discontinued, and that the easy task of re-forming will be commenced, and gradually but steadily carried on. One of the most urgent needs is a modification of what may be called the unmitigated short-service system. Let commanding officers be empowered to re-engage men of good character who wish to serve till invalided, or otherwise entitled to pension. The numbers that might be kept from the Army Reserve by this extension of service would not make it less efficient, because by increasing the number of long-service men (now limited to non-commissioned officers) the demands on the Reserve in case of actual or impending war would be lessened. By this single alteration, we should combine the advantages of the long-service and the short-service systems. We should still get the men who will only enlist for a short term of years; we should still send to the Army Reserve all time-expired men whom there was no special object in keeping with their regiments; and we should retain those men who are thorough soldiers in disposition and feelings, and who wish to serve on as long as they can do their duty. The permission to re-engage should not burden regiments with useless or badly conducted men, for it should be restricted by requiring in every case an application signed by the soldier, recommended by his company commander, approved by the commanding officer, and accompanied by a medical certificate. The restitution of the numbers, and with them the history, of most of our Infantry regiments, would do more to restore the lost efficiency of the Army than any other measure. If the "Line Battalions" of every Infantry regiment were to bear the numbers of their respective "Regimental Districts," the old numbers of 96 battalions, out of 141, would be restored at once, without any interference with the territorial arrangements. Deducting the Rifle Brigade, which had dropped its number (95th), in 1816, there remain 41 battalions without their late numbers; but several of these have had no opportunity of making history for themselves, and should be glad to share the number and the honours of the older regiments to which they have been joined. Among the losses entailed by adopting the short-service system, we were deprived of that useful body, the Enrolled Pensioners. Whenever a party was wanted to occupy barracks temporarily vacated by cavalry or infantry, or when a small force was required to aid the civil power, those trusty veterans were available. When the Pensioners were first organised long ago, they were fostered by the War Office authorities who had formed them. Their uniform was neat and soldier-like, and at the same time suited to men most of whom were elderly, and some of whom were decidedly old. But as time wore on, the veterans were more and more neglected. Their neatly-ornamented cap was replaced by a hybrid shako of surpassing ugliness, and the rest of their uniform underwent corresponding changes; till the Enrolled Pensioner, when seen in a uniform he naturally disliked, and with gaudy ribbons on his shako, was more likely to excite pity or ridicule than to attract recruits. If the Secretary of State for War will permit good and willing soldiers to re-engage, the ranks of our regiments will regain that element of stability of which they are now deficient; and if he will restore to our Infantry the historic numbers to which they cling with increasing fondness, the numbers that he requires will soon be forthcoming.

LORD HENRY LENNOX did good service in calling attention to the state and condition of our armour-clads, when the House of Commons went into Committee of Supply on the Navy Estimates, on Monday night. The subject is one of the most important that could well occupy the attention of the House, and the manner in which it was brought forward left nothing to be desired. Lord Henry Lennox clearly proved that at the end of the present year, the French Government would have 37 armour-clads built and building, as against our 41. He also dwelt upon the vast interests England has at stake in her merchant shipping, comparing the tonnage of the mercantile marine of this country with that of France and other foreign powers, to prove that the Navy should be numerically far stronger than it is at present. Unfortunately, the apathy which prevails in the House on this matter was only too apparent on Monday night. The indifference manifested by Members of Parliament as to the welfare and strength of the Navy is communicated to the country. For years past, the same topic has periodically been discussed in Parliament, with little or no result. The Government have become accustomed to the annual motion for a Royal Commission or a Select Committee to inquire into the shipbuilding policy of the Admiralty. It has come to be regarded in the light of the rod held over the back of a child by a most lenient and tender-hearted parent. Neither the Admiralty nor the Government any longer fears chastisement. Both promise to reform, and assure the House "that our Naval supremacy shall be upheld," asserting "that no Administration would, in their belief, deserve or receive the confidence of either House that neglected to fully appreciate that necessity." With this assurance both Parliament and the country are satisfied. The question, indeed, resolves itself into one of confidence or want of confidence in the Admiralty, and the majority of the Members of Parliament, and of Englishmen generally, knowing nothing whatever of Naval matters, the country and its representatives in the House of Commons are content and only too glad to be able to join in the chorus of "Rule, Britannia," so lustily sung by the representatives of the Admiralty in Parliament and in print. But as Lord Henry Lennox so aptly remarked, on the authority of Dr. Russell, our present position was very much similar to that of the French prior to the outbreak of the Franco-German War. Then the overweening of the French led them to undervalue the strength of the Germans, and, as Dr. Russell told Lord Henry Lennox, "he heard questions asked on all hands in Paris not as to whether the French would beat the Germans, but simply as to how long it would take the French Army to get to the Rhine, and as to the best places to occupy after they crossed that river." The French then had the same feeling of over-confidence in their Army that the Admiralty and the Government now strain every nerve to infuse into the English people in regard to their Navy. We need not "conjecture" why. We know the reason. It is the imperative necessity which exists for a Government that came into office with the words "Peace, Retrenchment, and Reform," emblazoned on its banner, to curtail expenses, after having drifted into a most expensive and profitless war. Hence the Admiralty shipbuilding programme is not an ambitious one. What is worse, is, that we have no certainty that the promises of the Admiralty, such as they are, will be carried out, for, from 1878 to 1882, the deficit in tonnage promised to be built by the Admiralty, and for which the money has been voted by Parliament and spent by the Admiralty, is no less than 10,018 tons' weight of hull; and, as Lord Henry Lennox very judiciously remarked, the deficiencies have already begun this year, while in the past ten years they have reached over 21,000 tons. Lord Henry Lennox refrained from making charges against any one, but he considered the time had come "when the country ought to be made aware of these facts. For the Navy was always starved by the Treasury, in its desire to flatter the vanity of the Prime Minister for the time being by a good Budget, and this policy invariably landed the country in a muddle, entailing a ruinous expenditure, the moment a war broke out in Europe. Thus, for example, in 1870, Mr. Gladstone obtained a grant of £2,000,000, and spent some £600,000 in hurriedly building the Hydra, Hecate, Gorgon, and Cyclops, to defend our coasts. Since then a Committee, of which Admiral Ryder was president, has condemned these four armour-clads as unseaworthy. The next panic occurred in 1878, when a victorious Russian army advanced to the gates of Constantinople. Then four 'ready-made' ships, built for other countries, were bought at an exorbitant price, and were added to the strength of the Navy. The Neptune alone cost over £600,000, and altering her armament £70,000. In this manner the Navy became hampered with useless craft, and the system which gave rise to such a procedure could not, by any possibility, be called an economical one." In this opinion we thoroughly agree, nor can we understand what induced the Government to purchase the German-built vessels Diogenes and Socrates, if the report which reaches us from Berlin, to the effect that the said purchase was completed on April 10, be true. Lord Henry Lennox then proved the want of bona fides in the Admiralty, by the manner in which the repairing programme is "cooked." There is no quantity so unknown, so varying, so uncertain as that required for repairs, refits, and making good defects in ships. And yet, as Lord Henry Lennox pointed out, there is no sum in the Navy Estimates which is calculated with more apparent nicety and minuteness. But the programme, for all that, is never carried out. Notwithstanding all the scheming of the Admiralty, many of our finest cruisers are left to oxydise in our creeks, as are the Shah, Inconstant, and others, at this moment. Then, referring to the Ordnance question, Lord Henry Lennox twitted the Parliamentary Secretary of the Admiralty with his former assertion that the Navy was supplied with the most powerful guns in existence, when not a single breech-loader was in use on board any of her Majesty's ships. The truth is that the Navy is miserably armed, as was proved by Sir William Armstrong when addressing the British Institute. Mr. Campbell-Bannerman has repeatedly assured the House that the new breech-loading guns were nearly ready, and would be immediately issued. But, where are they? As Lord Henry Lennox justly remarked, there is not a 43-ton gun in the service. True, the Admiralty have promised to have 174 breech-loading guns ready for issue in a very short time, but Lord Henry Lennox refuses to believe in their existence until he sees them, a precaution we thoroughly endorse, and we sincerely hope the day is not far distant when the Admiralty, and not the War Office, shall be responsible for the supply of ordnance to the Navy. At present, the manufacture of ordnance resting entirely with the War Office, no one is responsible. Were the Admiralty allowed to manufacture Naval ordnance, then the Board would be responsible; and though boards are only of use "to make screens," and have neither body to be kicked nor soul to be anathematised, still the Lords of the Admiralty would, individually and collectively, be responsible for the proper armament of the Fleet, and no excuse, however perfect, would palliate any dereliction of duty in this direction. At present, the French are aiming at pre-eminence over England in the numerical strength of their Fleet, in the speed of their ships, in the weight of their armour, and in the penetrating power of their guns. Nevertheless, the Admiralty view the strides made by France with apparent complacency. To save the Budget, the "Perish, India!" Ministry cry, "Perish the Navy, rather than our popularity!" And to gain the support of the taxpayers, they prefer, as Lord Henry Lennox truly says, "to pose as economists," rather than take steps to secure for England her command of the seas, to protect her flag wherever it may float, and to maintain inviolate the Empire of the Queen in every part of the world.

THE case of those officers who are compelled to leave the service on account of their inability to pass the required examination for promotion to the rank of Major, is rather a hard one. If it could be shown, or was thought by the majority of the officers of the Army, that these officers were useless and incompetent, there would be no reasonable ground for complaint; but the opinion prevails pretty generally that some of them, to say the least of it, fall victims to the system. The ostensible object of the framers of the present examination for promotion has been to encourage cramming as much as possible. Instead of being of a practical nature, calculated to discover whether or not an officer has a sufficient professional training to enable him properly to discharge the duties of the rank to which he aspires, it is conducted on a purely "cram" and "catch-question" basis. A Garrison Instructor, so we are credibly informed, recently assured his class that they must commit the text-book in use as much as possible to memory, as an intelligent answer would not be acceptable, unless the words of the book were given. Exact definitions, correct legal phraseology, and the baldest extracts from works on tactics, if committed to memory, are considered the best preparation for the examination; in addition to which scores of formulæ contained in the "Soldiers' Pocket-book," and works of a like nature, are required to be retained in the head for the period of the examination, for the purpose of solving the many difficult problems. How long they are retained afterwards, when their use is no longer apparent, we need not pause to consider. Unfortunate officers whose Military duties do not allow them time to attend garrison classes or a crammer's school find themselves plucked for these examinations, when, in the opinion of their brother-officers—generally the best test—and of their commanding officers, they are good and zealous soldiers all round. The examination in topography is of a peculiarly senseless character. If on service it were necessary to make a careful triangulation of the seat of operations, and Line officers and those of other corps, except the Royal Engineers, who are specially trained for this duty, were expected to carry about instruments of all sorts and the necessary books of reference, there would be some sense in the questions now set. As a matter of fact, however, a hasty sketch, as correct as possible, without any instruments, is all that can possibly be required; and though time spent in reading up all these subjects is not time wasted, it should not be impossible to pass without a knowledge of useless matter. It seems a pity that good regimental officers should be harassed out of the service, because they cannot pass examinations in purely theoretical, and for the most part unpractical, subjects. As regards military law, which is another very likely stumbling-block to regimental officers who have not had the opportunity of being adjutants, the good old expressions used at courts-martial in former days in trying prisoners, "the best of your ability," and "the custom of war in like cases," seem changed to "interpreting to the best of your ability very complicated law-books, giving the prisoner to be tried every chance of escape by a legal quibble, twisting and tormenting simple charges into complicated and involved legal jargon," and the "custom of Civil Courts under similar circumstances." Many weary hours are spent by fairly well educated English officers in trying to master the intricacies and complications of the Army Act, &c.; in the end, a few catch-questions, which everybody with any experience of examinations knows are very easily set, puzzle him, and he finds himself hopelessly plucked, and driven out of the service. Some will argue that the men who have not sufficient brains to pass such a simple examination are not fit for responsible positions. To this we reply, let any one about 40 years of age, engaged in any active occupation or business, imagine himself similarly situated. If suddenly called upon to undergo an examination in some of his school exercises, how would he view the ordeal? He would probably fare badly in a competition with his children at school, and still worse if asked to pass in subjects with which he had no opportunity of becoming acquainted in his youth. The whole thing, in fact, has been overdone, and the Army, we have no doubt, will suffer rather than benefit from a system which is gradually filling the senior regimental ranks with mere theorists, who would break down signally in face of an enemy. It would be interesting to know, if the information were obtainable, how many regimental officers carried prismatic compasses, sketching-cases, and all the required appurtenances, in the celebrated march from Cabul to Candahar; and what use, if any, they made of them. And yet that march is considered, not only by our own military critics, but by those of every Continental nation, to have been one of the most brilliant military feats of arms on record, on account of the perfect manner in which even the minutest details were worked out by the General in command. It was simply the case of a practical soldier undertaking a duty untrammelled by theory of any kind; and the result surely shows how much there is to be said in favour of a system which gives us such men in the higher ranks of the Army, rather than that which brought into prominence the brilliant professor of tactics who fell on the heights of Amajuba, whose reputation as a theoretical tactician was world-wide, but whose campaign against the Boers was simply one long series of mistakes and misfortunes.

Lord Alcester, when fresh from Egypt, and before he had time to compare notes with the Government, stated at the Mansion House that he bombarded Alexandria in retaliation for the massacres of June 11. He concluded this part of his speech with the assurance that "there was no lack of promptitude in endeavouring to redress the grievances we had to obtain redress for." Since joining the Admiralty, however, the gallant Admiral has changed his opinion on the subject. On Saturday last, at the banquet of the Royal Academy, Lord Alcester repudiated his former reason for the bombardment, stating that he bombarded the town because the Egyptians were throwing up fortifications under his nose, and that the statement that the bombardment had anything to do with the massacre was false. From this it would appear as if Lord Alcester was not quite certain in his own mind why he did open fire on the town, and we strongly advise him "to try again" for a reason, third thoughts being the best. There should certainly be "no lack of promptitude" on the part of the gallant Admiral in endeavouring to rectify his own mistake, as at present it is impossible to say why Alexandria was bombarded at all.

Admiral Lord Alcester was a witness on Wednesday in the case of "Nordenfelt v. Gardner," now being fought out before Baron Huddleston, in the Court of Queen's Bench. When Lord Alcester entered the witness-box, Baron Huddleston said he understood there was an old rule that a Peer of the Realm was entitled to a seat on the Bench, but he was afraid that the Bench was so crowded with models that there was no room. Lord Alcester said that he was quite comfortable in the witness-box. In his evidence he stated that at the bombardment of Alexandria the Fleet mounted fifty-nine Nordenfelt guns, and that one in the maintop of his own ship, the Invincible, was of great service in silencing the battery he was attacking. "He had the highest possible opinion of the utility of the Nordenfelt guns, and, with regard to their range, he produced a bullet which he himself had picked up in one of the drawing-rooms of Ras-el-Tin Palace. This must have been fired from one of the ships forming the eastern attack—the Alexandra, Superb, and Sultan. Neither of those ships was less than 2,300 yards from the Palace." The action is brought by Mr. Nordenfelt against Mr. Gardner and the Gardner Gun Company, for infringement of patent. At the Royal United Service Institution, in the course of a lecture on machine guns, Mr. Gardner stated that the five-barrel gun adopted by the War Office and bearing his name was no invention of his, and he repudiated it entirely, remarking that it was put together merely to please the Military authorities. This gun, we believe, is now the cause of the present legal proceedings.

Lord Dufferin, accompanied by Dr. W. H. Russell, arrived at Constantinople in the Helicon, on May 8. Lord Dufferin will shortly leave for England to confer with her Majesty's Ministers. Dr. Russell proceeds to Moscow to attend the coronation of the Czar.

Commander Price, M.P., asked the Parliamentary Secretary of the Admiralty, on Monday last, whether it was the case that the recent Admiralty Circular affecting the pay and position of engine-room artificers had proved a complete failure, none of the men electing to avail themselves of its provisions. Mr. Campbell-Bannerman favoured Commander Price with an evasive answer,—"The Admiralty have not yet received complete returns. It will be some time before we can tell the ultimate result." No doubt. To put off admitting a failure is characteristic of Admiralty Parliamentary tactics. We "conjecture" that is the reason why their Lordships decline to lay on the table of the House the reports we have recently published.

The Parliamentary Secretary of the Admiralty declined, on Thursday, to lay the report of Mr. Martin and Mr. Laycock on the Cambridge court-martial, published last week in these columns, on the table of the House of Commons, on the ground that the said report is a private and confidential document, drawn up solely for the information of the Lords of the Admiralty. Mr. Campbell-Bannerman did not this time "conjecture" how we obtained the said document.

Some ten years ago, the Admiralty fixed it as a principle that no officer should be appointed to the superintendence of a dockyard unless he had previously served as a Captain of the Steam Reserve. Why, then, appoint Rear-Admiral Herbert to Portsmouth Yard when that officer has not complied with the rule? It is this fast-and-loose administration that creates so much discontent among all ranks in the Navy.

A correspondent with the Channel Squadron, writing from Gibraltar on May 4, says:—"We left St. Vincent on the afternoon of April 19, and arrived here yesterday afternoon. We started with our top-gallant masts and lower and top-sail yards down, and had six days' steady steaming against the north-east trades. We were in luck, as we did not get them very strong. The first day or two we made three to four knots, and afterwards four to five. On the afternoon of the 25th, we cleared the trades, and the next forenoon sent up masts and yards, and made sail to a fair wind, and were soon slipping along seven or eight knots. The Peak of Teneriffe was observed in the evening. As we approached the Canaries the wind became unsteady, so sail was shortened. We passed through the Islands during the night, going between Teneriffe and Grand Canaries. It was a nasty night, as it was blowing hard; the wind squally and unsteady, and the night very dark. However, next day, when we had cleared the islands, it was quite fine again, and sail was remade. The fine weather lasted till we got close to Gibraltar. We had only one day at steam tactics on the passage; but officers of watches got plenty of practice at station-keeping, as the Squadron was generally in the daytime in either group formation or quarter line. On the 2nd, it had been the Admiral's intention to fire, but as a strong, fair wind sprang up in the morning, the idea was abandoned, and advantage taken of it to push on. The next morning found us in the Straits. Off Tarifa, we passed the Serapis, homeward bound. It came on to rain hard about noon, and continued all the time we were making the anchorage and coming to. The Northumberland and Achilles went alongside the Mole; to-day they have completed coaling and hauled out, the flagship and the Sultan taking their place. The Seagull is here, on her way home from the East Indies. There will be a great deal going on next week, the Gibraltar Spring Race Meeting, garrison theatricals, a dance at the Governor's, and one given by the Royal Artillery, and some entertainments promised by some of the ships. The Squadron are giving a cup to be run for at the races. I regret having to announce the death of Mr. Henry G. W. Terry, Assistant-Paymaster of the Agincourt, who died of disease of the heart, and was buried at sea on April 22. Mr. Terry was an officer who was greatly respected by all on board, and his death, under such melancholy circumstances, created a painful sensation amongst officers and men alike. During the cruise, too, Walter Poole, a seaman on board the Achilles, died from consumption, and was buried on the following afternoon. This makes the third death since leaving Plymouth. There has been a good deal of sickness on board some of the ships, notably in the Sultan, where there have been as many as 45 cases of sickness in one week."

Accidents having occurred within the last two or three years with 20-pounder breech-loading guns, through carelessness in not properly screwing up the breech, special attention is called by the Admiralty to the instructions given in the note on page 33 of the Gunnery Drill-book, 1882, as to the precautions necessary to ensure the vent piece being properly secured.

Our Naval authorities are very anxious to tranquillise the public mind and to keep down the Estimates by misrepresenting the relative condition of the French and English Fleets. One thing is very clear, to wit, that France is exhibiting a wonderful amount of audacity as far as her colonial policy is concerned, and it appears to be generally admitted that this policy is dictated more by a hostile feeling towards England, than anything else. France has no surplus population to get rid of, in fact, she has to call in foreign labour; she has never been a really colonising Power, and the colonies which she possesses are, with the exception of Algeria, where there are as many other European as French civilians, in a deplorable condition. This new French colonial policy, which excites so much enthusiasm in the breasts of our neighbours, would not, it appears to us, have been entered upon unless France felt pretty sure of being able to support it. We must also bear in mind that the French Military and Naval papers are constantly reminding us that if the powerful ironclads which are now nearing completion had been afloat last year, we should never have been allowed to usurp the supreme direction of affairs in Egypt. We may remind those persons who are so innocent as to place implicit reliance in official declarations, and who comfort themselves with the idea that Britannia has long ruled the waves, that should France steal another march on us, she will be only repeating what she did in 1830, when, in spite of all our threats and remonstrances, she seized upon Algeria. Our Navy Estimates had been cut down and our Naval force so reduced, that when the British Ambassador protested against the expedition, the French Minister of Marine said, "Milord, je m'en f—— de la Flotte Anglaise!" and told him when the French Fleet was going to sail and, where it was to rendezvous. We hope that nothing so unpleasant will be allowed to happen again. It is, of course, possible that France may soon find herself with more work on her hands than she seems to anticipate at present, and will have weighty reasons for not molesting us. She may get into trouble on the Congo, she may have a tough job before her in Madagascar, and the probability certainly is that John Chinaman will be as good as his word, and will resent any attempt made by the French to despoil Annam and to seize upon Tonquin. The French have already sent out two transports carrying 1,250 marines, and 1,500 more, with stores, ammunition, &c., are about to embark on board the Mytho and the Annamite at Toulon, the destination being Cochin China. The fact of these reinforcements being despatched shows that the French Government anticipated having to deal with more formidable enemies than the pirates on the Red River, which, like the Kroumirs in Tunis, furnished the first pretext for a French protectorate.

It is reported that the Swedish Government have contracted in Sheffield for a large quantity of armour-plates for fortifications.

Amongst several interesting experiments, conducted by Mr. Reid at Stowmarket last week, with different explosive compounds, there was one which has been stated in the Times report as being successfully carried out with a Whitehead torpedo. The following description of this particular experiment will show how, even in these days of comparative familiarity with the Whitehead and other torpedoes, spectators may be easily mistaken. The miniature torpedo with which this experiment was made consisted of a paper, cigar-shaped case, in which a charge of 2 lb. of gun-cotton and its fuze were placed, and through the whole length of this case a wire was led, connected with the fuze. By means of one end of this wire the paper torpedo was drawn under the target to be demolished, being kept in a straight course by the other end of the wire. When the torpedo had been pulled under the target (boat), a battery was connected up to the torpedo wire, and the charge fired, with the very natural result that the target was destroyed. We cannot conceive any individual having imaginative powers in a degree sufficient to enable him to confound this nondescript experiment with the Whitehead torpedo.

With reference to paragraph 4 of Fleet Circular No. 7 N., of March 8, 1883, and the alteration directed by that Circular to be made in Article 659 of the Queen's Regulations, it was not the intention of the Admiralty that Assistant-Engineers should be required to mess in the ward-room in ships where there is a Gun-room mess, and no Engineers' mess. In such cases the Assistant-Engineers will mess in the gun-room. Paragraph 1 of Article 659, pages 216 and 217, of the Queen's Regulations is consequently to be altered as follows, and paragraph 2 is to be cancelled:—"659. Gun-room officers in vessels with no Gun-room mess, and Assistant-Engineers in ships with no Gun-room or Engineers' mess, are required to mess in the ward-room, and to pay their proper share of mess-money as ward-room officers; but to meet the increased expense, the Assistant-Engineers and Gun-room officers whose pay and emoluments, exclusive of provisions and navigating allowance, are less than at the rate of £100 a year, will be allowed the difference between 30s. a month and the amount contributed monthly by the officers of the mess, which amount, however, is never to exceed the prescribed limit of £3."

The Danish Admiralty have decided to build further vessels of the Tordenskjold type; introducing some important alterations into the same, to avoid the defects discovered in the former vessel. The Tordenskjold, it will be remembered, is a torpedo-ram of the following dimensions:—Length, 215 ft.; beam, 42 ft.; draught, 15 ft. 6 in. She is propelled by engines of 600 (2,500) horse-power, from the works of Messrs. Burmeister and Wain, Copenhagen, who have engined most of the Danish ships of war. At the trials of the vessel, the anticipated speed of 15 knots was not realised, and there was an evident desire to throw the blame on the engine-builders. But as Messrs. Burmeister and Wain have had great experience in their branch of work, and the engines, moreover, worked very well, there can be no doubt but that the fault lies in the design. The Tordenskjold is fitted with six torpedo-launching tubes, viz., three in the bows, of which one is an under-water tube, and three in the stern and quarters, of which one discharges above the rudder. She is armoured amidships with 4-in. steel plates, and carries an armament of one 13¾-in, and one 6-in. Krupp breech-loading guns; the former being mounted in an armoured turret. The armour-plate trials which lately took place on the Island of Amager, near Copenhagen, and of which an account has appeared in the Army and Navy Gazette, were undertaken for the purpose of determining the best kind of armour for these new vessels.

It was recently reported in the daily papers that two Haytian ships-of-war were preparing to bombard some town on the coast, held by the rebels. In view of these circumstances, it may not be uninteresting to give some account of the three war-steamers composing the Haytian Navy. The oldest vessel is the December 22nd, built of iron by Messrs. F. and W. Smith, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, in 1860, and named after the date of a former revolution. She is 208 ft. long, 30 ft. wide, 18 ft. 6 in. deep, draws 16 ft. of water, and has a measurement of 900 tons. Her engines, by Messrs. R. and W. Hawthorn, are of 90 (360) horse-power, and propel the vessel at a rate of 9 miles an hour. She carries an armament of four 40-pounder Armstrong breech-loaders, and is ship-rigged. The remaining vessels, the St. Michael and the "1804," were built of wood, by Messrs. Nefie and Levi, of Philadelphia, in 1875. The St. Michael was 162 ft. on load line, 33 ft. beam, depth of hold, 13 ft.; draught of water, 11 ft.; rig, barque. Armament, one 11-in. pivot-gun (smooth-bore) on main-deck, two 30-lb. pivots on forecastle and poop, and six guns on broadsides. Engines, two horizontal surface-condensing propeller engines; diameter of cylinder, 38 in. by 24 in. stroke, driving one 10 ft. propeller, two leg boilers, 8½ ft. front by 14 ft. long; steam-pressure, 60 lb.; speed of ship, 12 knots. The other ship, "1804," was 145 ft. on load line, 29 ft. beam, 11 ft. depth of hold, draught of water, 10 ft.; brig-rigged. Armament, one 10-in. pivot, one 30-pounder Parrott on forecastle, and one 30-pounder Parrott on quarter-deck, and four guns on broadside. Engines, two horizontal surface-condensing propeller engines; diameter of cylinder, 32 in. by 20 in. stroke, driving one 9-ft. propeller; two leg boilers, 7 ft. front by 14 ft. long; steam-pressure, 70 lb.; speed, 12 knots.

On April 18, there was launched from the Government Dockyard at Copenhagen, the steel-built gunboat Gronsund, which is intended as a flagship to gunboat squadrons. Her armament consists of two 5-in. Krupp breech-loaders, mounted, as is the case with the old gunboats of the Marstrand type, on platforms at either side. A supply of Hotchkiss revolving machine-guns will also be carried. For the purpose of finding quarters for a large staff of officers, the stern is somewhat encumbered with superstructures, which, however, afford very roomy and airy cabins. The dimensions of the Gronsund are:—Length, 115 ft.; beam, 19 ft. 6 in.; draught, 6 ft. forward, 7 ft. aft; she has a displacement of 215 tons, and is rigged as a schooner. The engines, of 400 indicated horse-power, were constructed at the works of Messrs. R. and W. Hawthorn, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, which are calculated to drive the vessel at a speed of between ten and eleven knots an hour. The crew will consist of 42 men. The Gronsund was designed by Mr. J. C. Fusen, and will probably participate in this year's evolutions of the gunboat fleet. The keel of a second gunboat of the same type will shortly be laid down at Copenhagen.

It is reported that the steamers Diogenes and Socrates were purchased by the British Government on April 10 last.

An official return gives the number of the new breech-loading guns ordered for the Navy during the last financial year, and those actually delivered. It appears the number ordered, at a cost of £207,170, were 11 of 43 tons, 10 of 18 tons, 21 of 11 tons, 59 of 6 tons, 81 and 89 cwt.; 75 5-in., 36 cwt.; 51 4-in., 22 cwt.; 13 4-in., 13 cwt.; while those actually delivered to the Navy were only 14 6-in. guns of 80 cwt. (which were not ordered), 50 6-in., of 81 and 89 cwt., 8 4-in., of 22 cwt., and 5 4-in., of 13 cwt. With such results, it is not surprising the Navy justly complain of the present system, but we presume the Admiralty favour it from the economical results obtained.

It seems inconceivable that the present system of the War Office supplying guns to the Navy can be continued. For that service in 1880-81, 14 6-in., 80 cwt.; 6 4-in., 22 cwt.; 12 4-in., 13 cwt., were ordered at a cost of £11,368. None were made or delivered. In 1881-82, at a cost of £74,324, 8 of 18 tons, 4 of 11 tons, 103 6-in., of 81 and 89 cwt.; 6 4-in., of 22 cwt.; 4 4-in., of 13 cwt., were ordered, but only 14 6-in., of 80 cwt. (which were not ordered), 14 6-in., of 81 and 89 cwt. (instead of 103), 11 4-in., of 22 cwt., and 5 4-in., of 13 cwt., were made, and, strange as it may seem, not one gun was delivered. The results for 1882-83 are little more satisfactory. A more extraordinary state of affairs has never before been revealed in a return presented to Parliament.

The Lower-Division Clerks of the Civil Service met at Exeter Hall on Friday evening last, and commenced operations which we most sincerely hope they will in no way relax. With the powerful support of Members of both sections of the Lower House, their case must receive proper attention, and the glaring injustices under which they suffer be ameliorated, by concessions which, if not willingly accorded by the Government, will have to be induced by pressure. The Playfair scheme is indefensible, and open to every objection. In a large mercantile firm, the employment of two different classes of clerks would be too detrimental to the interests of the partners to be even thought of. Yet, in the Offices of her Majesty's Government, where the national expenditure is administered, and the Naval, Military, and Civil services legislated for, such a system exists, and the clerks of the Lower Division do the work previously performed by Higher-Division Clerks, and at less than one-half the average salary of the latter. In no way is this more strongly exemplified than at the Admiralty, where the pay of the Higher Division is far in excess of either their ability or services. The Government are really under obligation to these ill-paid and badly-treated Lower-Division Clerks for a faithful performance of onerous duties, as work deputed to them by the Higher Division might, in improper hands, be carelessly carried out, and collusion effected, which the supervision of the senior section would not easily detect; but with the unquestionable integrity of the Lower Division, there is ample proof that they deserve better things from their employers. Official wisdom is not far-seeing, or it would long since have discerned that men would kick against hard work, when there were no inducements held out of better pay and promotion; and that in splitting the Clerical Department into two sections, it was creating a strong opposing element, productive of a feud which would eventually necessitate a rearrangement of the whole system. That such will be brought about we feel confident, and trust that in their endeavours the Lower-Division Clerks will maintain an unity which will strengthen the justice of their cause.

Field-Marshal Lord Napier of Magdala, who has recently arrived from Egypt, where he has spent the winter, after relinquishing the Governorship of Gibraltar, has, we hear, taken Lady Southwell's residence in the neighbourhood of Sandhurst. Major-General Lempriere, recently Military Secretary at Gibraltar, and Colonel Harris, lately in command of the Royal Artillery there, are also residents in that favourite locality.

The Committee at present sitting for the purpose of revising the manual of Cavalry divisional and brigade drill, &c., of which Major-General Sir Frederick Fitz-Wygram, Bart., Inspector-General of Cavalry in Great Britain, is president, are also dealing with a variety of other matters connected with Cavalry equipment, dress, &c. To assist the Committee in their deliberations, experimental trials of saddlery and equipment are now going on in the Cavalry Brigade, at Aldershot, under the eye of the president, assisted by his Brigade-Major, Major P. H. S. Barrow, C.M.G., and other members of the Committee. Lieutenant-Colonel C. E. S. Scott, R.H.A., has lately been appointed a member of the Committee.

In the General Orders for the present month, we find it announced, under the grand heading of "Army Organisation," that sundry Volunteer Corps with unreasonably and inconveniently long titles have been allowed to assume titles still longer, and, if possible, more inconvenient. We also learn the 18th Hussars are permitted to bear on their appointments a longer motto, in Latin, than any hitherto borne by any regiment. We are not told for what particular service this classical distinction is conferred.

We have not observed that the authorities have taken any steps to carry out a recommendation of the Inspector-General of Recruiting, that Section 94 (2) of the Army Act, 1881, which prohibits an officer, while subject to military law, acting as a justice of the peace for the purpose of attesting soldiers, should be so far modified as to allow officers commanding regimental districts to attest men within the area of the district they command, as there is often a difficulty in finding magistrates, and even in large towns they are not always accessible.

From forty to fifty premier Lieutenants of the Prussian Army are annually ordered to Berlin from May 1, for one year, for service in the great General Staff. This proceeding is in so far interesting as it seldom happens that an officer is transferred to the General Staff who has not had a year's training in the duties of that office. Those fifty Lieutenants, therefore, form the reserve of the General Staff. A certain proportion of them are definitely transferred at once to the General Staff, another batch re-enter their respective regiments, and a third portion remain for another year in the General Staff. A late number of the Militär Wochenblatt publishes this year's selections; according to that list, six of the officers who have been a year on duty at the office have been permanently retained on the General Staff, twenty-three have been sent back to the front, and sixteen are ordered to do duty for another year. Thirty premier Lieutenants have been newly-appointed to the great General Staff, of whom sixteen belong to the Infantry, ten to the Cavalry, and four to the Artillery.

It seems as if the deficiencies now existing in the Army are not confined to one branch of the service; the numbers enrolled in the Militia Reserve on January 1, 1882, which were 27,274, were reduced to 26,629 on January 1, 1883.

The recommendation of the Inspector-General of Recruiting, that "special means" are necessary to obtain the increased abnormal number of recruits required this year and the next two years, has, we observe, met with no attention by the Government.

The memorandum on the reorganisation of the Turkish Army, drawn up by the Commission at the head of which is Ghazi Mukhtar Pasha, has received the sanction of the Sultan. According to this document, military service is obligatory on all Mussulman subjects, but Christians may obtain exemption by the payment of a sum fixed by the Government. The Ottoman Empire is divided at present into seven Army Corps districts, to which must be added Tripoli and Crete. The first six Army Corps place into the field a corps of Nizams, a corps of Redifs of the first levy, and one of the second levy (both corps of Redifs consisting only of infantry). The Seventh Corps (Arabia) supplies a corps of Nizams, Tripoli a division, and Crete a brigade. By the reorganisation scheme, the first six Army Corps are raised to twelve, each corps furnishing a division of Nizams, a division of Redifs of the first levy, and a division of Redifs of the second levy, the latter to serve as the reserve of the Army Corps. Cavalry and artillery are distributed amongst the several Army Corps. This reorganisation will, it is said, supply smaller bodies, easy to handle, but by it the Redifs will come into closer relation in active service with the Nizams, while at present there prevails a kind of antagonism between them. It is also intended to form training battalions and squadrons.

It is difficult to see why the authorities should congratulate themselves on the supposed decrease of deserters in the Army. From a Return, we observe that the recruits who joined in 1881 were 26,258. Of these, 4,394 deserted, the net loss being 2,578, the per-centage of net loss to recruits, 10. In 1882, the recruits joining numbered 23,802; the deserters, 4,145; the net loss, 2,614; the per-centage of net loss to recruits being 11; the per-centage of deserters to recruits in both years the same, 17.

Considering that the Chinese may have something to say on the Tongkin question, it would be well if the French Government were to take account of the Naval and Military forces at the disposal of the Court of Pekin. The Chinese Fleet numbers two ironclads, one monitor, two frigates, twelve corvettes, thirty gun-boats, besides a number of smaller vessels. The gun-boats have been built in England. The Ting-Yuen, constructed at Stettin, is shipping Krupp guns at Kiel. The Chinese officials in Europe are inquiring everywhere for the latest and best models, in order to imitate them in China; and it is well known that the Chinese are masters in the art of imitating European inventions. The reckless bravery of the pirates in Chinese waters, from Petchili Bay to Tongkin Bay, shows that the Chinese have the material for forming intrepid sailors. The Chinese Army also is not to be despised, although the French are trusting to the old abuses and corruption, which is said to be greater than even in the empire of the White Czar. They say that 600,000 Chinese on paper are not even 300,000 soldiers fit for service. That may have been so twenty years ago, but matters have changed since then. The levy of from 30,000 to 50,000 men which each one of the eighteen provinces of China furnishes are, of course, not very dangerous opponents; but it is still a risky undertaking to commence hostilities with a power numbering over 400 million souls, and disposing of large means, if they are only properly applied, while it would take France three months to bring reinforcements on to the seat of war. It has been calculated that China has not 50,000 men armed with repeating rifles. It is certain, however, that the Peking Government has bought up large stores of good arms in Europe, although not much is seen of them at Peking and in the treaty ports.

Recruiting for the Household Cavalry does not seem to have been advanced by the Egyptian Campaign, that branch of the Army being 230 men under strength on January 1.

The number of Yeomanry Cavalry inspected last year, by an official Return, was 11,173, a smaller number than in any year for 12 years. In 1870 the numbers inspected were 14,982.

The numbers wanted to complete the establishment of the Militia on January 1, 1883, were 23,638, a greater number than at any period since 1876, the numbers deficient in 1880 being 10,851; in 1881, 11,710; and in 1882, 17,118.

A correspondent complained last week that some regiments, Highlanders especially, enjoy an undue term of the most desirable stations while on home service, and the grievance appears to be a substantial one. We will give a few instances of long banishments, which show that, however hardly some regiments may be treated in this matter now, they have little to complain of, compared with the unfair stationing of regiments long ago. The 13th and 14th Hussars, both English regiments, served in Ireland continuously for 47 and 48 years respectively. The 4th Dragoon Guards, then an English regiment, were sent to Ireland in 1698.. Their services in that country were so highly valued that they were kept there for 95 years. During this long stay the regiment became Irish in composition, and got its present title, but it lost all opportunities of sharing in the campaigns of Marlborough, Peterborough, and Stanhope. The 6th Inniskilling Dragoons, always an Irish regiment, did not serve a day in the country of its formation for 100 years, from 1709 till 1809! The most remarkable eccentricities in the stationing of infantry regiments occurred on foreign service.

The French War Budget for 1884 has been fixed at 605,307,000 francs, which exceeds that of the preceding year by 20,839,423 francs.

The German Army is at present quartered in 304 garrisons, not counting those of the Bavarian Army. The average strength of 39 of these garrisons is over 2,000 men. Only two have garrisons exceeding 10,000 men, viz., those of Berlin and Metz, of which the former numbers 17,813, and the latter 14,441 men. Since 1879, the garrison of Metz, which formerly consisted of but 10,793 troops of all arms, has been reinforced by 3,648 men. On the other hand, the strength of the Strasburg garrison has been reduced since 1880 from 9,048 to 8,968 men. Mayence garrison consists of 7,712 men, Cologne of 7,655, Coblenz of 6,353, Königsberg 6,363, and Magdeburg 6,068. The garrison of Potsdam numbers 6,580 men, and that of Spandau 4,339 men. These enable about 28,732 men being concentrated in Berlin in less than 24 hours.

The helmets of the German Cuirassier Regiments, which have up to now been made of brass or steel, are about to be replaced by helmets of white metal electro-plated. These do not rust as do steel helmets, and when broken or worn out, are still of worth to the Government as old metal, fetching one-third their original cost when sold out of the service, which those now in use do not.

Great attention is said to be bestowed upon the works of fortification on the south-western frontier of the Russian Empire, the moving spirit being the present War Minister, General Wannowski.

As General de Galliffet is a military man of considerable note, we have no hesitation in saying what La France Militaire thinks of that officer, whose whole life has been devoted to the service of his country, not to the service of a party. The writer sees in the Marquis the private gentleman, the politician (?), and the soldier, adding, "the soldier alone belongs to us." We are afterwards told that "as a soldier, M. de Galliffet is a master. No one would dare to contest this. He is endowed with corporeal vigour, energy, activity, and that intuition of military affairs which makes the General as well as the soldier. He is chauvin. He believes in regulations, in orders, in obedience. He understands manœuvres, tactics, and war. No one in the Army can teach them as he can. He is reproached with being ambitious. It is said that he attained the post of Grand Master of the Cavalry through political influence. Grand Master he was, and Grand Master he will probably be again." We are then informed of the changes which the Marquis made in the cavalry, and how, despising details which were devoid of utility, he insisted upon silence in the ranks, regularity, a perfect knowledge of drill, the habit of executing orders without hesitation, not by voice, but on a simple sign from the officer in command. The duty of the Cavalry he held be:—"To cover the National Army. To seek out the enemy, to find him, to engage him, if necessary, so as to penetrate into the heart of his lines, and to find out the position of his main body, what that main body consists of, its intentions, or at least its possibilities." It was to give a lesson in this art of exploring that the Marquis selected for the Cavalry Manœuvres for next autumn ground where the war of revenge will probably be fought some day,—the frontier zone extending from Montmédy to Lunéville, by Toul and Verdun. But, for political reasons, this ground is not to be operated over. It was hinted that such a rehearsal would give umbrage to Germany.

The following letter has been received by a correspondent who wrote to inquire whether there was any foundation for the rumour that Prince Albert Victor was about to join the Army:—"Marlborough House, Pall Mall, S.W., May 8, 1883.—Sir, in reply to your letter of yesterday's date, I beg leave to inform you that his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has no present intention of placing his son in the Army.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, FRANCIS KNOLLYS."

A Royal Warrant just promulgated to the Army provides for the formation of a barrack section which shall henceforth be taken to be a portion of the Commissariat and Transport Corps. The ranks are to be filled by non-commissioned officers of not less than 18 years' service, volunteering from the Army, who are to be allowed to continue in the service after completing 21 years, and by non-commissioned officers discharged to pension within a period of two years prior to the date of the Warrant. The establishment of the various ranks will be as follows:—Warrant officers, 30; barrack quartermaster-serjeants, 100; barrack colour-serjeants, 100; and barrack serjeants, 100.

The Duke of Cambridge paid a special visit to Woolwich on Wednesday, to witness a course of experiments at the Royal Arsenal, and also to inspect some troops recently returned home from service in Egypt. At the proof butts in the Government marshes his Royal Highness's attention was chiefly occupied by the new 22-pounder field-gun, at present only in the trial state. Subsequently he rode to Woolwich Common and inspected the N Baty. 2nd Brig. and the C Baty. 3rd Brig. Field Artillery. At the termination of the inspection, the Duke of Cambridge addressed the troops, congratulating them on their return from the performance of arduous duties in Egypt, and complimenting them upon their appearance, remarking that notwithstanding the trying climate in which they had spent so many months they looked fit to go anywhere.

It is understood, the Standard says, that Gen. Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, K.C.B., commanding the Southern District, whose period of command expires in October next, will have it extended for twelve months from that time.

The Queen has approved of the following regiments of the Indian Army bearing on their colours, standards, or appointments, as the case may be, Egypt, 1882, and Tel-el-Kebir, for their gallant and distinguished conduct during the late campaign in Egypt:—13th Bengal Lancers, 2nd and 6th Bengal Cavalry, 7th and 20th Bengal N.I., 29th Bombay N.I., and the Madras Sappers and Miners.

Notice is given to the officers, seamen, and Marines, and to all persons interested therein, that the distribution of the tonnage bounty awarded for the slave dhow "Futteh-el-Salama," captured on Sept. 11, 1882, by her Majesty's ship Seagull, will commence on Friday, the 18th inst., in the Prize Branch of the Department of the Accountant-General of the Navy and Comptroller of Navy Pay, Admiralty, New-street, Spring-gardens, S.W. The following are the shares due to an individual in the several classes:—Flag, £6 13s. 2d.; commander, £19 6s. 3d.; third class, £7 16s. 8d.; fourth class, £5 4s. 5d.; fifth class, £3 2s. 8d.; sixth class, £2 12s. 3d.; seventh class, £1 16s. 7d.; eighth class, £1 10d.; ninth class 10s. 5d.

At a meeting of Glasgow citizens held on Wednesday, it was resolved that a sword of honour should be presented to Lieut.-Gen. Sir Archibald Alison, Bart., K.C.B., when he visits Scotland, in acknowledgment of the gallant services rendered to his country. The Lord-Provost said that the name of Sir Archibald was a household word in Scotland, and his gallantry at the head of the Highland Brigade at Tel-el-Kebir would never be forgotten.

The good-service pension placed at the disposal of the Indian Government by the retirement of Surg.-Gen. A. de Renzy, C.B., has been awarded to Deputy-Surg.-Gen. J. J. Clarke, of the Bengal Medical Service, who served with distinction during the Indian Mutiny campaign.

COMMISSIONS IN THE ARMY.

The following is a list, in the order of merits of the Lieutenants of Militia recommended for commissions in the Regular Army, who are reported as having passed the qualifying examination held by the Civil Service Comissioners in April, 1883 :—

The Times says :—"It is understood that the command of the Nagpore Force, with head-quarters at Kamptee, Madras, will be filled by Col. W. K. Elles, C.B., now Assistant-Adjutant-General at the Horse Guards. Col. Elles formerly served in India, both with his regiment (the 38th) and on the Staff, as a graduate of the Staff College, and has for nearly five years filled his present appointment under the exceptional circumstances connected with the preparation and launching of the new Acts upon military discipline, with remarkable ability and success. He has lately acted as secretary to the committee upon the medical and transport arrangements of the Army, presided over by Lord Morley."

"Bengal Staff Corps" writes :—"While thanking you much for your article in the Army and Navy Gazette of the 5th inst. upon the hard treatment meted out to the officers of the Indian Army of over 32 years' service, who have been deprived of the command of their regiments, I regret to say that we are being more hardly dealt with than even you suppose, for should we wish to stay in England until we attain to colonel's allowances, we do so, not on even the half of the Indian pay of our rank, but on the furlough pay for a lieutenant-colonel, £365 a year. To better illustrate the matter, I may as well instance my own case. I have been 37 years in the service, during which I have received two medals, three clasps, and a C.B., and have been all my life a hard-working regimental officer, never having had a day's general leave, or been on sick-leave except now, when it has been the result of war service. On April 1 I lost command of my regiment, and with it the half staff pay allowed on furlough, viz., £300 a year in my case, and at the expiration of my sick leave I am permitted to remain at home on £365 a year until I attain my colonel's allowances; when from this has been deducted Income-tax and subscription to funds, there will be very little indeed left to keep a wife and family. It is true I could go back to India and vegetate there, doing nothing, on my pay, Rs.827.14 a month, but the cost of passage back and forwards, and the getting a new kit for only a few months, together with the keeping-up of two establishments, would almost come to the same thing, not to mention the risk of returning to India at the very hottest time of the year. Unfortunately, there is no one to bring forward our claims for more favourable consideration, but it does not speak much for the liberality of our rulers or the gratitude of the nation that after a life of exile in such a climate, an officer is cast upon the world on such a pittance that even the poor half-pay of which you speak is bountiful in comparison."

A correspondent writes :—"As your columns were the first to notice the case of Surg.-Major Thorburn, I venture to offer the following suggestion, viz., that the service in which Dr. Thorburn has distinguished himself should in a public manner protest against the arbitrary treatment to which he has been subjected. He is surely entitled to a court-martial in order to clear his character, if the opinion of a court of inquiry be deemed insufficient, otherwise no officer who serves her Most Gracious Majesty will in future feel safe. The principle is a broad one, and affects both the Army and Navy."

"Justitia" writes :—"Your suggestion last week with a view to the equalisation of promotion of subalterns in the Army, showing that in some Territorial regiments there exists much inequality through the working of the 'amalgamation scheme' of July 1, 1881, some subalterns attaining their companies much more rapidly than others (older and of longer service), is just. It would be but fair that where by these changes (purporting to have been effected for the public good), some interests have suffered and others have been favoured, relief should, as you say, be given to the former, as vacancies arise in the more fortunate territorial regiments. It is observable that the promotion of some subalterns has been unduly thrown back—though serving all their time abroad—through supersession, nine years ago, by officers from Sandhurst, whose commissions were antedated (and long since captains in consequence), while they have experienced the further blighting effects of Mr. Childers's reorganisation and reduction scheme. I specify only one or two points which illustrate inequality which might fairly claim consideration; some regiments have one or two majors whose commissions date prior to July 1, 1881, and where additional captains are allowed. Again, the adjutants in some regiments, being very junior subalterns, deprive regiments of one, sometimes two, captains, which is hard."

"Are our Naval Lieutenants remunerated and treated in accordance with the grave responsibilities of their position, and as becomes the 'backbone' of a Navy which we claim to rank as the most efficient and most powerful of all the Navies of the world?" This question is asked, and answered in the negative, by Lieutenant Sleeman, R.N. (retired), in one of the best papers which it has ever been our fortune to read on "The Position of the Lieutenants of the Navy," published in this month's Army and Navy Magazine. Lieutenant Sleeman starts by showing that of Admirals, Captains, Commanders, Sub-Lieutenants, and Midshipmen, there are 980 on the list, to 830 Lieutenants. Of these, 697 are employed, leaving only 137, or 16·4 per cent. of their number unemployed in January, 1883, a state of things which compares very favourably with former years, so far as employment alone is concerned. Analysing the manner in which these officers are employed, Lieutenant Sleeman proves conclusively that the Admiralty act on no system in appointing them to ships. Thus, taking tonnage as a guide, we find one Lieutenant to every 621 tons in some cases, while in others there is only one Lieutenant to every 1,700 tons. Three corvettes, of 14, 12, and 8 guns respectively, are unprovided with Gunnery Lieutenants; while three others have their "firsts" and Gunnery Lieutenants combined. There are 48 Lieutenants commanding different classes of vessels, comprising 10 special vessels, 25 gunboats, 6 brigs, and 7 schooners. In the special class, the seniority of the Lieutenants-in-Command ranges from 14 years to 7 years. In three similar despatch-boats, the Lively, Helicon, and Vigilant, the former is commanded by a Commander of over 9 years' seniority, and the latter two by Lieutenants of $11\frac{7}{12}$ and $8\frac{1}{4}$ years' seniority. The senior Lieutenant in command of a gunboat has 15 years in his rank, the junior but 4 years. The seniority of "First Lieutenants" of the 20 large ships in commission varies from 17 to 7 years. The junior is the first of the Euryalus, the senior first of Audacious, both flagships. The first of the Iris is senior by one year to the first of the Inflexible. The seniority of the First Lieutenants of the four most important ironclads in the Fleet, viz., the Temeraire, Sultan, Alexandra, and Inflexible, is, respectively, 13, 12, 10, and 8 years. Proceeding with his diagnosis, Lieutenant Sleeman points out that the seniority of the First Lieutenants of flagships varies also from 7 to 17 years. In the troopships, the seniority of these officers ranges from 16 to 7 years. The Firsts of corvettes vary in seniority from 5 to 13 years. The Firsts of the sloops, 27 in number, commanded by Commanders, vary in seniority from $1\frac{1}{3}$ to $8\frac{1}{2}$ years. These facts prove conclusively want of organisation and system at the Admiralty. The real hardship under which the Lieutenants of the Navy are suffering is that, owing to the want of system and classification, as shown by the above data, a young officer of only a year's seniority, if he has friends in high quarters and interest, may be, and often is, placed in the billet which should be held, by right, by one of the senior Lieutenants. This young officer is then shoved along, and advanced at the expense of his seniors, until he is promoted over their heads. In this manner the Commander's list gets crowded with young Lieutenants, while the Lieutenant's list is filled by old officers, many years their senior in the service. As Lieutenant Sleeman most justly remarks, "The appointment of Lieutenants requires to be systematised and treated with some degree of fairness and uniformity," and he has drawn up a scheme which, if adopted, would not fail to give general satisfaction throughout the Navy. Space prevents our discussing Lieutenant Sleeman's remarks under the heads of Promotion, Education, Rank, Pay, and Retirement. The conclusions he arrives at are: —"That the education of the Gunnery and Torpedo Lieutenants necessitates some changes; and that the system of study at the Royal Naval College might, with advantage, be made more alluring and suitable to officers of the rank and age of Lieutenants. That an intermediate rank between Lieutenants and Commanders might be granted. That the full and half-pay of Lieutenants might be raised without any considerable or serious increase to the Estimates." Lieutenant Sleeman also foreshadows a scheme for expunging the enforced retirement of Lieutenants. We commend this able and temperate paper to the most serious consideration of the Admiralty and of Members of both Houses of the Legislature.

Under instructions issued from the War Office, recruits for all branches of the Regular Forces can be enlisted between the ages of 18 and 19 years, provided they are eligible in other respects, and likely to make good soldiers. In the infantry, recruits can be taken 5 ft. 3 in. in height, at the discretion of the commanding officer.

The fiftieth annual report of the National Provincial Bank of England (Limited) has just been published. The directors report that the profits for the year 1882, inclusive of £39,351 16s. 2d. brought forward, and after making ample provision for bad and doubtful debts and for rebate of current bills under discount, amount to £497,323 10s. 7d. The directors have, from the above amount, added £20,000 to the Reserve Fund, and now recommend that a further bonus of 7 per cent. be paid to the proprietors, free of income tax, in July next, making with the dividends and interim bonus already paid, 20 per cent. for the year 1882.

The Army.

1st Life Guards. Our readers of the Household Troops will, we feel sure, peruse with satisfaction the following letter, addressed to us by "A Parishioner of New Windsor," on the subject of their highly esteemed and hard-working chaplain, who is always their champion and friend :—"Your notice of the farewell sermon of the Rev. Arthur Robins to the 2nd Life Guards before the regiment left Windsor calls to my mind the many instances I have witnessed of his untiring and intelligent labours, both amongst the Household Troops and his parishioners, during the ten years I have had the privilege of an intercourse with him. This town has not forgotten the extraordinary demonstration made in his honour at the banquet given upon the return of the 2nd Life Guards from Egypt, when they all united with one voice to express their hearty goodwill for the chaplain, whose bearing towards them was at all times so genial, that no wonder a reciprocity of feeling should manifest itself from those who received from him such thoughtful sympathy as to indite a prayer for their use in the late campaign, that whilst they were absent in a foreign land would unite them with all they loved best at home, and keep them, as was his wish, from evil. I know it must be with feelings of the deepest thankfulness he accepts the testimonies of friendship constantly given him by all the regiments of the Household Brigade, and devoted by him to the beautifying of the church in which they assemble. These external evidences, if any such were wanting, serve to show not only the bond of union between him and them, but that strength of purpose by which he will see a good cause accomplished when once projected, and in such offerings as the pulpit, font, choir stalls, and windows, all presented by the military, is observed the success which has rewarded his laudable efforts; but whilst enumerating the gifts of the military, it would be, perhaps, unfair to the parishioners and others to withhold the mention of the extensive renovation of the parish church and the erection of the mission church subscribed to by them, as well as by the Household Troops, at his instigation; and these, when done, considered only as a means to an end, and not the end of his labours, as an ever-increasing congregation testifies when, Sunday after Sunday, the church is so filled that room can hardly be found for those whose interest in the preacher remains unabated. Had the Church a few more such preachers, able, and as he repeatedly does, to preach no less than six sermons Sunday after Sunday, there would be little cause for regret, on the part of her heads, for the deplorable emptiness of so many of her churches. The rare abilities of such a man, ministering amongst a population of some 6,000, as well as to 1,200 soldiers, have naturally placed him in prominence in the royal borough of Windsor, and in consequence he has been appointed Chaplain to the Queen, as well as to the Prince of Wales; but as though to obtain favours from the highest in the realm are a barrier to advancement from those of lesser degree, it would appear that when any preferment has been vacant, he has been systematically overlooked, and that up to the present no Minister, either Conservative or Liberal, ever regards or rewards one whose abilities fit him for a sphere where such vigour and ability would be of the highest benefit to the office, not to say as a just reward for the activity he has displayed as chaplain to the Household Troops, at a stipend that most curates would disdain. The opinion and judgment of the late Dean Wellesley were greatly valued, and I know he had the highest opinion of the Rev. Arthur Robins, and strongly recommended him more than once for high preferment."

3rd Dragoon Guards. The burying parties at Kassassin have discovered the bodies of Lieuts. Gribble and the three men who were reported missing after the first action at that place.

10th Hussars leave the Bengal Presidency next winter for Bombay, and relieve the 17th Lancers at Mhow. The Earl of Airlie, who has been appointed adjt., will rejoin head-quarters in India at once. Troop Serjt.-Major W. J. Firth died at Lucknow on the 10th ult., aged 29 years.

13th Hussars. Col. Sir Baker Russell, K.C.B., has arrived home from India.

18th Hussars. A General Order, issued on the 1st inst., announces that the Queen has approved of the regiment being permitted to bear on its appointments the motto, "Pro rege, pro lege, pro patria, conamur."

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The following batteries of Royal Artillery are ordered to move to Chatham for the purpose of taking part in the siege operations which are to be carried out during the approaching summer, viz., the 3rd and 4th Batteries 1st Brig. Cinque Ports Division, commanded by Lieut.-Col. S. A. D. Moleyns, forming the first division; and the 2nd Baty. 1st Brig. Northern Division, and the 3rd Baty. 1st Brig. Scottish Division, commanded by Lieut.-Col. J. Houghton, forming the second division. It was originally intended for three divisions of Royal Artillery to be employed in the siege operations, but it is now found that only two can be spared for that duty.

Orders have been received for the 2nd and 3rd Batteries 1st Brig. Scottish Division, R.A., to be held in readiness to embark for India at the commencement of the next trooping season.

The appointment of Inspector of Warlike Stores at Devonport is vacant, Major French, R.A., having completed five years' tenure on the 1st inst.

Lieut.-Col. W. M. B. Walton has been appointed commanding Royal Artillery in the Chatham District, for duty at Sheerness.

The appointment of Deputy-Adjutant-General, Royal Artillery in India, has been abolished, and a General Order just promulgated directs that in future all correspondence regarding the Royal Artillery in that country is to be addressed to the Adjutant-General for India.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The Khedive of Egypt has conferred on Col. R. Warren, C.M.G., the Order of the Medjidie of the 3rd Class, and on Lieut. A. E. Haynes the Order of the 5th Class, for their services in bringing to justice the murderers of Professor Palmer and his party.

"H." writes:—"Perhaps some of your numerous readers might throw some light on the following point. It has usually been the custom to place the officers of the Royal Engineers junior to those of the Royal Artillery whose commissions bear the same date. If, however, one turns to Hart's official Army List for January, 1883, pages 679-680 and 682 b, it will be found that in the last two batches of Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers therein recorded the Royal Engineers are placed senior to the Royal Artillery of the same batch, while the Royal Engineers of previous batches are still left junior to their brother-officers of the Royal Artillery who passed out with them. I believe the cadets from Sandhurst are ranked as they pass out, irrespective of the regiments they join."

Scots Guards. Lieut.-Gen. Stephenson, C.B., who has been selected to succeed Lieut.-Gen. Sir A. Alison, Bart., in command of the British Forces in Egypt, has appointed the following officers to his personal staff, viz., Lieut.-Col. Lorne-Campbell and Lieut. Romilly as assist.-military secretary and aide-de-camp, and Lieut. Cutler Fergusson, now in Egypt, will be extra aide-de-camp.

2nd Queen's Royal West Surrey Regiment. Lieut. H. N. C. Noble, 2nd Batn., died at Subathu, E.I., on the 3rd inst. The deceased entered the Army, Oct. 22, 1881.

3rd Buffs, East Kent Regiment. Major Hickson, 1st Batn., joined at Aldershot, to assume duty as aide-de-camp to Major-Gen. Walker, V.C., C.B., commanding the 2nd Brigade.

12th Suffolk Regiment. The 1st Batn. will leave Fyzabad next winter for Roorkee and Delhi.

18th Royal Irish. The 1st Batn. is to move next winter from Rawul Pindee to Meerut.

21st Royal Scots Fusiliers. The 1st Batn. proceeded from Dover by a 9 a.m. special train on Saturday last, the 6th inst. to Shorncliffe, thence by march to Hythe, for a day's shooting. Clubs being established in every company, it was found impossible to carry out their wishes at the already overburdened ranges at Dover, so the idea of Col. Gildea, A.D.C., was to secure every reasonable accommodation and facility for each company to fire its classification of shots at their favourite distances, but sufficient ranges were not placed at his disposal. So, to fulfil engagements with the railway authorities, the interesting practice had to be discontinued before the hopes of the morning were realised. However, arrangements were at once made to carry carry out the completion of this beneficial amusement on the Dover range at disengaged hours, which course is being proceeded with satisfactorily. If there was one incident of the day more striking than another of the high training of this battalion, it was the almost incredible rapidity which marked all their noiseless movements at each railway station. We may mention that a most interesting rifle meeting will be held at Dover on or about June 20, open to every rank and class of Military in the South-Eastern District. The programme is long and varied, the prizes large and numerous; and perhaps money will not be given away for competition so identical with sound sense as the £8 which make up the seven prizes given for the best judgers of distance, under circumstances identical with active service. This new and interesting addition to shooting programmes is, no doubt, the suggestion of an officer commanding a well-known Infantry battalion at Dover, whose views on the subject are strong and valuable, and should command that respect and imitation which knowledge acquired in the school of actual warfare deserves.

An exchange of Divisions has been approved between Majors J. I. Morris, Plymouth, and W. F. Campbell, Chatham.

The Admiralty have directed that the Musketry Instruction, as laid down in General Order 51 of 1883, for the Army, is to be carried out in the Royal Marines, as far as practicable.

The appointment of Lieut. F. H. N. Wilson, R.M.L.I., as a probationer for the S.C., has been cancelled.

The following officers have been granted leave of absence in extension:—Capts. C. J. Cheetham, R.M.A., one month; H. Gruton, R.M.L.I., 14 days; and A. D. Corbet, R.M.L.I., ten days.

51st King's Own Light Infantry. The regiment is to be moved next winter from Bareilly to Dinapore.

66th Berkshire Regiment A general court-martial assembled at Gosport on Thursday to investigate 28 charges relating to the alleged embezzlement of large sums of money, falsification of accounts, &c., preferred against Capt. E. G. P. Mayers, A.C.D., paymaster of the regiment. The court was presided over by Sir Charles K. Pearson, K.C.M.G., G.C.B. Col. C. Parson (half-pay), Deputy-Judge-Advocate, officiated as advocate. Mr. Danckwerts (instructed by the Solicitor to the Treasury) was counsel for the prosecutor, Col. Bryson, Chief Paymaster Army Pay Department, and Mr. G. Feltham, solicitor, appeared as friend of the prisoner, who pleaded not guilty. Mr. Danckwerts stated the case for the prosecution. He said that the first ten charges arose out of £1,190 3s. 3d., which must not be confounded with £1,191 4s. 5d. which the prisoner had received and had duly accounted for. It was the theory of the prosecution that the prisoner had taken advantage of the similarity between these two sums to embezzle money. The latter sum represented the Savings' Bank balance of the men of the regiment, while the former—the sum which he was charged with embezzling—was the non-effective balance of 233 men who had been killed in battle. There would not be a large number of witnesses, as most of the evidence would be documentary.

68th Durham Light Infantry is to be moved next winter from Meerut to Allahabad.

79th Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders. Major H. H. Oldham has been appointed to succeed Major G. A. Agnew, 34th Foot, as Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General for Ireland, and has assumed duty on Gen. Sir T. Steele's staff.

81st Loyal North Lancashire Regiment is under orders to proceed to England next winter.

86th Royal Irish Rifles. The regiment will proceed in the autumn from Bermuda to Halifax, N.S.

104th Royal Munster Fusiliers. Lieut.-Col. M. G. Taylor, late of the regiment, died in Wimpole Street, on the 2nd inst., aged 41 years.

Pay Department. A correspondent writes:—"With regard to the amount of zeal shown by the officers of the Pay Department in Egypt, and the effects of hard work as to keeping of accounts and putting them straight after a campaign, surely the fact of so many officers of the Army Pay Department being sent home ill must be some criterion of the nature of their work. Severe head work is most telling, and upon this plea (in the absence of any other reward) might not the authorities deem us worthy of the stipulated leave which the Royal Warrant lays down? But no! the exigencies of the service step in again as the stumbling block. Regimental officers may still ask and wonder when are you going on leave, and if anything would deter them coming in, it is in seeing the treatment meted out to a Department which seems in a fair way to remain 'the neglected one,' by the action of the authorities. Capts. Mortimer and Stradling are expected to arrive home sick in H.M.S. Jumna, and Capt. Fox proceeds with his regiment to Gibraltar in the same ship." The services rendered by Capt. Booth, West Riding Regt., and Qrmr. Walsh, Seaforth Highlanders, during the late Afghan campaigns, have lately been rewarded by the bestowal of a brevet majority in the former, and an honorary majority in the latter case. There is no questioning that both these officers fully earned the honours which have been so tardily awarded to them, but there are still many who have received no recognition at all of their services. One case in point which has been brought to our notice is that of Capt. J. C. T. Humfrey, A.P.D., who, when a captain and local major in the 2nd Batn. 9th Foot, served throughout the whole of the Afghan campaign, from the commencement of hostilities in November, 1878, till the conclusion of the campaign in August, 1880. During the whole of this period, Major (now Captain) Humfrey was never absent from his duties as officer-in-charge of field treasure chest, as, in the interim between the first and second periods of the campaign, he was detained at Lundi Kotal to carry on the monetary arrangements of the force which remained there, and therefore was one of the very few officers who remained over our frontier during the whole period of both campaigns. Capt. Humfrey was also divisional provost-marshal, in addition to his other duties, to the division under the command of Lieut.-Gen. Sir R. O. Bright, K.C.B., and was recommended for a brevet majority for his services. What renders the case of this officer a peculiarly hard one, is that the fact of his being on active service has on two occasions proved most fatal to his interests. Originally a candidate for a paymastership, he submitted his name for the Army Pay Department in the beginning of 1878, but owing to his being employed on service against the Jowaki Afreedis, his application miscarried. Again, during the Afghan campaign, he elected to remain on service, in preference to taking up his appointment as paymaster, and his having done so has acted most materially against his prospects, as he lost two years' seniority in the Department, and having joined it before the bestowal of the Afghan rewards, became, therefore, ineligible for a brevet majority. This is one of those exceptional cases in which an officer, by electing to remain on service, and to encounter all the vicissitudes of a campaign, has been allowed to suffer through his extra zeal and esprit de service. It is to be hoped that the circumstances connected with this officer's appointment to the Army Pay Department, which were duly represented, may again be considered, and, as his duties were of a financial nature, that his appointment to the Army Pay Department may either be antedated, or a step of honorary rank bestowed on him, as in the cases under notice above.

Medical Department. The Times says:—"A good-service reward at the disposal of the Army Medical Department has been conferred upon Sir T. G. Logan, K.C.B., Hon. Physician to her Majesty, and recently Director-General." Sir Galbraith Logan joined the Army as hospital assistant, May 8, 1828; became assist.-surg., July 29, 1830; surg., Aug. 10, 1842; surg.-major, Nov. 5, 1852; deputy-inspector-gen., Dec. 21, 1855; inspector-gen., April 8, 1859; and was placed upon retired pay as director-general, April, 1875. He served in the Sutlej Campaign of 1845-46 with the 53rd Regt., and was present at the affair of Buddiwal, and in the actions of Aliwal and Sobraon (medal with one clasp). Served also at the siege of Sebastopol during 1855, and was present at the taking of the Quarries on June 7, at the assault of June 18, and as principal medical officer of the Highland Division at the final assault on Sept. 8 (medal with clasp, 5th Class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal).

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

West Yorkshire Regiment. The 4th Batn., under command of Col. Pollard, was inspected by Col. Chichester, C.B., 14th Regimental District, on the 10th inst. The battalion was formed in line in the new barrack-square at Fulford at 10 a.m., and received the inspecting officer with the usual salute, and afterwards marched past in double column of companies, and in quarter-column at quick time, and then in double time. At the conclusion of the march-past, line was re-formed, and the men were put through the manual and firing exercises by Major Callaway, and afterwards exercised in battalion movements by Majors Callaway and Hon. Lieut.-Col. Fawkes and Capts. Rogers and Turnor. The barrack-rooms and men's dinners were visited by the inspecting officer at the dinner-hour, and the regimental and company and officers' books were inspected at the orderly-room at 2.30 p.m. The inspecting officer expressed himself well pleased with all he had seen, and said that this was the third time he had had the pleasure of inspecting the battalion, and that on the two previous occasions he had made a favourable report on the regiment, and that it would give him great pleasure to make a most favourable report on the present occasion. He had never seen a regiment turn out so clean; the men were well set-up and well drilled, and the conduct of the battalion had been very good, no case of misconduct having been brought to his notice during the annual training. The men will be dismissed to their homes on Saturday, the 12th inst. Capt. Adye has obtained a 1st-class extra certificate from the School of Musketry, Hythe, and proceeds to Lichfield on the 14th inst., to put the 4th Batn. North Staffordshire Regt. through their annual course of musketry.

58th Northamptonshire Regiment. We have to record the death of Capt. G. Marriner, magistrate and inspector of police in the colony of British Honduras, which occurred on March 27, the result of an accident on the Rio Hondo. Capt. Marriner had been inspecting an outpost on an island in that river, and had just mounted to return, when his horse suddenly bolted and sprang from the bank into deep water. While making for the shore he suddenly sank, either hurt or seized with cramp, and when the body was recovered life was extinct. He entered the Army in 1855; served with his regiment (the 58th) in New Zealand; was gazetted to a company in 1863; went out with the regiment to India; was brig.-major at Allahabad and Rawul Pindee, 1869 to 1874; retired in 1875; and was appointed, in 1878, inspector of police in British Honduras by the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The under-mentioned regiments are ordered to assemble on Monday, all—with the exception of the Monmouthshire Engineers, who are to be out 42 days—for 27 days' training and exercise:—Monmouthshire Engineers, at Monmouth; 4th Batn. Bedfordshire Regt., at Colchester, in camp; 3rd Batn. Derbyshire Regt., at Aldershot, in camp; 3rd Batn. Dorsetshire Regt., at Sherborne, in camp; 3rd Batn. South Lancashire Regt., at Altcar, in camp; 4th Batn. Shropshire Regt., at Hereford; 3rd Batn. North Staffordshire Regt., at Lichfield; 3rd Batn. South Staffordshire Regt., at Whittington Heath, in camp; and 3rd Batn. Yorkshire Regt., at York.

The following regiments, on completion of their training, will be dismissed to-day:—5th Batn. Derbyshire Regt., at Derby; 4th Batn. Norfolk Regt., at Yarmouth; 3rd and 4th Batns. Northamptonshire Regt., at Northampton; and 4th Batn. West Yorkshire Regt., at York.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

It is in contemplation to form a Rifle Association from amongst the officials engaged in the Royal Courts of Justice and kindred offices. A meeting on the subject is to be held on the 22nd inst., at which Lieut.-Col. Morris, Finsbury Rifles, presides.

The annual march-out and brigade drill of the Volunteers of the City of London took place on Saturday afternoon, when the five regiments of artillery, engineers, and infantry respectively mustered in Finsbury, and marched thence to Hyde Park. This is the first time on which the City has been represented by so large a number of artillerymen, as it is the premier occasion of the appearance of the brigade since the amalgamation with the 1st Surrey Artillery. About 700 men of the City of London Artillery Brigade paraded under Lieut.-Col. Hope, V.C., whilst the remainder of the muster was made up of about 310 of the 1st London Engineers (Lieut.-Col. Drew), 400 of the London Rifle Brigade (Lieut.-Col. Lord E. P. Clinton), 350 of the 2nd London Rifles (Lieut.-Col. Vickers), and 600 of the 3rd London Rifles (Lieut.-Col. Laurie). The last-named officer was in command of the column, which marched off shortly before 6 o'clock, and proceeded by way of the Embankment, where Lieut.-Col. Laurie surrendered his charge to Col. Clive, Grenadier Guards, who was in waiting with Capt. and Adjt. Crauford. On arriving at the Park the brigade was at once taken on to the old exhibition ground, where a few simple movements were gone through.

The Queen has approved of the under-mentioned regiments being in future designated respectively as follows:—2nd and 5th Kent R.V. to be the 1st Volunteer Batn., and the 2nd (Weald of Kent) Volunteer Batn. of the Buffs East Kent Regt.; 1st and 2nd Lincolnshire R.V. to be the 1st and 2nd Volunteer Batns. of the Lincolnshire Regt.; 1st and 2nd Yorkshire (East Riding) R.V. to be the 1st and 2nd Volunteer Batns. of the East Yorkshire Regt.; 1st and 2nd Gloucestershire R.V. to be the 1st and 2nd Volunteer Batns. of the Gloucestershire Regt.; and the 1st, 3rd, and 4th Staffordshire R.V. to be the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Volunteer Batns. of the South Staffordshire Regt.

"Sapo Carbonis Detergens" is a physician's name for a remedy prescribed for the past quarter of a century for every variety of skin disease. The public have found that as a preventive of small-pox, scarlet fever, and measles, it is unequalled. See that the Latin name described above, and the words "Wright, Southwark," are on each wrapper, and branded on each tablet, without which none is genuine.

The Navy.

Boatswains—Thomas Glading, to the Miranda; George South, to the Hecla, vice Wills; George J. Stevens, to the Achilles, vice Varrender.

Carpenters—William Pound, to the Miranda; F. H. Eddy, to the Pembroke, additional, for the Rover; Charles Young, to the Wivern, vice Hanson; William Denbow, to the Impregnable, vice King; and Arthur Furze, to the Impregnable, additional, for the Circe, vice Wallis.

COASTGUARD.

Chief Boatmen—John Trivett, Looe, to be chief boatman-in-charge, Portwrinkle, vice Brooks, pensioned; Wm. Shipley, Walmer, to be chief boatman-in-charge, Misner Haven, vice Brogland, pensioned; Henry Sinden, Grand Redoubt, to be chief boatman-in-charge, Haddocks, vice Harding, pensioned.

Commissioned Boatmen—Richard Ottaway, Clacton-on-Sea, to be chief boatman, Walmer, vice Shipley, promoted; Benjamin Wakeham, Falmouth, to be chief boatman, Looe, vice J. Trivett, promoted; Samuel Edmonds, Sandown, to be chief boatman, No. 1 Battery, vice Sinden, promoted; John Knight, Hythe, to be chief boatman, Atherfield, vice Bond, pensioned; Alfred Ward, Lyme Cobb, to be chief boatman, Mousehole, vice A. M'Gonnell, pensioned.

ALECTO, Lieut. and Com. Harston, arrived at Devonport, under convoy of the Opal, on May 10, and proceeded to fill up with coal, prior to starting for the West Coast of Africa.

ALEXANDRA, Capt. H. H. Rawson, C.B., flagship of Vice-Admiral the Lord John Hay, K.C.B., Commanding-in-Chief on the Mediterranean station, was at Malta up to May 1. The Monarch, Téméraire, Orion, Bittern, Cruiser, Antelope, Coquette, and Cygnet were at Malta. The Orion would pay off on May 5. The Bittern left on April 30 for Alexandria and Port Said. The Antelope would pay off on May 8. The Lily arrived at Malta on April 25, and sailed on April 26 for England. The Serapis arrived at Malta on April 28, and sailed same day for Portsmouth. The Encounter was at Suez on April 22, and would leave Malta on May 8 for England. The Carysfort visited Malta on April 24, and left again same day for Corfu. The Decoy arrived at Tunis on April 26, and would remain a week and then rejoin the flag at Malta. The Téméraire went out for target practice on April 26, and returned same day to Malta. The Superb, Inflexible, and Carysfort left Corfu on April 28 for Malta. The Euphrates arrived at Malta on April 29, and sailed on April 30 for Portsmouth. The Wye arrived at Malta on April 30. The Crocodile was there on May 6.

ANTELOPE, Lieut. and Com. the Hon. W. H. Jolliffe, was paid off at Malta on May 8, the officers and crew taking passage home in a troopship.

AUDACIOUS, Capt. Tracey, flagship of Vice-Admiral G. O. Willes, C.B., Commanding-in-Chief on the China station, was at Hong Kong on April 3. The Daring was at Yokohama on March 23, and was to leave on the 25th for Jin Chuen, Corea. The Moorhen was at Nagasaki on March 13, and was to leave on the 17th for Jin Chuen, Corea, to be relieved later by the Daring. The Sheldrake was at Yokohama on March 23, and remains. The Zephyr was at Chefoo on March 16, and was to visit Tientsin, Newchwang, and Chefoo in turn. The Kestrel was at Shanghai on March 27, and remains. The Cleopatra was at Hong Kong on April 3, and remains. The Curaçoa was at Hong Kong on April 3, refitting. The Swift left Hong Kong on April 1 for Amoy and Swatow, returning to Hong Kong by April 16. The Pegasus left Hong Kong on April 1, to cruise for seven days, and then return. The Albatross left Hong Kong on April 1 to cruise for seven days, and then return. The Linnet and Vigilant were at Hong Kong April 3, and remain. The Flying Fish was at Hong Kong on April 3, would commence surveying duties shortly. The Magpie was at Hong Kong on April 3, refitting. The Champion was at Singapore on April 7; after departure of Thalia she would proceed for cruise to Java, returning to Singapore about the end of April. The Fly was at Singapore on April 3; sailed on April 3 for Sarawak, Labuan, North Borneo, and Sulu Archipelago, returning to Singapore about the end of May. The flagship left Hong Kong at the end of the month to expend her quartery ammunition. After firing she anchored in Mirs Bay, about 30 miles from Hong Kong, to fix her torpedo nets. On the 28th, Vice-Admiral G. O. Willes proceeded with the captains of the several ships in the Vigilant, and inspected the Audacious as prepared to resist torpedo attack. The next day some officers landed for a shooting excursion, and as some of the gun-room officers stood in a group, Mr. Hocken, engineer, was about to ease one trigger of his gun, and accidentally fired the other barrel. It happened that Mr. P. Blakiston, midshipman, was standing about four yards from the engineer, and in the line of fire, so that after striking the former's gun and taking part of the stock with it, the charge entered his right groin. There was a great flow of blood, which Mr. Hockin tried to stop by taking off his shirt and wrapping it round his wounded messmate. As soon as possible, Mr. Blakiston was taken on board his ship in a sampan, and the surgeons gave the case the most careful treatment. Seventy-nine shots and a piece of wood were extracted, and the next day at noon he was landed at the Naval hospital at Hong Kong. Grave doubts were expressed as to the recovery of the young officer, and at 7 on Saturday, March 31, he expired. The body was viewed on the succeeding day, pending the inquest, and in the afternoon of that day he was buried with full Naval honours. At 4 o'clock, the funeral party left the hospital ground. It consisted of the ship's band, which played the "Dead March" in Saul upon starting, the band of the Buffs, then an escort of 48 men, together with a field-gun's crews to draw the carriage upon which the coffin rested. Two wreaths were placed upon the nicely-polished coffin, one from Mrs. G. O. Wills. Capt. Richard Tracey was chief mourner. Then came a strong party of Blue-jackets, followed by 58 officers of various grades, in full naval or military uniform. The roadway for the most part was well lined by Europeans, and a large number witnessed the last rites as they were performed by the Rev. H. B. Harper, Chaplain of the Audacious. The accident has thrown quite a gloom over the gun-room, where the unfortunate midshipman was much esteemed. Mr. Blakiston was a native of Plymouth. The Audacious was at Shanghai on May 10, where the Commander-in-Chief will remain a fortnight.

BEACON, Com. A. W. Moore, arrived at Gibraltar on May 10, en route to Chatham, to pay off.

BOADICEA, Capt. Church, flagship of Rear-Admiral Salmon, V.C., Commanding-in-Chief on the Cape of Good Hope and West Coast of Africa station, was to have left Simon's Bay for Table Bay on April 17, to be placed in dock for repairs.

CLEOPATRA, Capt. Hippisley, was refitting at Hong Kong on March 25, when her gunner, Mr. West, shot himself in his cabin with a Martini rifle. The bullet went through his head and penetrated the deck above, nearly killing a Chinaman who was standing there. Troubles at home are said to have preyed upon him, and for some time a watch had, to a certain extent, to be kept upon him. He was buried on the 28th in Happy Valley Cemetery.

COCKCHAFER, Lieut. and Com. H. Worsley Hill, arrived at Swakin on April 7, en route for Aden and Singapore. During her stay at Swakin, the Governor-General of the Red Sea, Raschid Pasha, gave a dinner in honour of the officers of the ship, at which were present Tewfik Bey, Governor of Swakin, and the officers of the Egyptian despatch-vessel Garfarick, on board which ship the dinner was held. Her Majesty the Queen's health was proposed and drunk with enthusiasm, and then the Khedive's, which was hailed with much enthusiasm. A most pleasant evening was spent. The ship was illuminated with blue and red lights, and rockets fired on the approach of the Cockchafer's boat, and also upon her officers leaving. Everything was quiet at the place. The Cockchafer arrived at Aden on April 20, after encountering strong head winds and sea, and would remain ten days, and then proceed to the China Station.

ECLIPSE. Capt. E. St. J. Garforth and the officers of this ship gave a most successful dramatic entertainment on board this ship on April 5, while at Bushire (Persian Gulf), the piece being "Ici On Parle Français." The ladies' parts were taken by Mrs. Williams and the two Misses Ross (daughters of the Political Resident); the second part of the performance was given by the Eclipse's men. After supper, the decks being cleared, dancing was kept up till a late hour; considering the anchorage is three miles off shore, it speaks much for the pluck of the ladies, there always being a chance of a nor-wester this time of the year. The officers had capital shooting at Busreh, snipe and wild-fowl being plentiful. The Eclipse is in the Persian Gulf; on arrival at Jask, on April 26, would proceed at once to Muscat, where she will meet the Woodlark, and take on to Ras Madraka the mails for the Tourmaline, Ranger, and Osprey, which the Woodlark will convey from Bombay. From Ras Madraka the Eclipse will proceed to Aden, where Capt. Garforth will relieve Com. Bolitho, of the Dragon, as senior officer of the Red Sea and Gulf of Aden division of the station, and remain until the Eclipse returns to England. She was at Aden on May 8.

EURYALUS, Capt. Hastings, C.B., flagship of Rear-Admiral Sir William Hewett, V.C., Commanding-in-Chief on the East Indies station, was at Colombo on May 8. The Tourmaline was cruising off the coast of Arabia; left Bombay on April 15; when the south-west monsoon breaks, and there is no longer any chance of intercepting dhows from Zanzibar, will proceed to rejoin the flag at Trincomalee. The Woodlark was at Bombay on April 20, about to leave for Muscat and the Persian Gulf. The Dryad was at Tamatave, Island of Madagascar. The Ranger was cruising off the coast of Arabia, under the immediate orders of Capt. Boyle, of the Tourmaline; left Bombay for Ras Madraka on April 14; when south-west monsoon breaks, will accompany the Tourmaline to Trincomalee. The Arab was in the Persian Gulf; left Bushire for Busreh on April 6, to return about April 21. The Osprey was cruising off the coast of Arabia, for the suppression of the slave trade; left Bombay for Ras Madraka on April 14; after the south-west monsoon breaks, will accompany the Tourmaline to Trincomalee. The Dragon was at Zanzibar on May 8, proceeding to follow the orders of the senior officer on the East Coast of Africa. The Philomel was at Bombay on April 20, preparing for service in the Persian Gulf; her departure from Bombay has been delayed, owing to the discovery of further defects.

FOXHOUND, Lieut. and Com. McQuhae, left Penang for Setul, a place near Quedah, on Feb. 11, for the purpose of making inquiries about some pirates, who had lately been causing a deal of annoyance to the traders in those waters. On arriving at that place, it was found that nothing but expostulation with a Siamese commission in charge of these provinces could be attempted, as the Rajah of Setul is a tributary of Siam. The commission promised to do their best to put a stop to these piratical doings. On March 3, the Foxhound left Penang, where she had returned from her Setul trip, to visit Perak and Salangore. On March 27, the Champion, having on board Sir F. Weld, Governor of the Straits Settlements, arrived at Malacca, where the Foxhound had previously reached. The object of Sir F. Weld's visit was the decision of a question which had arisen between two rival chiefs in the State of Remban. This question being satisfactorily settled, the Champion, with Sir F. Weld on board, returned to Singapore, the Foxhound following there a few days afterwards.

NELSON, Comdre. James E. Erskine, was at Sydney o May 11, preparing to leave on May 19 for a cruise among the Fiji and other islands of the Pacific.

OPAL, Capt. Arthur T. Brooke, was minutely inspected by Vice-Admiral E. B. Rice, C.B., Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, at Sheerness on Monday morning. At the conclusion of the inspection the Vice-Admiral certified that she was fit for sea in every respect. On Tuesday she went for a run to try her engines and boilers, with orders to proceed if the result proved satisfactory, which it did in every particular. She was accompanied by the Alecto, Lieut. and Com. Harston, both vessels touching at Devonport, en route to Sierra Leone.

ORION, Capt. R. O'B. FitzRoy, was paid off at Malta on Saturday last, the officers and crew returning home by troopship.

REPULSE, Capt. George L. Sulivan, arrived at Sheerness on Tuesday afternoon, to take in coals and stores. She left for Portsmouth yesterday, where she is to be examined and refitted.

SATELLITE, Capt. Charles B. Theobald, was put out of the steam basin at Sheerness on Saturday, and took in her ammunition, &c., on Monday. Her compasses were adjusted on Tuesday, and on Thursday she went for a six-hours' trial of her engines and machinery on the measured mile at the Maplin Sands. The Satellite is commissioned for the Pacific station.

TENEDOS, Capt. Charles G. Fane, at Halifax, is taking extra precautions to guard against a Fenian surprise. Guard-boats are out day and night, and the sentries have been doubled, owing to the alarm created by the report that two suspicious American vessels were about to visit the port.

THALIA, Capt. Brackenbury, C.M.G., was at Hong Kong undergoing the alteration proposed by the court of inquiry, and is expected to leave about April 8 with the late crews of the Victor Emanuel and Curaçoa, and also some time-expired men. The Albatross and Pegasus left on April 1 for a short cruise, after being recommissioned, and the Swift sailed on April 2. The Champion, Foxhound, and Fly remain south, while the Daring, Kestrel, and Moorhen are north. Ships still at Hong Kong are the Victor Emanuel, Audacious, Linnet, Magpie, Flying Fish, Vigilant, Thalia, Cleopatra, and Curaçoa.

It is officially announced that the London Brigade Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers will embark in the Dwarf, for a cruise at sea and great-gun practice, as follows:—Brighton and Hastings Corps, July 2; 3rd, 4th, and 5th Batteries London Corps, July 16; 1st and 2nd Batteries ditto, July 30. The brigade will furnish the guard of honour to-day, on the occasion of the opening of the International Fisheries Exhibition.

CRIMEAN CEMETERIES.

The Committee which has been formed for the protection and rearrangement of these Cemeteries earnestly solicit additional funds to enable them to complete the work. It is proposed to remove all tombstones and other memorials of those who fell before Sebastopol into the Cemetery on Cathcart's Hill, which will be enlarged and placed under the supervision of a Resident Guardian. No remains will be disturbed, nor would any memorial be moved should objections be raised by the legal representatives of the dead.

About £500 is still required, for as yet the Committee cannot accept the contract they have received for the proposed work.

They would therefore again address themselves to the Officers of the Army, past and present, to assist them in perfecting a work which has been too long delayed. When the work is completed, the Government will grant £200 a year to cover the cost of the wages of the custodian and other annual expenses.

It is requested that all donations be sent to Messrs. COX and CO., Craig's Court, who are the Treasurers of the Fund.

Army & Navy Gazette.
LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 12, 1883.

THE Report we last week published is a most interesting document. Mr. Martin, Deputy-Judge-Advocate, and Mr. Laycock, of the Accountant-General's Department, gave therein a full and faithful narrative of their investigation into the accounts of the Cambridge, consequent on the frauds exposed at the courts-martial in June last; also the result of their examination of the Victualling Books of other

Home ships, together with their suggestions as to the means which should be adopted to prevent a recurrence of such grave irregularities. The Report is exhaustive, and the suggestions meet a necessity which would remove all chance of scandal in the future. That the Paymaster of the Cambridge was greatly to blame, no one will deny; but, if he was lax in his duty, there is also blame attachable to those in office who audited the accounts, and could have easily detected that a "screw was loose," had they taken the trouble to analyse the savings' vouchers, as explained in paragraphs 20 and 21 of the Report. Their Lordships' order for this investigation (paragraph 1) shows that, through the Cambridge scandal they were at last made aware of the fact that the official audit was not sufficiently searching or comprehensive; and that, if a ship's steward took advantage of a Paymaster's laxity, and chose to become a rogue, there were no means of detecting his defalcations by the accounts sent into office. The Admiralty have admitted this to be the case, in the reply they have made in Parliament, through Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, to Mr. Rylands' application for a copy of this Report. We thus convict the Admiralty out of their own mouths of allowing an inefficient system to exist, which the supineness of their departmental subordinates has allowed to take root and grow in the Navy, and would have permitted to expand, but for the accidental discovery of these frauds. This proves the accuracy of the charge of "incompetency" brought by us last week against the Admiralty, who, as we then stated to be the case, are entirely at the mercy of their own employés, the higher-division civilian clerks. The result of Mr. Martin's investigation of the victualling books of Home ships, other than the Cambridge, appears satisfactory, with the exception of leave-books, the irregularities in which are attributable to neglect on the part of the ship's police, in not communicating absences, &c., to the ship's office; but in the Cambridge a system of fraud existed which could only have been effected by a man well versed in rascality, in which he was materially aided by the non-examination of his books, though, like all clever rogues, he out-generalled himself, by extending his operations beyond the possibility of safety. We maintain that the grave scandals of last year, which so largely attracted public attention, and caused great regret throughout the service, would, in several particulars, have been prevented, had departmental audit been placed in Naval hands. The system of audit now carried out appears to have existed for generations. It lived because those in office found the duty sufficiently onerous, and therefore refrained from suggesting further investigation or improvement, as the work done was quite enough for the remuneration. With professional officers, a different method would have been introduced, and instead of the instructions regarding "leave-books" becoming a "dead-letter," strict compliance would have been maintained, by orders for their production at uncertain periods. The suggestion in paragraph 53 is most judicious, and will be viewed with general satisfaction; we trust that it is the advent of what we have so strongly advocated in these columns. It is what would have been adopted had the audit been confided to practical officers, whose knowledge of the preparation of documents, especially those for "savings of provisions," would have at once detected irregularities, and induced them to call for the books from which vouchers are compiled; "cooked accounts" would have thus been discovered, instead of the audit being "confined to an examination of figures only" (paragraph 50). Mr. Martin's coadjutor does not join in the recommendation contained in paragraphs 54, 56, and 57, Mr. Laycock's information on the subject being insufficient. It would, undoubtedly, be an injustice to officers to oblige them to take two-thirds of their allowance of fresh meat, when no advantage could accrue therefrom; while, as Mr. Martin remarks, it would be a greater expense to the Crown. We hope that his opinion will be given effect to, both with regard to officers and men, although it is not endorsed by Mr. Laycock. We may here remark that it would have been more satisfactory had Mr. Martin been assisted by a Naval officer, in addition to the Accountant-General's representative, as the points to which the latter did not assent were of such a purely practical nature as to be better dealt with by those whose experience of the service afloat gives great value to their opinions. The recommendation in paragraph 46 should be adopted in one of the forms proposed. It has always appeared anomalous that contracts should be made abroad for the supply of soft bread, when the issue of it does not exist at home, excepting in the way mentioned on board the Duke of Wellington. As bread is a service ration, it would be better to supply it from the same source as fresh meat. Were canteens allowed for the purpose, the system would only work well in ships entirely stationary. The proposal contained in paragraphs 67 and 68 appears desirable, but would entail a large amount of additional work on an already overburdened office staff, more especially if the suggestion in paragraph 64, that "all persons absent more than 24 hours should be checked" was put into practice. The official "pruning-knife" has been so largely applied of late in the reduction of the clerical staff of her Majesty's ships, that the imposition of further duties would be severely felt. Payment of wages and grant of leave are generally concurrent in home ships, therefore it would be unfair to Paymasters were their assistants obliged on these occasions to make out "liberty tickets," as the work of preparing, conducting, and concluding payments demands the services of more than one individual. Some small addition to the office staff would be necessary, were all the suggestions carried out. In this reforming age it is astounding that successive Admiralty Boards hold to the system of Departments being administered solely by a Civil Service staff; but we trust that the time is not distant when the opinions held by the most distinguished officers of the Royal Navy will be accepted and bear fruit, that Naval men will be allowed to work the official machinery of their profession, and that the posts now filled by civilians will be held by officers who possess a thorough knowledge of all branches of the service, and are the best fitted to aid in the duties for its maintenance.

We understand that the whole of the decorations conferred upon officers of the British Army for their distinguished service during the recent campaign have been forwarded by H.H. the Khedive to the Assistant Military Secretary in Egypt for distribution. Arrangements have been made for sending those for officers on home service to the Military Secretary at Headquarters, and those for officers in India to the Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief at Calcutta.

Under the heading, "Questions of the Day in India," Sir Julian Goldsmid gives us, in the Nineteenth Century, his views and opinions on the controversy raised by the proposed extension of the jurisdiction of Native Magistrates and Judges in India. Sir Julian's article is moderate in tone and temperate in expression. After saying all that he thinks can fairly be urged in favour of the proposed change, he proceeds to show that the balance of advantages is decidedly on the side of retaining the privileges of Europeans. The points at issue materially affect the position of British officers and soldiers in India.

An article in the Fortnightly Review for the current month, on "Nitro-Glycerine and Dynamite," by Colonel Majendie, C.B., R.A., contains much interesting information. Many of the generally accepted notions about the properties and effects of the more recently invented explosives are shown to be erroneous. As Chief Inspector of Explosives, Colonel Majendie has exceptional opportunities of ascertaining the peculiarities of the very interesting compounds of which he treats, and his opinions, therefore, carry much weight. It is very satisfactory to learn from him that those who dabble in the manufacture and use of nitro-glycerine explosives are more likely to serve their country by blowing themselves to atoms than to level cities with the dust, or even to destroy public buildings.

A large number of soldiers, mostly Artillery, lately returned from Egypt, have caused more surprise than admiration by the peculiarity of their attire,—we hardly like to call it uniform. They wear drab breeches, either of moleskin or corduroy, instead of the martial blue. Now, whatever may have been the reasons or pretexts for their adopting while in Egppt the colour which the Quakers have dropped at home, there does not appear to be any excuse for its retention after their return to England. Our young soldiers are not too soldier-like in their ordinary uniform, and it is not fair to exhibit them in a guise in which they look like postilions who had put on soldiers' jackets, or soldiers trying to look like jockeys. But these unbecoming garments serve a purpose for which they certainly were not intended; they give us some notion of what the Army would look like, if the proposed change from positively handsome, to comparatively invisible, and superlatively ugly, colours were carried into effect.

It is sufficiently obvious to those who are engaged in the practical training of the soldier that the hasty abolition of the rank and functions of the regimental Serjeant-Instructor of Musketry has not been a step in the right direction. The want of these most useful non-commissioned officers is now keenly felt in many regiments, especially in those corps having a large number of recruits, where much rudimentary training is necessary. There is abundant evidence, if it were needed, to show that recent musketry examinations, resulting in a liberal issue of certificates of qualification to instruct, have really done little to qualify many of those who have received them to impart instruction to others. The result of this persistent endeavour to make of the ordinary serjeant a sort of Admirable Crichton is that, when the time arrives, when a clear head is necessary, the unfortunate non-commissioned officer can only "remember a mass of things, but nothing distinctly." Small blame to him, indeed, in these days of kaleidoscopic Army change, when everything around is merely tentative, that he cannot by the cramming process be made a minor military genius in less than no time. That he can ever become an efficient substitute for the "abolished" musketry expert, whose thorough training and long, practical experience has made him master of his profession, is out of the question, and the sooner the order doing away these valuable non-commissioned officers is rescinded, the better will it be for the Army.

Major R. H. L. Anstruther, Rifle Brigade, Garrison Instructor at Aldershot, has been appointed Aide-de-Camp to Lieutenant-General Lord A. G. Russell, C.B., appointed to the Canadian command.

The members of the Metropolitan Police who have been stationed at Aldershot for years past, to assist in carrying out the operations of the C. D. Acts, are about to be withdrawn. Nowhere will the results of this retrograde step be more painfully felt than at Aldershot. The medical statistics of the camp will ere long be a humiliating study.

The Valise Equipment Committee at Aldershot have been exceedingly diligent recently. A series of exhaustive experiments were carried out on Friday and Saturday of last week, and on Monday of this week. Four non-commissioned officers and eight men, equipped with the old and new valises, have, under the instruction and supervision of the Committee, tested them in every possible and impossible way. On Saturday last, they marched out ten miles over broken ground, under the command of Colonel Stevenson, C.B., 87th Royal Irish Fusiliers, and accompanied by Serjeant-Major Vine, 26th Cameronians. And what will be the result of all these trials, tests, and experiments? Doubtless, a report,—there is no lack of such documents in the archives of the Horse Guards. But what then? Certainly, if the experiences of the past are any guide to us in these matters, simply nothing.

Dr. Cameron will, on the 22nd inst., move an address for returns stating the number of European troops paid from the revenues of India, whether serving in India or elsewhere, during the financial year 1880-81, showing separately the aggregate pay and allowances of the officers and men of each regiment or battery; of the number of Native troops paid from the revenues of India during the financial year 1880-81, showing separately the aggregate pay and allowances of the European officers, and of the rank and file of each regiment; and of the names of all Europeans, other than those included under the above two headings, who received moneys from the revenues of India during the same period, whether as salaries, pensions, absentee allowances, or gratuities, the respective amounts received by each, and the service or office in respect of which such moneys were paid.

At the annual meeting of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons on Monday last, the president, George Fleming, LL.D., Veterinary Inspector at the War Office, was presented with two portraits of himself—one, a full length, for the Royal College; the other, a half-length, for himself—a service of silver plate, value £200, and a beautiful diamond ring, as a token of sincere esteem and gratitude for his many distinguished services in veterinary literature, and in the obtainment of the Veterinary-Surgeons Act of 1881. This testimonial was subscribed for by members of the Veterinary profession, not only in this country, but also in America, India, North and South Africa, and Australia.

The committee of the Junior United Service Club have at length appointed their secretary, and they are to be congratulated on their choice. Colonel E. Lakin, late 32nd Light Infantry, the successful candidate, is an exceptionally good man, and under his careful management the "Junior" will, we feel certain, soon pull itself round again after its recent temporary difficulties.

The following paragraph from the Civil and Military Gazette tells its own tale:—"In accordance with a view expressed by General Sir Frederick Roberts, regarding the armament of Fort St. George, the Government of India has decided to reduce the number of 80 and 68-pounders from six to five, and to increase the number of the Nordenfelt machine-guns to be placed on the Flagstaff Redan from two to four." We have always strongly advocated the adoption of machine-guns for service in India, and we are glad to find that so high an authority as Sir Frederick Roberts, himself an Artilleryman, does not allow class prejudice to interfere with what he recognises as the interests of the Empire.

On Saturday, Capt. A. H. Markham and Lieut. C. G. Robinson, of the Vernon, were engaged at Chatham, on board the Conqueror, in arranging for the armament to be supplied to that vessel. The Conqueror, which has a large number of hands employed on her, will not be completed in readiness to be commissioned for some months to come.

The Frolic, double-screw composite gun-vessel, was put out of dock at Sheerness on Tuesday afternoon, and had a seven-hours' trial of her engines and machinery on Wednesday. Everything was found to answer very satisfactorily. Com. R. H. Paul, of the Medway Steam Reserve, was in command of the vessel, and a number of other officials were on board. The Frolic was docked on Thursday, and is to be brought forward for the pendant as early as possible. She is intended for service on the West Coast of Africa station.

THE SIEGE AND FALL OF SEBASTOPOL.

Sir,—The readers of the Army and Navy Gazette must be interested in the proceedings of a Committee formed to carry out proposals for the preservation of the records of those who fell in front of Sebastopol. The object of that Committee, formed under the presidency of H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, supported by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, was to induce the Government to grant an additional sum for the proper maintenance and care of the memorials in an enlarged enclosure at Cathcart's Hill, by collecting them into that central spot from eleven outlying burial-places. The Government has consented to this increased annual amount, making it £200 a year, on condition that the additional walls and removals of memorials, &c., to Cathcart's Hill, are carried out at the cost of the Committee, making the Government contribution dependent upon this work being previously done. No bodies or remains to be disturbed; the ground to be merely levelled to its natural state. For these purposes it is earnestly hoped that the requisite funds may be obtained; the sum at present received is about £900, and the sum required for the work is about £1,500. Messrs. Cox and Co., Craig's Court, are the treasurers of the fund.—I am, &c.,

W. Codrington.

The French Minister of Marine gave explanations on Wednesday to the Committee of the Chamber of Deputies upon the credit for the Tonquin expedition. He announces that orders had been given to embark on board the Annamite one battalion and three batteries of mountain artillery. The Minister stated that Hanoi was attacked on the 20th ult. by 4,000 Annamites or Chinese, who were repulsed by the French. The Minister continued as follows :—" M. de Kergaradec, the French Envoy to the Court of Hué, is the bearer of a letter from President Grévy to King Tu Duc, pointing out that his Majesty's inability to assure the security of Tonquin compels France to take measures to establish herself definitely in that region. M. de Kergaradec will recommend the King not to seek to prevent the French occupation, and to order the mandarins to remain at their posts. The King will also be invited to sign a protocol recognising the French Protectorate, and at the same time guaranteeing the integrity of the King's dominions. France would have the right to exercise control in regard to the foreign relations of Annam, to establish Customs' duties, and to impose taxes to cover her expenses. The cost of the French establishment and occupation is estimated at 30,000,000 f., and will be reimbursed to us. The French authorities will carry out the protectorate, collect taxes, and instal functionaries devoted to France. The occupation of the Delta will lead to the possession of the whole province. It will suffice for the protection of navigation to place gunboats on the upper waters of the river." The Naval division, under Commandant Rivière, on the Cochin coast, will, when reinforced, consist of the despatch-boats Pluvier and Aloutte, and the gunboats Lynx, Vipere, Fanfare, Leopard, Surprise, Carine, Massue, Yataghan, Hache, Eclair, and Trombe. The China squadron, under Admiral Meyer, comprises two ironclads, four cruisers, a despatch-boat, a gunboat, three transports, and two torpedo-boats. Several other vessels are stationed at Saigon, and altogether the French Naval force in these waters is a sufficiently formidable one.

Prince George of Wales will join the Canada early in June. Among those who will accompany the Royal midshipman are Mr. Rosslyn Wemyss, son of the late Mr. Erskine-Weymss, of Wemyss Castle, who was with him in the cruise of the Bacchante. The young Prince will also have with him as comrades :—Midshipmen Sydney R. Fremantle, son of Capt. E. R. Fremantle, C.B., R.N.; the Hon. Francis Feilding, second son of the Earl of Denbigh; Henry H. Campbell, son of Capt. J. C. Campbell, R.N., of Ardpatrick and Colston Hall, Lechlade; A. G. Allgood, son of Gen. G. Allgood, C.B.; and W. G. Ruck-Keene, son of Major G. Ruck-Keene, late 2nd Dragoon Guards. Mr. J. W. Lawless, who was in the Bacchante with the young Princes, will be once more entrusted with the Naval education of Prince George; and his superior officers will include Lieut. the Hon. Stanley Colville, lately promoted for services in Egypt, and for a short time flag-lieut. to Lord Alcester; Lieut. Bernard Currey, a recent promotion for the "three ones," and a Naval Brigade officer at Tel-el-Kebir; Lieut. Abdy, son of the Recorder of Bedford, and an officer of the flag-ship at the bombardment of Alexandria; Lieut. F. S. Pelham, late of the Royal yacht; Sub-Lieut. William C. Pakenham, son of Rear-Admiral the Hon. T. A. Pakenham; and Sub-Lieut. Julian Gaisford, son of Capt. and the late Lady Emily Gaisford.

The Admiralty have awarded to Mr. George Reid, of Deal, late of her Majesty's Coastguard, the sum of £200, as an acknowledgment for his highly valuable invention of self-acting helm-signals for preventing collisions at sea.

The officers of the old Havannah (commission 1855-59, Capt. the late Admiral Thomas Harvey) held their annual dinner at St. James's Hall, on the 9th inst. Present—Admiral C. F. Boughey (1st lieut.), Coms. Thomas A. Hull (master and pilot), John Best, W. Casberd-Boteler, and C. McLaughlin (midshipmen), and Pymrs. H. J. Ray and J. W. Hoare (assist.-pymrs.). Martin R. Smith and R. Boteler S.C.S., Esquires, were the guests.

The Trent, tender to the flagship Duncan, returned to Sheerness on Friday last, and left again for Greenwich on Monday. She was employed in duties connected with the Naval College, and returned to Sheerness on Thursday.

The Raven, screw composite gunboat, lately commissioned at Sheerness for the Australian station, was put into the steam basin at that dockyard on Wednesday afternoon to take in stores, &c., prior to running her steam trials.

Com. Annesley, of the Banterer, and Lieut. Needham, of the Orwell, were thrown off a car while driving near Galway on Monday. The former had his collarbone broken, and the latter was much shaken.

The committee appointed to go into the subject of the dress and equipment of the Army assembled on Monday at Aldershot, under the presidency of Col. Harrison, C.B., A.Q.M.Q.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—GOOD SPIRITS.—Every one has frequently experienced sudden personal changes from gaiety to gloom. The wind and weather oftentime receive the blame when a faulty digestion is alone the cause of the depression. Holloway's Pills can be honestly recommended for harmoniously attuning circulation and respiration, disturbance of the balance of which produces a sense of fulness and oppression after eating. They clean the furred tongue, and wholesomely stimulate the liver, and act as a gentle aperient to the bowels. They healthfully rouse both body and mind. Holloway's Pills are the best known antidotes for want of appetite, nausea, flatulency, heartburn, languor, depression, and that apathy so characteristic of chronic derangement of the digestion.

The year 1883 being the Fiftieth Anniversary of the foundation of the Bank, the Directors have, in order to mark the event and to evince their appreciation of the services of the Staff, presented one month's Salary to each Officer in the Establishment.

The Directors have to announce the retirement of Mr. Robert Fergusson, from the position of Joint General Manager, after a long and faithful service.

DUNCAN MACDONALD, Esq.
GEORGE FORBES MALCOLMSON, Esq.

In conformity with the provisions of the Act, it will be requisite for the Shareholders to elect Auditors and vote their remuneration. Mr. Edwin Waterhouse, of the firm of Messrs. Price, Waterhouse, and Co., and Mr. Roderick Mackay, of Messrs. R. Mackay and Co., offer themselves for re-election.

RICHARD B. WADE, } Directors.
D. MACDONALD,
ROBT. WIGRAM,

T. G. ROBINSON, } Joint General Managers.
F. CHURCHWARD,

We beg to report that we have ascertained the correctness of the Cash Balances, and of the Money at Call and Short Notice as entered in the above Balance Sheet, and have inspected the securities representing the investments of the Bank, and found them in order. We have also examined the Balance Sheet in detail with the books at the Head Office and with the certified returns from each Branch, and in our opinion such Balance Sheet is properly drawn up so as to exhibit a true and correct view of the state of the Bank's affairs as shown by such books and returns.

EDWIN WATERHOUSE, } Auditors.
ROD. MACKAY.

That the same be adopted and printed for the use of the Proprietors.

That Sir Sibbald D. Scott, Bart., Duncan Macdonald, Esq., and George Forbes Malcolmson, Esq., be re-elected Directors of the Bank.

On the motion of Mr. J. T. Belk, seconded by the Rev. Sir Emilius Bayley—

That this Meeting of the Shareholders of the National Provincial Bank of England, Limited, held in the fiftieth year of the Bank's existence, desires to record its appreciation of the great services rendered by the Board of Directors—services which this Meeting feels have conduced materially to the Bank's sound and prosperous condition. As some recognition of these facts, this Meeting begs the Directors' acceptance of £5,000, and now votes that sum for the purpose. (An Extraordinary General Meeting of the Proprietors will be held on June 4, 1883, to give effect to this Resolution.)

That Mr. Edwin Waterhouse and Mr. Roderick Mackay be reappointed Auditors of the Bank, and that they be paid four hundred guineas for their services during the past year.

That the best thanks of the Proprietors be presented to the Directors for their very successful management of the affairs of the Bank.

That the best thanks of the Proprietors be given to the General Managers, and to the Branch Managers and other Officers of the Bank, for their efficient services.

That the best thanks of the Meeting be presented to the Chairman, for his able conduct in the Chair.
